Britain Asks U.S. Films Made There Carry Anglo-American Identification

British producers have asked American companies making films in Britain to affix to their pictures the identifying title: This is a British-American co-production.

The Americans, while not taking any rigid position on the question, take the view that such a prominent identification was likely to hurt the chances of these pictures in the United States.

In part, the British request is motivated by the desire to spotlight activity in the British studios. In part, too, it's designed to eliminate the American practice of sending coproductions, which rate as British quota films, into some countries as British pix and into others under the American flag.

Some British producers, notably the Rank Organization, have long been unhappy seeing the limited British quota in certain countries in part taken up by coproductions which, under a tightened definition, might not rate as purely "British." One of the advantages the Americans have is that their earnings on such pictures can be remitted to the States, whereas the British producer must remit everything to Britain.

American executives admit that, eventually, as a bargaining point, they may have to affix the coproduction label. At the same time, they argue that it'd definitely be detrimental to the potential in the U.S. mart. "And that's where the British want to make a dent, isn't it?" asked a foreign exec of one of the companies. Past experience has shown that films identified as British tend to do less than British pix which can be exhibited without that label.

Washington, Sept. 30.

National Symphony Orchestra, which is set for a South American tour next spring on State Dept. subsidy, has gone through the formality of presenting President Eisenhower with a cuffo box for the new season—with little hope that he will use it.

Although the previous White House tenant, Harry S. Truman, was a music lover who heard the symphony often in Constitution Hall (and aided b.o. receipts by bringing in tourists wanting a look at him), President Eisenhower has attended only one concert in six years in office.

Raise Issue Of U.S. Pix in Italy At 'Red' Theatres

American film companies operating abroad have never refused and for the moment do not intend to refuse to serve any theatre because its ownership may be Communist, a Motion Picture Export Assn. spokesman said this week.

He added that the lines of political affiliation were not very clearly drawn in many places, "and, in any case, it'd be a tremendous job to do the checking."

Question has arisen in connection with an issue in Italy where ANICA, the Italo producer-distrib organization, complained that U.S. companies were selling to Communist-dominated "cultural club" theatres in central-northern Italy.

VARIETY's Rome bureau reports that Yank members of MPEA in Italy have indicated they'd fight to prevent supply of U.S. product

Japanese-Western Revue Blends Chinese Cha Cha With R&R in Bombay Bow

Bombay, Sept. 30.

Carroll Wallace, an American male who appears on stage in the guise of a Sophie Tuckerish femme, is presenting here the first Japanese-Western revue to visit India. The "Carroll Wallace Follies" blend Oriental talent and (largely) Occidental music in a slick, fast-paced two-hour variety show.

Performance ranges all the way from Awa Odori Nipponese costume dance to rock 'n' roll, and from Chinese cha cha cha "Sion Sion Toi Toi" to "Ol' Man River." Artists, including the versatile Hayakawas (who provide the hot jazz band which plays on stage throughout the show), are all Japanese except for Filipino Tony Estrada and Singapore's June Mok, both vocalists, and, of course, Wallace himself.

IT COULDN'T HAPPEN TO A RICHER GUY

Cleveland, Sept. 30.

Bob Hope kissed $100,000 goodbye when he invested it in Hope Metal Products Inc., of Cleveland, owned by his brother Ivor H. Hope. Assets of company, which filed an involuntary bankruptcy action, were sold Monday (29) at public auction.

Ivor listed about 234 creditors, assets of $90,798, mostly in equipment, and liabilities at $221,663. Bob Hope advanced his brother 100G's three years ago to help the ailing firm but could not help it from sinking.

NAMES AS SHILLS FOR HOTEL ROOMS

By LARY SOLLOWAY

Miami Beach, Sept. 30.

Miami Beach hotelmen, currently engaged in their annual bidding battle for name attractions to fill out strongest possible lures for their cafes this winter, had their competitive headache compounded this week. This stems from disclosure that Morris Lansburgh and his associates, operators of six large oceanfront inns, are in the process of setting up a series of one-nighters featuring the same top acts in the Deauville Hotel convention-auditorium on a forguests-only policy, as a promotional gimmick to spark an upcoming national big-space ad campaign to draw clientele.

The gimmick, obviously patterned on the Concord-Grossinger's format in the Catskills, will be a costly one however, and not only for the Lansburgh group. Some rival hoteliers feel there will follow an inevitable revision of performer thinking in terms of payoffs for the standard one and two-week bookings.

According to Lansburgh, the sum of $650,000 has been earmarked to budget the one-nighter plan. It is based on a $1-$1.50 per room charge-off on the overall rates for guests at the Deauville, Sans Souci, Casablanca, Sherry Frontenac, Versailles and Crown hotels, for there will be no liquor or food served, with the auditorium seating arranged theatre style to allow for the 4,000-odd audiences expected

Phono Famine Stymies Stereo

Both here and abroad, the stereo bally is having a strong impact on the consumer level despite the lack of suitable phonograph machines on the market. At the present time, the phonograph manufacturing end is the big bottleneck in the stereo picture, but it's expected that the phono distribution channels will be flowing at full volume in a few weeks.

RCA, which is accenting stereo heavily this fall, sparked its fall selling campaign with a meeting for its phono and disk dealers at the Barbizon-Plaza Hotel, N. Y., Monday (29), night. George Marek, RCA Victor disk v.p. and general manager, and other execs from the phono division and the Bruno distribution company, made strong pitches to point up the dollar potential in the new stereo biz.

Marek, who left for Japan by way of the Coast immediately after the meeting, said that stereo has caused a major stir in foreign disk circles abroad as well. He has re-

The Superior French

Quote John Huston on the subject of film censorship:

"I don't believe in any censorship except that of good taste, and that holds true of Hollywood as much as for its audience.

"I very much uphold the idea of the French theatre where, if an audience is offended by a play, they just tear up the seats."

ASCAP Yielding 'Secrets' to BMI In Cleffer Suit

Broadcast Music Inc. now has a clear and unchallenged right to examine the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers' performance cards. The final greenlight was given in N. Y. Federal Court yesterday (Tues.) before Judge Gregory Noonan when ASCAP attorneys consented, without argument, to a BMI motion ordering ASCAP to make its records available.

At the same time, BMI agreed to make comparable information from its files available to the 33 ASCAP songwriters who are the plaintiffs in the $150,000,000 antitrust suit against BMI and the major broadcast networks.

The move to examine the 220,000 ASCAP cards, on which the performance history of tunes in the ASCAP repertory is recorded, has been the subject of a long, hard-fought argument between ASCAP and BMI attorneys. ASCAP has claimed that to give BMI its cards would be to disclose private busi-

BRITAIN EXTENDING OPERA TO PROVINCES

London, Sept. 30.

London Coliseum will mount an opera season lasting from next April through to December, this will be presented by the Sadler's Wells Opera Co. under a new plan designed to provide a better basis for touring opera and also a more stable future for the Wells.

The scheme calls for the existing company to be enlarged to comprise two choruses, two orchestras, two opera ballets and a pool of principal singers. The plan will ensure that the provinces get between 25 and 30 weeks of opera during the year, and also that the two companies get a full year's employment.

The fullscale television vs. newspaper media war, which has been threatened over the years, has finally erupted over the McCann-Erickson decision to spend most of the Buick advertising budget in television introducing the 1959 models.

The television and newspaper battles are both old and new in that both mediums fight for advertising dollars. But, never has the warfare broken open over a decision by a manufacturer and an agency to spend their allocation in a particular manner. First signs of the current battle broke out last summer when Buick announced that it was cutting its newspaper listing drastically. It was assumed by this, that the automobile film was going to heavily accent television.

While the sparks flew, the fire wasn't actually lit until this week and all because of two reports, one titled "Buick Advertising & Merchandising Report No. 2" and a second study, a cost comparison report completed by McCann-Erickson itself.

McCann-Erickson, in attempting to determine how to get the most out of its advertising dollar, retained Advertest Research to complete a media study. The Advertest report showed that 59% of Buick shoppers said tv advertising stood out most strongly in their minds, as opposed to 12% for newspapers and 29% for magazines. The study struck another blow at newspaper

U.S. Correspondents' Fast Turnover in USSR; TV Blasts Vs. Yanks

By IRVING R. LEVINE
(Moscow correspondent, NBC)

Moscow, Sept. 30.

The radio and press corps in Moscow, a tight little island of 14 Americans, has undergone a sudden change in faces because of transfers and expulsions. Various viruses have also added to the normal hazards of news coverage in the Soviet capital.

"Stringer" correspondents for the major networks have left Moscow for new assignments. Whitman Bassow, United Press correspondent who also had done occasional broadcasts for ABC, departed to accept a year's fellowship at the Council on Foreign Relations in New York. B. J. Cutler, correspondent for the N.Y. Herald Tribune, received a transfer to Paris as reward for his Moscow services; Cutler had substituted for Daniel Schorr and Paul Niven, CBS, during their absences from Russia. Roy Essoyan, able Associated Press reporter, was expelled by the Russians (the fifth American correspondent ordered out in the past

Everything From Kabuki to Bunraku Poised For U.S. As Race Starts To Cash In On Yanks' Yen For Jap Acts

By DAVE JAMPEL

Tokyo, Sept. 30.

Traffic of Japanese entertainers to the U. S. during the next several years may be heavy enough to ease Japan's problem of overpopulation. In various stages of negotiation are plans to transplant local performers to American night clubs, tv, concert arenas, theatre circuits, Broadway and the Met. These would include stylists from clarinetists to chorus girls to kabuki actors, from rockabilly to bunraku.

During the past year a number of U. S. show biz reps have made the pilgrimage to Japan to comb for talent. With American tv having persistent hunger pangs and other mass entertainment media only slightly less zealous in their appetites, the Imperial Hotel dining room is getting the overflow from Lindy's and the Brown Derby.

The so-called "Japan Room" in the U. S. is no figment of a press agent's pipe dream. It is real. "Sayonara" was boffo b.o. and three productions with Oriental backgrounds are skedded for Broadway this season. The race is on.

Latest to be revealed as in the Oriental act is Sol Hurok. If all goes according to plan, the U. S. will see its first full-scale kabuki troupe in April, 1960. Preceding that huge undertaking on Hurok's Japan agenda is a project of equally titanic proportions. Starting next August, he will tour a company of 100 Osaka Shochiku Kageki (OSK) girls plus a staff of 20 around a circuit of U. S. theatres.

Brimming with confidence over the possibilities of these tours is

ITALY TO MARK 100TH ANNI OF DUSE'S BIRTH

Rome, Sept. 23.

A series of celebrations have been set to mark the 100th anniversary of Eleonora Duse's birth, next Oct. 3. Rome's ACT Theatre Club is planning a special "Images and Times of Eleeonora Duse" evening, to be directed by Luchino Visconti and featuring such vet actors as Tullio Carminati, Emma Gramatica, Rina Morelli, Paolo Stoppa, Gino Cervi, Andreina Pagnavi, Vittorio Gassmann and Rosella Falk.

A special scene is also slated for Luise Rainer, while among others present at the event will be designer Gordon Craig, a Duse contemporary. Other Duse celebrations will be held at Milan, in the Scala Theatre's Theatrical Museum; at Asolo, where the famed actress is buried; and at Vigevano, where she was born.

Must Pay Admish Taxes Pronto On Advance Sales

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

The Government has just come out with an admission tax ruling that will cause a profound change in procedures previously followed in the theatre.

It is the Government's position, set forth in Ruling No. 366 of the 1958 series, that when tickets are sold for a future performance, the admission tax is payable immediately. The general practice has been for boxoffice treasurers to retain funds on advance sales until the date of the performance and release those funds to the producer on that date (after deducting the percentage for the theatre rental). The admission tax has been paid as if the tickets were sold on the date of the performance.

Obviously, under this new ruling the tax will have to be paid much earlier. That will affect the whole relationship between the handling and timing of the treasurer's funds and the turning over of the tax money to the Government and the remaining money to the producer.

Spiros Skouras, Singer

Chicago, Sept. 30.

It's old hat for exotics to be tagged with a cute variation of a celeb's name. Now comes a warbler from Greece with the adopted name of Spiros Skouras.

No relation to the 20th-Fox topper who spells it Spyros, the singer, making his U. S. bow in the current Chi Blue Angel revue, simply dropped the first three letters (kou) from his real surname.

Frankfurt, Sept. 30.

Following the two-day court-martial in Kaiserslautern, Germany, of Major Leonard V. S. Army officer hit him at the Baumholder Officers' Club last Aug. 2.

Although previous to the court-martial Bailey completely denied touching Rogers, in court he admitted striking him with his hands on head and body. It is now first a matter of seeking civil recovery, in the local civil courts, for the medical damages, according to the Negro emcee-entertainer's attorney in Frankfurt. Capital Circuit

By LES AND LIZ CARPENTER

Washington, Sept. 30.

Commissioner John S. Cross of the Federal Communications Commission took note of the new season of tv programs with this observation:

"It's all familiar—girls with 38 sweaters and men with 45 guns!"

(The gag is also around FCC that NBC means "Nothing But Cowboys.")

Latest local wheeze is that Sherman Adams has selected his next position. They say he'll open a gift shop.

Meade Alcorn, chairman of the Republican National Committee, reluctantly accepted an invitation to appear on Dave Garroway's tv show the morning after Sherman Adams quit.

Alcorn's reluctance was the early hour of the program. But the NBC contact man offered to send a chauffeured limousine for Alcorn to carry him from home to studio.

Well before 8, the GOP VIP was given a comfortable ride in the rented Cadillac to the ABC studio.

"There's some mistake," Alcorn was told at ABC. "We don't carry Dave Garroway. You want NBC."

The chauffeur drove Alcorn to the CBS studio. Another mistake was noted.

"I'll make it this time," announced the driver.

And Alcorn explained later: "I walked in NBC with no time to spare. They told me I was on the air."

Later, in a National Press Club speech, Alcorn pooh-poohed rampant prophecies that the Democrats will clobber his party this November.

It reminded Alcorn, he said, of the time a medic told W. C. Fields that his difficulty with hearing was caused by his drinking.

"The hell with it," Fields responded, according to Alcorn. "I like what I'm tasting better than what I'm hearing!"

And, Alcorn said, he likes what he's seeing in his cross-country tours better than what he is hearing.

In the same speech, Alcorn became ,perhaps, the only GOP national chairman who will be quoted on the Broadway stage.

Playwright Howard Teichmann, whose political satire, "The Girls in 509," was trying out at the National Theatre at the time, was sitting in the audience when Alcorn declared: "We've got to get the warm bodies to the polls!"

"That's it," exclaimed Teichmann, reaching for a pencil.

He said that as soon as he could get to his trypewriter, he intended

'Uncle Tom's' Still Yank Reply To Confederates!

Worldwide distribution rights to the 1927 Universal Pictures production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" have been acquired by Colorama Features Inc. (Jules Weill and Carroll Puciato) which has purchased the negative from Universal.

Raymond Massey has recorded the narration and the new soundtrack also includes a full chorus and a musical score by the late Erno Rappee. Introduction with Massey has been filmed on location in Litchfield, Conn., birthplace of Harriet Beecher Stowe, who wrote the book over 100 years ago. Its publication greatly fired the anger of the North over the treatment of the slaves in the South.

Several other versions of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" were made in Hollywood prior to 1927. Major companies as a rule are reluctant to sell negative rights to their pictures to other distribution outfits in the theatrical field. Audie Murphy, star of John Huston's "Red Badge of Courage," at one time offered Metro $500,000 for the negative rights to the film, which was considered a flop. Yet Metro refused.

ITALO RAI-TV GETS NOD ON OLYMPICS

Rome, Sept. 30.

The International Olympic Games Committee has officially granted RAI-TV, the Italian television network, permission to telecast the 1960 Rome Olympic Games over the national telenetwork.

Word of this decision is said to have been revealed to RAI-TV this week by Otto Mayer, Swiss Chancellor of the Comite International Olympique. Permission was said granted in view of the more than probable seating shortage at the upcoming local games. Feeling was that telecasting of games in this country would therefore not affect ticket sales to events.

KIRK DOUGLAS: ACTOR-TYCOON

Allied to Ponder 'Beyond Divorce'

Taking note of the agitation for a modification of the consent decree, Allied States Assn. last week put a thorough review of the decree on the agenda of its Chicago convention which is skedded Oct. 13-15. Three topics will be discussed:

(1) Divorcement. If the companies were to be allowed to re-acquire theatres, what type of situations would they be—regular or drive-ins? "In other words, what class of exhibitors will bear the brunt of this new competition?"

Also, "would the film companies as an incidence of their ownership of theatres be able to revive the favoritism accorded the affiliates and the discriminations practiced against the independents before divorcement?"

Is there any basis for supposing that, in getting back theatres, the companies would step up output, and how many dirve-ins would be in business today had it not been for the "standstill agreement" which prevented the majors and the affiliated circuits from expanding into the theatre field for so many years?

(2) Block-Booking. Distinction must be made between compulsory and voluntary block booking, Allied held. Question is "To what extent, if at all, do the decrees prevent the voluntary block-booking of pictures? Are exhibitors really in favor of compulsory block-booking and, again, would block-booking actually increase Hollywood's output?

(3) Production of Pictures by Divorced Circuits. Allied, along with others, petitioned the Department of Justice to permit this. The film companies, says Allied, were in opposition "and their opposition blocked the attempt to get more pictures to relieve the serious shortage." Allied still feels that any permission for the ex-affiliates to produce must be accompanied by adequate safeguards to "prevent reoccurrence of monopolistic practices."

Reviewing the various claims pro and con decree revision, the Allied statement said exhibitors had to determine the validity of the various arguments for themselves. Allied's own position is that the decree isn't responsible for the dwindling product supply. It is convinced that "the solution of their (the exhibitors) most acute problems depends not upon annulling the decrees but in enforcing them."

While Theatre Owners of America is pressing for modification of the decree, Allied has accused the Department of Justice of laxity in enforcing it.

RANK BUYS ADVENTURE YARN OF VANCOUVERITE

Vancouver, Sept. 30.

J. Arthur Rank organization in Britain has purchased film rights to "Afghan Adventure" an autobiographical novel published this month by Robert Hale Ltd. So reveals the author, John Fox, longtime British army major now resident in Vancouver. Book, his first, relates chase of arms thieves and is attested as to veracity by Superintendent Ellis of Scotland Yard. Film is expected to start production early in 1959.

"Afghan" sequel is being readied by publishers, and is also in prospect for Rank lensing, per Fox. Book retails at $3.75 in Canada.

Fortuna's 'Saintly Gun'

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Fortuna Films, an indie theatrical film company headed by Raoul and Betty Pagel, has bought "The Saintly Gun," screenplay by Curtis Kenyon.

Script is based on the teleplay, "The Other Side of the Coin," on which Kenyon collabbed with Jerry Sackheim, and which was seen on tv on "Theatre Guild."

Antitrust Chief To TOA Convention; Studios Woodshed-Shy Re Theatres

By FRED HIFT

Exhibitors, large numbers of them, appear determined to find a way to have the consent decree eased as a means of stimulating production in Hollywood. Theatre Owners of America, at its convention in Miami next month, will make a concerted effort to hit on a realistic approach that will allow it to make that pitch either with the Dept. of Justice or with the responsible courts.

Victor R. Hanson, assistant attorney general and head of the Justice Dept's antitrust division, has agreed to appear at the convention to meet with TOA execs for a discussion of the overall situation. He has indicated to TOA his eagerness to convey the government view to the theatres, and in turn lend an ear to the exhibitor's complaints.

What TOA would like to see done is the easing of the decree to allow the ex-affiliated circuits to enter production with pre-emptive rights. National Theatres was turned down when it made that pitch to Washington. What TOA would like to see happen, too, is for the law to be eased so that the producers can regain some of their theatres. This, runs to TOA argument, would recreate the conditions of yesteryear, i.e. the incentive for the producers to turn out volume product.

The irony of the situation is that the producer-distributors, now well adjusted to divorcement (except for Loew's), show generally little enthusiasm for their return to exhibition. If they were as successful as they were in the 30's and 40's the reason partly lay in the very practices which eventually led them into court. There is a good deal of doubt whether, under today's conditions, and with suspicious lawyers forever looking over their shoulders, the major producer-distributors now would again make a go of their houses; or, for that matter, whether the conditions of the market are such that (1), they would want to saddle themselves with the overhead and (2), it would create the automatic need for more product.

Said one of the majors' sales toppers in N.Y. last week: "Let them lobby for changed conditions in the area of runs and clearances. That's where we really get hit over the head. There is no protection any more. Our pictures are going through too fast. It's a case of now you see them and now you don't, and you'll never see 'em again either."

An exhibitor said the current conditions were unbearable "because we are in a seller's market. They can do anything they want to us that way." It's pointed out, however, that this condition isn't precisely one which the majors would deplore, if indeed it exists to such an extent; nor are they likely to go for drastic measures designed to deprive them of the advantage.

Irony of the situation at the moment is that TOA has no legitimate grounds on which to attack the issue in the courts, which have been appointed to stand guard over the decree. Furthermore, the position of Allied, which has accused the Justice Dept. of laxity in its enforcement of the decree, isn't making TOA's approach any easier.

Terry Moore's Reasons

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Terry Moore, offered the lead in "Beat Generation" at Metro, turned it down because (1) she didn't like the script; (2) she felt the part was unimportant; (3) she felt the subject matter was too sordid.

Picture deals with a femme who is raped and doesn't know if the father of her unborn child is the rapist or her husband. Abortion is also part of the story.

New Barjul Plots 19 Exploiteers

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Newly-formed Barjul International Pictures has blueprinted a slate of at least 19 features for filming and/or release through end of 1959.

Headed by Emanuel Darling, Jerold Zukor and David Frank, all currently in N. Y. setting up playdates for outfit's first package—"Attack of the Jungle Women" and "A Time to Kill"—Barjul already has bought six screenplays, optioned five others and is dickering for two additional scripts.

In addition to initial combo ready for release, company is now prepping a second and just closed deal with producer Willard Kirkham for another package, "Monster Assassin" and "Test Tube Woman." Barjul's own output will be budgeted at $100,000 or under, and in deals made with indie company will guarantee return of 80% of negative costs within 24 months in exchange for participation and distribution fee.

In addition to producing and distributing, company will doctor pix which have run into financial stress, completing necessary shooting, editing, etc., in return for distrib fee, participation and first recoup of its production costs. Firm also will guarantee payment of all outstanding bills within 24-month period on uncompleted films it readies for release.

Company's second package release will be "Yambao," $300,000 film made in Mexico by Ruben Calderon, which Barjul has augmented and reedited, and "Teenage Hell," begun by Dale Ireland as "Bucks and Bruises" but which ran into union and coin trouble. Combo goes out in November.

Loeb of Wall St. Behind Wrather 'Big Studio Buy'

John Loeb, of the Carl M. Loeb, Rhoades Co., Wall Street investment house, is Jack Wrather's backer in the oilman-showman's expanding show biz acquisitions. Accent has been largely in television although the vidpix operations are flexible for theatre exhibition purposes, when and if.

Loeb-Wrather have their sights on a major Hollywood studio with an eye both to theatrical and television production. It would be one of the biggest acquisitions, moneywise, if it goes through, involving considerable valuable realestate.

Guinness Making Habit Of Doubling in Brass; Writer-Star of 'Noah'

Alec Guinness, who wrote the screen play (his first) for "The Horse's Mouth" (based on Joyce Cary's novel) and also stars in the film, is undertaking another dual assignment. He is currently working on the screenplay of "Noah" and is tailoring the title role of the biblical character for his own talents. The film will be based on a play by Andre Obe.

This was disclosed by Ronald Neame, who directed "Horse's Mouth." Neame, Guinness and producer John Bryan, who operate under the corporate title of Knightsbridge Films, will again join forces for the production of "Noah," which Neame envisions as a spectacular that will cost about $2,500,000.

The trio is hopeful of obtaining financial support for the new project from United Artists, which provided the coin for the production of "The Horse's Mouth." One of the objects of Neame's visit to New York last week was to open preliminary talks with UA. Present plans are to begin filming "Noah" in England in April.

Also expected to be associated with "Noah" is Robert W. Dowling, president of City Investing Co. Dowling owns the rights to the play, which was acquired when he was associated with the late Alexander Korda. In addition, a Dowling-Guinness firm, Dowling-Lustre, holds Guinness' contract, which was obtained from Korda's estate. Dowling accompanied Neame back to London over the weekend to hold talks with Guinness and Bryan on the production of "Noah."

Johnston in Moscow

With Eric Johnston in Moscow two weeks, negotiating a film deal with the Russians, the only news received from his party is that they're screening Soviet films to see which ones might be of interest to American audiences.

The international tension over Quemoy and Matsu hasn't made Johnston's task any easier, film men figure.

Japan's Threat Of Import Shutout

The Japanese government, seeking to force the American film companies into line, has notified them that, until they abide by the type of franchise agreement outlined by Tokyo authorities, the issuance of import licenses for next year will be suspended.

The only distribs not affected by the edict are Universal and Columbia, which already have the type of deals approved by the Japanese. United Artists also has been reported as falling into line.

Main requirement under the franchise contracts demanded by the Japanese is that print and other costs be charged to New York rather than to the local subsidiary. In other words, more charges would be levelled against remittable coin.

The companies so far have not decided what to do, though it appears inevitable that, in the long run, they will comply. Irving Maas, MPEA rep in the Far East, has been instructed to hold further talks with the Japanese government on the question. Under the new film law, the Japanese also have said they will not issue any licenses after 1960 to any company which does not actually maintain a distribution organization in Japan.

Earlier this year 20th-Fox had a man—Roy Kimmerle—in Tokyo, huddling with the Japanese on a new franchise deal. When he returned, 20th submitted such a deal to Tokyo, but was turned down, the argument being that it didn't go far enough.

Warwick Wants Palance

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Jack Palance is being paged to star in "African Bush Adventure," Warwick Productions film due to roll after the first of the year in Africa.

Palance is the star of Warwick's unreleased "The Man Inside," shot last spring in England, France and Italy.

'VIKINGS' A STUDY IN HOW-TO-DO-IT

It's not so tough to make a million dollars in show business; just make a picture like "The Vikings." And let it be called a "Norse Opera" in the New York Times)—it still means a mint for the filmaker, who happens to be Kirk Douglas, also one of the stars.

Douglas' deal with financier-distributor United Artists called for no salary, but 60% of the profits.

"Vikings" was brought in at a cost of $3,500,000 which, fretfully enough, was $1,000,000 over the originally-blueprinted budget. The excess might have been more except that bankrolling UA execs insisted on some rewriting that resulted in the elimination of some costly location shooting.

Foresee $7-Mil Domestic

The domestic (United States and Canadian) rental total is now figured at $7,000,000. This means (considering the cost of distribution, prints, advertising, etc.) that the break-even point already is reached and the foreign market net is all profit.

The overseas take is indicated at another $7,000,000. Subtract from this an approximate 40% as distribution fee, or $2,800,000, plus another $500,000 for the "sell" promotion. This leaves a net profit of $3,700,000. Douglas' cut is $2,200,000. The tax bite doubtless will be severe but there are certain capital gains advantages in being "incorporated," which is for sure.

If he wasn't one before, actor Douglas is now a millionaire.

"Vikings" meanwhile provides some mightful estimates of where the money goes for a picture of this type. For example (remember, estimates): Tony Curtis, $150,000; Janel Leigh, $60,000; Ernest Borgnine, $60,000; others in the cast combined, $150,000; story property, $30,000; screenplay, $40,000; producer (Jerry Bresler), $40,000; director (Richard Fleischer), $75,000; construction of replicas of three Viking ships, $200,000; construction of Vikings village, $100,000.

These were the major items at the outset. The balance, which brings the total up to $3,500,000, came in various ways, including: Cameraman (Jack Cardiff) and crew, all other technicians, studio rental in Munich, costumes, transportation and "care and feeding" of personnel (an unusually big item in view of the number of persons employed from the States, England and Germany and quartered on the various location sites, such as the Norwegian fjords), editing, scoring, processing, etc.).

'Glory' On The Side

Kirk Douglas found some "at liberty" time in the course of making "The Vikings" and kept himself beaucoup capital gains-fully employed.

Between takes of "Vikings" the producer-star turned out "Paths of Glory" and this brought him a payoff of $300,000.

It's understood his deal with Hecht-Hill-Lancaster anent one of the starring roles in "Devil's Disciple" provides him with a flat $350,000.

DISNEY CONCEIVING FIVE IN BIG-MONEY RANGE

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Distribution plans for five top-budget features, biggest, program of Walt Disney product in indie's history, are being worked out in series of meetings starting here yesterday by Buena Vista, releasing arm of company.

BV prexy Leo F. Samuels brought his homeoffice exec staff from N. Y. to huddle with Disney prexy Roy Disney and other studio toppers on films to be released through next summer. Lineup includes "Sleeping Beauty," "$6,000,000 Technirama cartoon; "Tonka," "Darby O'Gill and the Little People," "The Shaggy Dog" and "Third Man on the Mountain."

70 Permits, Any Others Bonuses, Foreseen as Future French Position

There appears a strong possibility that, in the next Franco-American film accord, the French will refuse to issue more than 70 import licenses. The remainder will be handed out in the form of "bonus" permits, handed to American companies which have performed certain services for the French film industry, and with no number specified.

This word from Paris last week credits Jacques Flaud, head of the Centre National de la Cinematography, as irked by current American maneuvres re the license division. Motion Picture Export Assn. is trying to change Flaud's mind re the distribution of 40 licenses.

Under the last accord, it was agreed that for the two years ending in June, 1959, the annual total of licenses handed to the majors should be 110. However, for the second year, Flaud reserved to himself the right to allocate 40 of the 110 licenses on the basis of who had done what for the French films. To this MPEA reluctantly agreed. It is now trying hard to get Flaud to abandon the plan.

To avoid a repetition, Flaud reportedly is planning to commit himself to 70 permits only for 1959-60. He has the additional argument that neither Republic nor RKO are any longer effectively in distribution in France. Republic is out altogether, and RKO, which is not producing, is released by the Rank Organization. In effect, the proposed French arrangement would leave in the cold only a couple of the majors—like Universal and Paramount—who aren't active in production abroad.

On the other hand, it's questionable that Flaud would specify how many bonus permits he'd be willing to hand out under such a deal. Flaud has felt for some time that too many American films are being flooded into Europe, and he has been one of the vocal advocates of a European Common Market for films, which would automatically reduce the influx of Hollywood product. MPEA, so far, has taken the position that 110 permits is the minimum required for its member companies to keep their organizations operating in France. Realization of the Flaud plan could mean a push in the direction of consolidation, which some feel is inevitable in Europe anyway.

Standouts: 1, 2, 3

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Jerry Wald Productions is entering the fields of paperback books, disks and sheet music via formation of three subsidiaries.

Companies, named Standout Books, Standout Records, Standout Music, will function in association with any films Wald might produce on solely indie basis.

Skeptic Brandt Now Sees Par As Theatre-Aimed

Harry Brandt states he's convinced that Paramount is going ahead with its theatrical production at a strong pace. And he adds an apology to the film company.

The New York circuit owner acknowledged that he suspected Par was on the verge of sluffing off the theatrical business, so interpreting its sale of the library to television and its apparent segue into home toll. (Brandt was not alone; many others in the industry had thoughts anent the possibility of Par's abandonment of theatre service.)

But Brandt now admits, having been given chapter and verse on Par's for-theatres production, that this outfit is staying in the theatrical field—more so than ever. And as a result, he adds, he's encouraged to invest more in updating his theatres and promoting the pictures he books.

This is an aside to the 100 worldwide meetings which Par has

National Broods On Stageshows

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

John B. Bertero, new president of National Theatres, also will continue "for foreseeable future" his former duties as president of Fox West Coast Theatres, National's subsid. New title is assumed tomorrow (Wed.).

Under new administration, goal is to become "a growth organization." This can be accomplished, Bertero said, only by program of diversification in allied fields entertainment, upon which chain already embarked. National is exploring possibility of augmenting film exhibition with stage shows, plans calling for top names to tour key houses.

For "growth," it's essential for National to add to its earnings by going into television, which has already started via acquisition of WDAF (AM-TV) of Kansas City and proposed acquisition of National Television Associates. Other possible buys are pending according to Charles L. Glett, v.p. in charge of tv operations.

Spencer Leve, new v.p. of theatre operations reports deal closed with Warner Bros. to open "Auntie Mame" at Chinese Theatre, Hollywood, around Christmas.

It will replace "Windjammer," which in nine situations domestic and foreign, has to date grossed $2,500,000.

Anthony Franciosa and wife Shelley Winters came in on the United States yesterday (Tues.). Had been in Rome where the actor starred with Ava Gardner in "Naked Maja," Titanus film.

National Boxoffice Survey

Biz Still Uneven; 'Cat' Again Champ, 'Yankees' 2d, 'Pacific' 3d, 'Defiant' 4th, 'Gigi' 5th

Business at first-runs is holding uneven in current session around country. While the first four biggest pictures will reap more than $1,000,000 total gross, showing dip sharply after that; which means exhibitors are having their usual pre-October b.o. woes this stanza. Fresh product, too, is not measuring up well for the most part.

Again "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) is finishing in first spot, a position it has held for a whole month. "Damn Yankees" (WB), out for the most part.

Again "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) is finishing in first spot, a position it has held for a whole month. "Damn Yankees" (WB), out for first time to any extent this week, is a strong second-place winner and pressing "Cat" for top laurels.

"South Pacific" (20th) is capturing third money while "Defiant Ones" (UA) moves up to fourth place by dint of five key city dates. "Gigi" (M-G), high on the list recently, is finishing fifth. "Me and Colonel" (Col), fourth last round, is winding up sixth.

"Big Country" (UA), which was sixth a week ago, is taking seventh spot. "Around World in 80 Days" (UA) is capturing eighth place. "Windjammer" (NT) is winding up in ninth position.

"Harry Black and Tiger" (20th), a newie, is finishing 10th despite considerable coin racked up on some 15 playdates in keys covered by VARIETY. "Search For Paradise" (Cinerama) is taking 11th place while "La Parisienne" (UA) rounds out the Top 12 list. "Matchmaker" (Par), "Raw Wind in Eden" (U) and "Reluctant Debutante" (M-G) are the runner-up films in that order.

"Wind Across Everglades" (WB) is somewhat disappointing on its three dates this stanza. "Camp on Blood Island" (Col), also new, looks good in two spots.

"South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama) landed a great take on opening week in Chi. Pic continues okay in N.Y. on longrun. "Never Love Stranger" (AA), average in K.C., is rated smash in Detroit. "Kathy-O" (U) looms okay in St. Louis.

"Dunkirk" (M-G), fairly new, shapes mild to dull currently. "God Created Woman" (Kings), good in Washington, looks nice in K.C. "Night Heaven Fell," also from Kingsley, is rated torrid in Boston, sock in Denver, okay in L.A. and good in Philly.

"Indiscreet" (WB), long high on the list, is big in Louisville, dandy in L.A. and good in Toronto.

"Hunters" (20th) shapes good in Toronto. "Bridge on River Kwai" (Col) looms nice in N.Y. and Washington.

"The Return of Jack the Ripper" will follow "Jail Break" for Milner Bros. Co-production deal with British Charles Deane for pair of Guy Madison starrers, "Sea Fury" and "Brigand's Gold," called off by Helen Ainsworth due to press of new Madison telepix series at Hal Roach

By coincidence, Warner Bros. currently is filming Max Reinhardt's "The Miracle," which it bought back in 1927, coincidentally with the upcoming Houghton Mifflin publication of Lady Diana Cooper's memoirs, "The Rainbow Comes and Goes." Book has already been published in England, has been serialized in part in Ladies Home Journal. Lady Cooper played the Virgin in the original legit production in the mid-1920s.

Film fan mags are pleasantly surprised at the solid sales despite the alleged downbeat of the picture business. Their analysis is that, whether on theatre or home-screen, pix are still beaucoup popular.

'HERCULES' HITS WEST COAST

Joe Levine of Boston Now Favors Premieres There

Boston, Sept. 30.

Joseph E. Levine, prexy Embassy Pictures Corp., flew to Hollywood Thursday (25) to set the American premiere of his new Italian film acquisition, "Hercules." Color spectacle in anamorphiscope with all-English dialogue, marks the first film the Boston film distrib and importer has preemed on the west coast. All his other big exploitation films, "Attila," "Godzilla," "Wiretappers" were preemed in the east.

Levine will remain in Hollywood for a week to set arrangements and plans his biggest exploitation campaign for "Hercules." He contemplates west coast preems on his films from here on.

Heard on Both Coasts: Realtor Zeckendorf May Acquire Republic's Labs

Rumored (but not confirmed) in Coast and New York (Wall Street) circles is a possible buyout by realtor - hotel operator William Zeckendorf of Republic's laboratories both in the east and west.

Rep's Consolidated Film Laboratories represents the film company's important money-making enterprises. It was hinted that Rep president Herbert J. Yates is to be in New York from his Coast base this week to consider the deal.

Further noted that Zeckendorf has an important interest in Pathe Labs and, thus, is no stranger to the field. Zeckendorf bought out the late Robert R. Young's stock in Chesapeake Industries, which is a holding company whose properties include Pathe.

TALENT & BRAINS VS 'MERE $'

'Overheard' by Reporter Furlong

The following are quotes from a story written by Chicago Daily News sportswriter Bill Furlong on the supposedly secret major league meeting in Chicago. He listened in on the discussions via an airvent from an adjoining room.

Commissioner Ford Frick related to the owners that he had been presented with a $150,000 bill by Robert Coyne, special counsel for COMPO, for getting the admissions tax reduced to 10%. "The Commissioner feels that we have neither a legal nor a moral obligation to pay him," Frick said, adding that Coyne had approached him some years back offering to lobby for a tax cut. However, Frick stressed that he had never hired Coyne for that work.

"He did a helluva job for us" lobbying for the bill that would give baseball immunity from the antitrust laws, Frick said, "and there is no question he did a good job on the tax thing. However, I don't like him coming and saying he was representing us when he wasn't."

Coyne has denied ever having presented Frick with a bill for getting the tax reduced. He had been under specific direction from the COMPO board to "go it alone" for the film biz in the tax fight. However, Coyne makes no bones about having done work for Frick in Washington.

Coyne Lobbied for Baseball, Says COMPO Leaders Knew; Denies Rendering Frick a Bill

Robert W. Coyne, special counsel for the Council of Motion Picture Organization, acknowledged last week that he had lobbied for the major league baseball clubs in Washington, but denied that he had submitted to Commissioner Ford Frick a bill for his services.

He said that his association with Frick was known to the COMPO governing committee and "recognized as not inconsistent with my responsibilities to COMPO."

Coyne's tie to Frick first came to light in an article written by Bill Furlong in the Chicago Daily News in which he disclosed that the Major League owners had huddled with Frick on the question of a $150,000 bill submitted by Coyne for his services in getting the admissions tax reduced. Frick and the owners, according to Furlong, decided they had no obligation to pay Coyne.

Furlong got his story by hiding out in a room in a Chicago hotel. The baseball execs were meeting next door and Furlong eavesdropped on their powwow.

Coyne said he had represented Frick in Congress "during the past three to four months." In his formal statement he said he had represented him "in his program with the recent Congress."

In Furlong's story one of the owners was quoted as saying that it's be embarrassing were it to be established that baseball was paying a percentage to a lobbyist who had succeeded in getting the admissions tax reduced. Coyne was said to have told Frick that the $150,000 represented 10% of the amount baseball saved by the reduction of the admissions tax to 10% from the former 20%.

Coyne didn't explain why he would be representing Frick in Congress without payment. Nor was there an explanation of Coyne's actions in the light of a recorded decision by the film biz that it would push its own tax fight in the Congress without joining hands with other interested parties. Taking Coyne's statement at face, the entire discussion of the baseball owners on the subject of Coyne's bill would seem to have been fabricated by Furlong. The alleged dialog was reproduced in some detail in a recent issue of Sports Illustrated (Luce).

Though the Furlong yarn caused some raised eyebrows in industry quarters, there was virtually no comment on it. Sam Pinanski of the COMPO triumvirate, reached at his Boston headquarters, said he knew nothing whatever about the whole thing; which is in apparent contradiction to Coyne's statement that COMPO knew—and approved of—his personal activities on behalf of baseball.

(When the Coyne yarn first cracked in the daily press, both baseball and film industries sent out a wave of unmistakable embarrassment which would show on a seismograph. But it was a remarkably silent earthquake which jarred telephone communications so that executives became lost to contact. After some days of no breath, some tradesters were tranquilized back into nominal, if not revealing, communication. It is not clearly known whether the baseball industry's immunity to antitrust regulation (under a special privilege) was a factor in the wall of silence.—Ed.)

(It's rumored that Washington-wise Coyne may be joining the liquor people, who've been having tax agonies of their own, especially on warehouse bonding. He couldn't be reached for comment yesterday (Tues.).

John Huston Argues for Not Staying at Home

Location shooting, though expensive and fraught with danger, nevertheless infuses picture-making with the kind of excitement that it needs, director John Huston declared in Manhattan last week. "For some of us, the element of risk is an incentive. There is a kind of gamble that is attractive," he added.

Huston was replying to a question on whether treks like the one he and Darryl F. Zanuck took to Equatorial French Africa to shoot "Roots of Heaven" were really worth it in terms of dramatic and visual values achieved. The entire company got sick in the extreme heat and a very large budget was required to move actors and crew into the inaccessible region.

Earlier, Zanuck had said that, while he was satisfied with the results, he "wouldn't do it again."

"I am not sure we are capable of doing things the easy way any more," said Huston. "That's particularly true when working in a studio and with a bad script. I know there are a lot of directors who'd much rather work inside, under controlled conditions. As for myself, I'd be one of the world's worst directors. I'd go very stale working in a studio all the time."

While the need for location shooting is generally recognized in the widescreen era, when studio-built sets tend to look phoney on the screen, some in the industry have been wondering out loud whether the economics of production abroad always add up logically. Question is being asked whether the resultant realism, so costly to achieve, pays off proportionately.

GAINS 'CROSSED' INTO COLLATERAL

Wealthy independent producers are angling to become wealthier by way of becoming "independent" in the full sense. This means they want to go it alone in the way of financing their own pictures and by way of so doing reap all the profits —if any.

Case in point, it's reported, is Sam Spiegel, whose "Bridge on the River Kwai" obviously will be one of the biggest grossers of the past year. It's now figured at $12,000,000 and the profit, while hard to guess at this time, ought to be substantial. Columbia, which financed the production and took distribution rights, is in on the profits split.

Spiegel's feeling reportedly is that, had he bankrolled the picture himself, he could have grabbed all the film's earnings and, further, worked out a better releasing deal. Distributors, upon financing an indie picture, usually take 25% to 30% of the gross as releasing fee plus, perhaps, 50% of the net revenue return.

Stirring the indies particularly is the deal which Samuel Goldwyn worked out for the Col handling of his "Porgy and Bess." Producer staked his own money for the entry —as he has done with all his past productions—and the only payoff to Col is the distributor charge.

According to Coast sources, some indies have come to believe that Goldwyn is paying only 15% of the gross for the Columbia distribution, with no Col participation in the profits. They're motivated by this assumption regardless of its accuracy; neither Goldwyn nor Columbia have stated the agreed terms but the charge actually is 18% with Col having no partnership in the profits.

Point is made on the distribution side that the financier takes all the capital risks. It breaks down to the situation whereby the film company, having provided the investment money, is entitled to a participation in the ownership if the film comes out well financially, considering that the company alone sustains the losses if the film is a fiscal lemon.

But there's more to it, according to the indie side. The financing is done for the most part on a cross-collateralization basis. This means a group of productions is financed collectively, rather than any one picture individually. Thus, if a producer such as Spiegel makes $500,000 on his first picture and loses the same amount on his second, the profit from the first can be charged against the loss of the second.

Indies say this means a risk factor for them, too. For aren't they gambling with that initial $500,000 profit? Also, they're ante-ing their time and talent.

Number of producers in a position, and willing, to provide their own financing is limited. Not everybody's a Goldwyn. But there have been some who have built up pic negative equities in recent years which are adequate enought to obtain bank money on their own. And they (Spiegel included) are said to be thinking in these terms.

Excluded at this time are Stanley Kramer, who has a six-picture contract with United Artists, and Hecht-Hill-Lancaster. Latter has a tieup with UA which provides the company with only 25% of the profits and this is said to be agreeable to both sides.

Grainger's Burma Okay

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Edmund Grainger will lens his next Metro production, "Never So Few," in Burma, following Burmese governmental sanction of project.

Sexsational Come-Ons in Ad Copy Recognized as a Gotta-Be-Tackled Problem; MPAA May Go Into Huddle

Complaints about film advertising from all over the country have reached such a pitch that the Motion Picture Assn. of America is planning to call a special meeting of ad-pub heads in the near future to discuss the situation.

What worries MPAA is that the multiplying protests for once don't appear to be inspired or planted by any one group, but seems to spring from a genuine concern on the part of the press and numerous organizations concerned with the welfare of the young.

The upcoming hearings in N. Y. on sexsational and misleading advertising are but a part of the developing national pattern, though there is little question that one or two well-publicized complaints such as the one emanating from Albany tend to "infect" other cities and to bring out slumbering resentments. What's being faced at the MPAA, however, is that the current "uprising," which also is seeing newspapers demanding the right to "censor" film ad copy, can't just be waived off in the hope that it'll die down naturally.

While there's no "official" comment at MPAA headquarters, it's well known that the Advertising Code has been battling it out noisily with the companies in recent months. Some ads, described as "shocking," have been submitted, and even when lengthy hassles produce a compromise, the remaining impression is still sufficiently provocative to stimulate sharp reaction.

In part, the ads are simply a reflection of the overall trend in Hollywood, which points to a much franker attitude towards sex on the screen. Since sex is still the film's most salable commodity, the trend in content is simply given a sharp expression in the ads, which dramatize that aspect of the story. What the Code people are complaining about is that there's virtually no ad campaign left any more that isn't "hot" in one way or another, whether it's via scene stills or the ad copy.

Cited is the ad for "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," in which Judith Anderson points to a bed and declares that if a marriage goes on the rocks, "the rocks are right here." Of course, this is a verbatim quote from the film, which passed the Production Code in the first place. Whether it's the type of quote which incites teenagers to ask a lot of questions, which puritanical parents find awkward, is another problem.

The ad-pub chiefs are aware that trouble is brewing, but they also know that they have to sell their pictures in a highly competitive market in which pix like "God Created Woman," sold out-and-out on the sex angle, have done sensationally, while some others, sold with a less provocative approach, have died. Some comolaints are heard, too, re the ads for the horror entries, but the big beef is over S-E-X.

Valentino Nephew Sues

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Jean Valentino, nephew of the late Rudolph Valentino, has asked $35,000 damages in a Superior Court suit against Disneyland Inc., for unauthorized use of silent film, "The Eagle," starring Valentino and Vilma Banky.

He asserts pic, shown at Disneyland cinema theatre, Olde House, violated his rights as legatee of star.

Anglo-Yank Pact Renewal Easy As Waltzing

Washington, Sept. 30.

The Anglo-American film agreement was extended today (Tues.) for another year without change. New pact runs to Sept. 26, 1959. As last year, it was a pleasant negotiation.

Under the agreement, the Americans retain the right to unconditionally remit $17,000,000 annually. The pact includes several bonus provisions. As a result, the U.S. outfits have virtually no frozen balances in Britain.

Negotiating for the British were Sir David Eccles, president of the Board of Trade, and Sir Frank Lee, Permanent Under-Secretary of the BOT. Also Kenneth Huggins, commercial counsellor at the British Embassy. Sitting on the U.S. side of the table were Ralph Hetzel, exec v.p. of the Motion Picture Export Assn., and Griffith Johnson, v.p.

Neither Eric Johnston (who is in Moscow) nor Ellis Arnall, prez of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers, attended.

POWER ROLLS 'SHEBA,' HIS LEGIT PLANS HAZY

Madrid, Sept. 23.

Looking biblical in a three-cornered beard, Tyrone Power has arrived here for his filming start in "Solomon and Sheba" opposite Gina Lollobrigida. Old Testament saga in Technirama, financed and to be released by United Artists, is the actor's first in a series of five films abroad.

Power and his Copa Productions partner-producer Ted Richmond are associated with Edward Small in the upcoming religioso spectacle. As currently credited, "Sheba" will be an Edward Small presentation produced by Ted Richmond.

Actor failed to confirm Stateside reports of his Broadway appearance next spring with Ingrid Bergman in "Anna Karenina." Impressed with the Moscow Art Theatre's dramatization of the Tolstoi novel and admitting he will continue to devote a semi-annual portion of his time to stage thesping, Power unbearded a "no definite commitment yet." He said he presumed the "Karenina" announcement was a Gregory Ratoff trial balloon. (Ratoff is slated to stage the venture.)

Power said his next film, tentatively titled "One Against Tomorrow," would be done entirely in Stockholm beginning February, possibly with Lee Thomson ("Ice Cold in Alex") as director and a Swedish actress in one of the two femme roles.

The Barbarian And The Geisha
(COLOR; C'SCOPE)

Lavish but not very exciting period spectacle set in mid-19th Century Japan. Production will rest strongly on John Wayne's star pull.

Hollywood, Sept. 26.

20th-Fox release of Eugene Frenke production. Stars John Wayne; features Eiko Ando, Sam Jaffe, So Yamamura. Directed by John Huston. Screenplay, Charles Grayson; based on a story by Ellis St. Joseph; camera (DeLuxe Color), Charles G. Clarke; music, Hugo Friedhofer; editor, Stuart Gilmore. Previewed at the studio, Sept. 25, '58. Running time, 105 MINS.

Townsend Harris	John Wayne

"The Barbarian and the Geisha" is an Oriental pageant of primitive beauty based on the "true" story of the exploits of the first U. S. consul to establish headquarters in Japan. Eugene Frenke's production for 20th-Fox is lavish as John Huston has directed it with an eye to utilizing native backgrounds and people for exotic effect. But it is light in other departments. The John Wayne starrer, which introduces an attractive Japanese newcomer, Eiko Ando, is being released in immediate mass bookings, which seems the smart handling of this not fully satisfying presentation for maximum return.

Once opened to Christian Missionaries, then closed, Japan was a Forbidden Kingdom to outsiders in 1856 when U. S. Consul-General Townsend Harris, played by Wayne, arrived off the port of Shimoda, where the Charles Grayson screenplay, based on Ellis St. Joseph's story, begins. Prodded by Yankee gunboats Japan had signed a treaty granting diplomatic representation but the Japanese had no intention of honoring the document. Even shipwrecked U. S. mariners were murdered when they landed in Japan. Harris was under orders from his government to open the door on the hermetically-sealed country, and, armed only with his own personality and accompanied only by his European translator, Sam Jaffe, he prepared to do so.

After initial harrassing and setbacks, Wayne gains the confidence of the local noble, So Yamamura, who agrees to take him to the court of the Shogun to plead his case. Meantime, to make Wayne's isolation easier, Yamamura delivers a geisha, Eiko Ando, to the non-Nipponese barbarian. Although there is no explicit romance between Wayne and Miss Ando, an attachment is suggested, so there is pathos in the end when circumstances force them apart. Wayne is successful, however, in his diplomatic mission.

"The Barbarian and the Geisha" (originally titled "The Townsend Harris Story") is rich in atmosphere and in some stirringly-staged scenes, such as Wayne's arrival by ship at Shimoda, his presentation to the Shogun's court and an archery meet of medieval pomp. It is less exciting in its personal delineations. Huston uses a technique of having the Japanese speak Japanese throughout. It is effective initially from several points of view, but it becomes somewhat annoying as the film progresses. The character played by Miss Ando acts as the narrator behind some of this action, but this device is only partially successful.

The excitement that is usually a hallmark of Huston's direction is surprisingly sparse. His special facility of creating strong and commanding characters seems to be submerged, perhaps deliberately, in the interests of historical accuracy. The dialog is often declamatory and does little to make the principles come alive. While the film is continuously pleasing to the eye, it too seldom stirs the mind or touches the heart.

Wayne makes a stalwart and credible hero, although handicapped by a role that seems more a figurehead of the U. S. government than a figure of a single American. Miss Ando, whose looks are only slightly Oriental, is most moving and makes a vivid film bow. Sam Jaffe creates sympathy in his role, and the Japanese actors who make up the bulk of the cast, include So Yamamura, Morita, Hiroshi Yamato and Kodaya Ichikawa in memorable portrayals.

Charles G. Clarke's photography, in glowing DeLuxe color, is adept at catching the delicate shadings typical of Japanese coloration, and captures also a sense of flow and grandeur in the action scenes. Hugo Friedhofer's score is purposely romantic, and useful in infusing a warmth into scenes otherwise lacking. Stuart Gilmore's editing and the sound by W. D. Flick and Warren B. Delaplain makes the production as slick as if it had all been done on a sound stage. Art direction by Lyle B. Wheeler and Jack Martin takes full advantage of the Japanese background. Powe.

Hong Kong Confidential

Program meller on Oriental espionage, but well done within its limits for strengthening double bills.

Hollywood, Sept. 26.

United Artists release of Robert E. Kent production. Stars Gene Barry; co-stars Beverly Tyler, Allison Hayes; features Edward Kemmer, Michael Pate, Rico Alaniz. Directed by Edward L. Cahn. Screenplay, Orville H. Hampton; camera, Kenneth Peach; music, Paul Sawtell and Bert Shefter; editor, Edward Mann. Previewed at Goldwyn studio, Sept. 23, '58. Running time, 67 MINS.

Casey Reed	Gene Barry

British and American espionage agents are pitted against the Communists in "Hong Kong Confidential," a melodrama designed for program bills that will be an asset in the lower position that is its niche. Robert E. Kent's production for United Artists, directed by Edward L. Cahn, deals with some supposed behind-the-scenes action by the major powers in the Middle and Far East, but it wisely sticks to almost purely personal adventure without getting too involved in higher echelon machinations or their meanings.

Gene Barry plays a U.S. agent whose cover is that of a night club singer in Hong Kong. When the young son of a Middle East Arab potentate is kidnapped and believed held in Barry's area by Communist abductors, Barry is assigned to locate him. The climax of the story is a plan by the Communists to murder the boy and Barry so it will appear that the snatch was a U.S. trick to pressure the Arab state into a favorable alliance with the West. Action shifts from Hong Kong to neighboring Macao, with interpolated shots of world capitals—some stock and some staged—and gains substance by use of a semi-documentary, narration device.

Orville H. Hampton's screenplay avoids the pitfalls of pedantry, establishes the simple characters well, and provides plenty of plot turns which director Cahn uses to keep things boiling. Gene Barry is likable and credible as the singer-spy, and Beverly Tyler, as a good girl, and Allison Hayes, as a bad one, are capable. Edward Kemmer, Michael Pate, Rico Alaniz, Noel Drayton, King Calder and Philip Ahn are important in the supporting cast.

Kenneth Peach's photography does everything possible to make the back lot sets look like the Far East and Edward Mann's editing ties in all together for superior effect. Music by Paul Sawtell and Bert Shefter is good. Powe.

Passionate Summer
(BRITISH—COLOR)

Leisurely romantic drama set in Jamaica; appealing performance by Virginia McKenna and lush tropical locale.

London, Sept. 25.

Rank production (Kenneth Harper-George Willoughby) and release. Stars Virginia McKenna, Bill Travers, Yvonne Mitchell. Directed by Rudolph Cartier. Screenplay, Joan Henry; editor, Reginald Mills; camera, Ernest Steward; music, Angelo Lavagnino. At Leicester Square Theatre, London. Running time, 104 MINS.

Judy	Virginia McKenna
Douglas Lockwood	Bill Travers
Mrs. Pawley	Yvonne Mitchell
Mr. Pawley	Alexander Knox
Louis	Carl Mohner
Silvia	Ellen Barrie
Duffield	Guy Middleton
Coroner	Gordon Heath
Mrs. Morgan	Pearl Prescod
Joe	Harry Quashie
Cable Clerk	Rosee Holder
Boatman	Danny Daniels
Air Hostess	Jan Holden
Shopkeeper	John Harrison
John	Bruce Gentry
Norah	Wavency Lee
Alan	Martin Stephens

Despite an appealing performance by Virginia McKenna and some excellent color lensing by Ernest Steward, "Passionate Summer" remains the sort of glossy novelettish yarn that will do nothing for the reputation of the British film industry. It is a leisurely romantic drama, cluttered with cliches and unins[illegible] dialog. Although the stars may have some marquee value in U.K., the pic cannot expect to go far in the U.S.

Set in Jamaica, "Summer" has Bill Travers as a dedicated schoolmaster teaching at Alexander Knox's progressive school. One of the pupils is a particular problem child whose confidence Travers works patiently to gain. That is one yarn. The other story line deals with Travers' chequered romance with a glamorous air-hostess, and the headmaster's frustrated wife trying to wreck the romance and capture Travers for her own amusement. Where the two stories impinge on each other is towards the end. Loaded, Travers' resistance to the schoolmarm breaks down, the child spots them smooching in his rooms and, in a fit of jealous rage, rushes out into a hurricane and falls to her death over a cliff. This brings the schoolmarm to her senses and paves the way for Travers' romance with the air-hostess to pan out satisfactorily.

Miss McKenna as the fickle air-hostess looks the complete charmer and hers is the only major performance to rate any medals. But she is not helped overmuch by her co-star, Bill Travers, who is also her real life husband. He plays the role of the schoolmaster with a stolidity that is rarely less than dull. Audiences may find it difficult to believe that Miss McKenna would have preferred him to the other string to her bow, man-about-town Carl Mohner. Yvonne Mitchell does the best that she can with the ungrateful part of the headmaster's embittered and sulky wife while Knox is his usual competent self as the stuffy headmaster. There are a couple of small cameos which are well played. Guy Middleton as a racy schoolmaster and Gordon Heath with a subtle and cultured performance as a Negro coroner.

An American child, Ellen Barrie, makes her British debut in "Passionate Summer" and shows much intelligence as the precocious moppet over whom all the fuss is about. That some sound performers fail to give very much to the film is due partly to the screenplay by Joan Henry. Miss Henry is an established and skilled writer but this stodgy tale defeated her.

Rudolph Cartier's direction does less for the actors than for the colorful backgrounds. He has caught splendidly the flavor of the Jamaican locale, the noise, the happiness and the heat. While a lot of the film was actually shot in the West Indies, a great deal was done in the studio and the matching is faultless. Rich.

Father Panchali

This release from India, which is being distributed by Edward Harrison, was reviewed in VARIETY June 6, 1956. It had just won the "most human document award" at the Cannes Film Festival but its showing in the States had been held up. It opened in New York's Fifth Avenue Cinema on Monday (22).

Reviewer, Mosk, found the Cannes accolade justified. He found the "treatment of old age perhaps one of the most profound ever seen on the screen," adding that its "high entertainment story values" enhance its chances. "A natural for the art house circuit," commented the appraiser.

Lek Pa Regnbagen
(The Rainbow Dilemma)
(SWEDISH)

Stockholm, Sept. 10.

Svensk Filmindustri production and release. Stars Mai Zetterling, Alf Kjellin; features Birger Malmsten, Gunlog Hagberg, Ian Quensel, Claes Thelander, Elsa-Marie Brandt, Inga Landgre, Gunnar Sjoberg, Lars Egge. Directed by Lars-Eric Kjellgren. Screenplay, Vilgot Sjoman; camera, Gunnar Fischer; music, Eric Nordgren. At Roda Kvarn, Stockholm, Sept. 9, '58. Running time, 92 MINS.

Vanja	Mai Zetterling
Bjoern	Alf Kjellin
Jens	Birger Malmsten
Barbro	Gunlog Hagberg
Bjoern's mother	Ia Quesael
Hannes	Claes Thelander
The Blonde	Else-Marie Brandt
The Redhead	Inga Landgre
District Attorney	Gunnar Sjoeberg
The Judge	Lars Egge

Fine boxoffice prospects in the international market loom for "The Rainbow Dilemma," a romance drama with sexy overtones. Names of Mai Zetterling and Alf Kjellin will help dress marquees. The Svensk Filmindustri production appears to be a particularly strong entry for U. S. art houses and Swedish-language areas.

While the Vilgot Sjoman screenplay outlines the familiar story of boy-meets-girl, nevertheless its treatment is fresh and engaging. Miss Zetterling, a girl with certain complexes and a social pathos, meets Kjellin in Stockholm U. circles. A man of 30, he shuns marriage due to unpleasant recollections of his parents' experiences.

Couple become romantically attached, but a conflict arises and finally Miss Zetterling leaves Kjellin. He salves his disappointment by having affairs with new girls. However, he can't forget his true love and asks her to marry him when she's on the verge of leaving the country. As the plane leaves with her aboard at the finale, Kjellin is figuratively left up in the air as is the audience.

Miss Zetterling is convincing as a girl haunted by the feelings of a woman in love. Kjellin is impressive as her romantic vis-à-vis while other cast members headed by Birger Malmstem and Gunlaeg Hagberg lend good support. Direction of Lars-Eric Kjellgren is tops as are Eric Nordgren's music and Gunnar Fischer's camerawork.

Boudoir scenes are tastefully done and shouldn't affect the film's chances in any censor's eyes. Swedish dialog, however, occasionally is a bit risque and could offend some quarters. On the whole this production has ample exploitation values since the story hints at a "sinful" Sweden. Winq.

Pezzo, Capopezzo, e Capitano
(ITALO-GERMAN)
(Ferraniacolor-Scope)

Rome, Sept. 17.

Atlantisfilm release of an Atlantisfilm-Bamberger co-production. Stars Vittorio DeSica; features Folco Lulli, Lianella Carell, Heinz Reincke, Nino Manfredi, Ingmar Zeisberg, Helene Hegar. Directed by Wolfgang Staudte. Screenplay, Duccio Tessari, Wolfgang Staudte, Ennio De Concini; camera, Gabor Pogany; music, Francesco Lavagnino. Previewed in Rome. Running time, 97 MINS.

Ernesto DeRossi	Vittorio DeSica
Hans Richter	Heinz Reincke
Sciaccabratta	Folco Lulli

Good story in the British Ealing Studio tradition, given uneven handling here for disappointing results, though opening half of pic, plus cast names, will carry it through to okay returns in its countries of origin. Has remake possibilities.

Anti-war theme pervades tale of captain of a tiny vegetable steamer plying the Italian coastline during the last war. A chance meeing with a British sub, which avoids battle with the midget prey, and subsequent interrogation by German intelligence, gives Capt. DeRossi (DeSica) a mistaken idea of his ships' battle possibilities vs. the Allied Navy. Equipped with a ridiculous cannon, he decides to let his vegetable cargo rot and steam into battle, only to sink in knee-deep water when his strained boilers explode.

Buildup is fine and often hilarious, but director Staudte lets pace slacken at halfway mark, and pic loses style and momentum from then on. DeSica correctly hams up his role as the would-be battle commander, while able backing comes from Folco Lulli as his engineer, Heinz Reincke as a German sailor detached to the tramp steamer, and Rolf Tasna as a German officer. Others in large cast have less to work with.

Cette Nuit La
(That Night)
(FRENCH)

Paris, Sept. 23.

Cinedis release of Seprofilm production. Stars Mylene Demongeot, Maurice Ronet, Jean Servais; features Bernard Noel, Jean Lara. Directed by Maurice Caseneuve. Screenplay, P. Guerin, H. F. Rey, from the novel by Michel Lebrun; camera, L. H. Burel; editor, Louisette Hautecoeur. At Marignan, Paris. Running time, 100 MINS.

Sylvie	Mylene Demongeot
Jean	Maurice Ronet
Editor	Jean Servais
Blackmailer	Bernard Noel
Inspector	Jean Lara

Suspense item also mixes in glimpses of a rather decadent Parisian highlife as well as variations on pure and profane love. But suspense is somewhat obvious, and characterization not up to the amorous revelations, thus making this an okay local entry and mainly for possible dualer or program situations internationally on its well-made aspects.

A young magazine layout man has his wife, a model for the mag, coveted by his rather degenerate editor. When the wife toys around with the elder editor to get a loan, the young man tries to kill him outside his home but strikes down the wrong man. Then comes blackmail, the true love arising between husband and wife, and the final telegraphed denouement.

Acting is good but not knowing enough to give true substance to the too simply etched characters. Direction by newcomer Maurice Caseneuve is slick but too mannered. Fewer effects and more humanity would have made this a more worthwhile item. Technically, it is fine. Mosk.

An Pied, Au Cheval et Par Spoutnik
(FRENCH)

Paris, Sept. 23.

Cinedis release of Regina-Filmsonor production. Stars Noel-Noel; features Denise Grey, Mischa Auer, Darry Cowl. Noel Roquevert. Directed by Jean Dreville. Screenplay, Jean-Jacques Vital, Robert Rocca, Jacques Grello; camera, Andre Bac; editor, Jean Fayte. At Paris, Paris. Running time, 94 MINS.

Martin	Noel-Noel
Marguerite	Denise Grey
Panov	Mischa Auer
Maire	Noel Roquevert
Ministre	Darry Cowl

Science fiction and French bourgeois situation comedy are fairly well mixed in this spoof. Some good comic invention goes astray when the amnesiac middle-aged hero gets mixed up in a trip in a man-carrying Russian sputnik. On its timely qualities it could rank for dualer use in offshore situations.

After losing his memory in an accident, Noel-Noel mistakes a Russo dog which lands in a sputnik in his yard for his own long lost canine. When the government cannot get the hound from him the Russians invite him to Moscow where he accidentally goes off in the new sputnik with a Russo professor, well played by Mischa Auer.

Noel-Noel's clever acting as the shrewd, distructful Frenchman, caught up in sci-fi, gets the most laughs in this easygoing pic. Others also join in to make the going quite funny at times. But so-so special effects detract from the final episodes. Russo scenes are well done and kidding hits home at times, especially in scenes where the absentminded Frenchman keeps asking about the Czar, etc. Mosk.

Soledad
(ITALO-SPANISH)
(Color-CinemaScope)

Rome, Sept. 17.

Lux Film release of a Lux-Aspa co-production. Stars Fernando Fernan Gomez, German Cobos, Pilar Cansino. Directed by Enrico Gras and Mario Craveri. Screenplay, Gras, Craveri, DeConcini, Escrivo, Linares, and Guerra, from a story by Vicente Escriva. Camera (C'Scope-Ferraniacolor), Mario Craveri; music, Francesco Lavagnino; editor, Mario Serandrei. Previewed in Rome. Running time, 98 MINS.

Pac	Fernando Fernan Gomez
Manuel	German Cobos
Soledad	Pilar Cansino

A single plot line is the basic difference between "Soledad" and the authors' previous feature documentaries such as "Los Continent" and "Smpire of the Sun." Basically, this one is an illustration of certain Spanish folkways as the others handled other areas, yet somehow "Soledad" fails to click with the same impact. It should play o well, however, in its bracket, with okay export chances.

Some of the usual, and much unusual footage on Spain has been compiled and splendidly lensed by Mario Craveri and his team. There are the bullfights, the gypsy dances, the colorful processions and pageants which abound in that country, plus some previously unfensed facets of Iberia. Perhaps what hurts the picture most is the compromise solution adopted: It's neither a fully satisfying feature documentary (the plot takes up too much footage) nor a satisfactory feature film (too much backdrop color). Plot as such concerns unhappy wanderings of man whose girl is forced into unhappy marriage with a rival. After flashbacks and incidental adventures along his travels, rival is reported dead in gunfight, and end sees lovers reunited.

German Cobos, Fernando Fernan Gomez, and comely Pilar Cansino do their best with material, with healthy assist from music by Francesco Lavagnino. Hawk.

Foreign Capsules

Ballerina, a Sera Dio (The Ballerina and God). (ITALIAN). Lux Film release of an ESE Cinematografica production. Stars Vera Cecova, Vittorio DeSica; features Marietto, Gabriele Ferzetti, Roberto Risso. Written and directed by Fenoglio; camera, Enzo Serafin; music, Piero Morgan; editor, Roberto Cinquini. Previewed in Rome, Running time, 93 MINS.

Modern-day fairy tale about orphan boy who decides to pick out a mother for himself. He's aided in this by Vittorio DeSica, who plays a Divine Messenger in various disguises, and the boy (Marietto) finally winds up with his chosen one, ballerina Vera Cecova, who in turn winds up with her promised suitor.

Fable is handled with some taste and looks headed for good general audience response in Italy and other lingual situations. The Cecova name will help in Germany, plus that of DeSica. Doubtful for the U.S. Hawk.

Theatremen Have Often 'Produced'

Point is being made by the anti-Joseph R. Vogel faction at Loew's that Vogel, having been in the field of theatre operations throughout his business career, is not particularly qualified to call the turns on the production front.

History shows that many theatremen have taken the helm of film corporations—and with success. They include Nate J. Blumberg (Universal), Spyros P. Skouras (20th-Fox), Barney Balaban (Paramount), Ned E. Depinet (RKO) and Jack L. Warner (in association with his brothers) (Warners).

Too, Nicholas M. Schenck and his predecessor, the great pioneer Marcus Loew, were basically "theatremen" before piloting the entire Loew's-Metro organization.

But the industry was just growing up when they took over, according to the versus-Vogel argument. Production is now in a critical state and requires the talents of someone who has been savvy to the ways of film-making, via immediate contact over a substantial period of time, t'is debated.

Vogel hasn't publicly offered a rebuttal, but it's to be noted that some strong boxoffice contenders have been turned out during his presidency and others that show promise are due. These include "High Society," "Teahouse of the August Moon," "Don't Go Near the Water," the current "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" and the upcoming "Ben Hur."

Green-Newman Thesis on Loew's Debts: Who Gets TV Residuals Should Eat That $24,000,000

Continuing as a point of major consideration in the Loew's separation due under the antitrust decree is the corporation's indebtedness which is now about $24,000,000. Who's to assume this—the theatre or the picture company or is it to be divided, and in what proportion?

Proposal has been made by the Louis Green-Jerome Newman stockholder-board group along these lines. The borrowing obligations are to be met by whichever of the two surviving companies takes television rights to the Loew's-Metro pre-1948 and post-1948 product. The earlier, or pre-'48 pictures, have been in tv circulation since the summer of 1956. These have been out on a lease basis, with the rights to revert to M-G after seven years.

Nothing has been done as yet about renting the post-'48's but that these are a source of important potential revenue obviously is a big factor in the Green-Newman thinking.

Kidpix, When Edited

Seeking a way to revive its virtually defunct Children's Film Library, the community relations department of the Motion Picture Assn. of America has drawn up a list of post-war features which could be edited to suit the purpose of children's shows.

Survey showed that about 70 films would lend themselves to this treatment. MPAA is getting cost estimates to establish whether the editing job is within range of possibility. If it proves reasonable, MPAA prexy Eric Johnston may be called on to "sell" the idea to the companies.

Skeptic Brandt

scheduled for the purpose of explaining its plans. Global sales chief George Weltner is to be the officiating officer at these with, domestically, Hugh Owen, Sidney Deneau and, on the ad-pub end, v.p. Jerry Pickman rounding out the main supporting cast.

Session along these lines was held in New York this week with 100 in attendance, including the Par brass, exhibitors and the press. Weltner, introduced by Owen, detailed Par's stake in the immediate future and this consists of an investment of a minimum of $30,000,000 in 20 pictures (the money does not include participations by stars and others) in addition to production that might come along.

In effect, said Weltner, it was a reaffirmation of faith in the theatrical industry future on the part of Barney Balaban, president of Par, and the company itself. With the use of slides to help dramatize the message, Weltner recited the specific pictures upcoming and the stars involved.

Now back to Brandt. Short time ago this theatreman, who was a luncheon guest of Pickman's mentioned to the latter his suspicions anent Par's theatrical role. Pickman referred Brandt to Balaban who was sitting nearby. A meeting was arranged for a couple of days later and Balaban told Brandt of the company's plans. The film company prez subsequently had an afterthought: Why not tell the world about this faith in theatres, as demonstrated by the pic lineup?

And that's how it came to be. This is the genesis of the blueprint for 100 meetings in world capitals for the sole purpose of ramming home Par's message about films for theatres.

It'll Take Up To A Year for RKO To 'Play It Off'

Fade of a major picture company is a slow process. Although inactive in theatrical production, and with its past films about played out in the domestic market, RKO still figures to remain an active corporate entity for nine months to another year.

That's about the amount of time required for the windup of affairs, with nearly all business to concern the foreign market.

Edward L. Walton, v.p. who joined the company as assistant to the president (Daniel T. O'Shea) and in recent months has concerned himself with whatever economies could be placed into effect, bows out at the end of this week.

Walter Branson, global sales manager and as such the top film man in the picture company's makeup, remains. Also staying on are Sidney Kramer, foreign sales manager; Harry Gittleson, assistant to Branson, and Robert Hawkinson, head of foreign operations.

Their main function is to supervise product sales and playoffs abroad. Since playoffs in some countries follow domestic release by as much as a couple of years, this kind of exec supervision is required.

Most of the RKO backlog foreign-wise is released through the J. Arthur Rank Organization. RKO has entered a deal with Loew's, with the latter to cover territories not serviced by Rank. These include Australia and New Zealand.

On the domestic front, product which had been released by Universal as just about played out. Final RKO production, "Naked and the Dead," is now in distribution via Warners.

The parent RKO Teleradio has a couple of pictures now in work in Cuba. These essentially are for television but may go to theatres if upon completion they shape up adequately for such handling.

Another Proxy War Threatens Vogel; Need A Solomon To Divide Loew Baby

By GENE ARNEEL

Loew's Inc., once the model of interior harmony for film corporations, again is coming face to face with the prospect of internal warfare of the type that crippled top-echelon operations a year ago.

Specifically, a new proxy fight looms between the management team headed by president Joseph R. Vogel and a faction identified with the Louis Green-Jerome Newman combination. Latter two are board members, important stockholders and Green, in addition, is chairman of the exec financial committee.

Although neither side is going on record with official statements, recent developments, including an eight-hour board meeting in New York last Thursday (25), bespeak the "brinkmanship" (to borrow the John Foster Dulles term) policy that's being pursued within both the opposing camps.

To meet the terms of the anti-trust decree hovering over Loew's for several years, the company is called upon to "divorce"—that is, separate its American theatres from production-distribution. This maker-seller split previously was accomplished by Warners, Paramount, RKO and 20th-Fox and in each instance the studio and distribution facilities were joined with such other corporate assets as music and record adjuncts, foreign theatres, etc. United States theatres then became wholly separate.

This had been the plan for Loew's originally—on the surface—but now the Green-Newman syndicate wants a switch. They're insisting that the studio, plus distribution, go on its own, with the theatre enterprise emerging as the parent.

As Vogel Views Needs

They presented this proposal to the board last Thursday and eight hours of hassling resulted. Vogel said no. His argument appears to be that production, being hazardous at any time and particularly at present because of market uncertainties, needs the kind of cushion that could be provided by the earnings of M-G's affiliated enterprises. Vogel wants to stay on as president of the "parent," this senior segment to be the production plant, music publishing houses, foreign exhibition, television subsidiaries, etc.

According to the Vogel view, a film company without such support is at a competitive disadvantage. In example of this truism the RKO picture company, when stripped naked and relying solely on film-making and film-distributing, went under.

Be that is it may, the Green-Newman group is out to do battle. Present indications are that they will not, under any circumstances, give in.

An oddity but significant is this: They're high on Vogel, but as a theatreman. They want him to take the helm of the exhibition company that would come into being if their ideas on the split materialize. But they insist he's not qualified to run a studio.

Loew's has made considerable progress over the past troubled year in terms of economies effected. There has been marked achievement in the way of efficient operation. Product has improved.

The gains have been made under Vogel's regime—but is he to get the credit? Many execs in the trade believe he deserves it as the chief exec in charge.

The Green-Newman army in effect scoffs at this. The advances were made within the framework of policies which they laid out and down. Or so they say.

Got the Muscle?

Green, Newman, et al., have intimated they have 2,000,000 voting shares to support them at this time. This amounts to nearly 40% of the total outstanding common stock issue. They'd have a strong edge in a proxy contest obviously, if the alleged 2,000,000 stay put and others are enlisted.

Wall Street sources stated this week that the Lazard Freres and Lehman Bros. banking firms, which clearly are powerful, and Joseph Tomlinson, still one of the top individual stockholders (with about 175,000 shares) are now aligned with Green-Newman.

The anti-Vogel forces, say sources intimate with them, emphasize that no matter the outcome there's to be no liquidation. They say they want the studio to regain its dominant position, not only for the good of Loew's Theatres but for the entire industry as well.

If the "usually reliable sources" can be depended upon, both Vogel and his opponents are anxious to achieve the same result. This would be a healthy studio and theatre operation. It's for sure that Vogel, too, wants to build, not liquidate. But each side has strong, opposing feelings about the approach.

N.Y. French Office More 'Commercial'

French Film Office in N. Y., rounding out its third year of activity next month, will take on an increasingly commercial character, Joseph Maternati, head of the bureau, disclosed in N. Y. last week. He returned recently from an extended leave in France.

Two immediate steps are being taken in the direction of turning this semi-governmental office into more of a commercial agency. One is the hiring of an attorney who will concern himself with the legal problems of the French in the States. Another is the retention of a firm of CPAs to create at least a partial check on the independents' books.

In addition, the office will continue with its promotional activities, seeking to acquaint public and press with the upcoming French product. Maternati said that, whether the French Aid Law is extended or not, the N. Y. office will continue indefinitely and on a normal budget. The opening of an office in Montreal has been decided on.

Pointing to the unquestioned number one position of the French among the foreign industries seeking their place in the sun in the U. S., Maternati said the necessities increasingly were in the commercial field, i.e. the question of getting broader distribution and a more effective supervision of current release and accounting procedures. Aim of the French producers unquestionably will be to get more of their films placed with the majors.

Wall Street's Response To Loew's Wrangling

The word about the possibly impending proxy fight at Loew's hit the Wall Street grapevine pronto. Film corporation's board meeting last Thursday (25) didn't break up until 6:30 p.m.

But by the time the Big Board opened for trading the following day at 9 a.m. the "inside information" had been spread. Result was hot and heavy exchanges in the stock and this went on through the day.

Loew's topped all issues on the New York Stock Exchange for the day in terms of volume, with 102,800 shares exchanging hands. Price jumped $1.62½ per share, closing at $22.12½.

Joe Vogel is fighting the idea of getting rid of the Culver City studio entirely. As recommended by the Louis Green-Jerry Newman faction in Loew's. Vogel still thinks that "there's no picture business without a picture studio." Admittedly it needn't be as lavish and extensive as in the old days of Hollywood mass-production.

As is detailed herewith, Vogel as the moment is riding high with the "Hot Cat"—as "Cat on A Hot Tin Roof" is colloquially referred to—along with other profit-making Metro pix now in release. Besides "Gigi" and "Imitation General" one or two others are doing well. And if, as hoped, "Ben Hur" hits the jackpot, Vogel, must emerge as something of a "wonder boy" in bringing a former giant back to stature.

COMPO and TOA Shoot 'BB' Guns At Each Other

The Council of Motion Picture Organizations and the Theatre Owners of America aren't on speaking terms these days. Friction has built up between the two organizations, with one feeling that the other isn't doing the job.

Bitterness is particularly pronounced over the issue of the business building campaign — at the financial end—has largely been handled by TOA. COMPO has long felt that it should really have been the outfit to be assigned the BB drive, and it's made no secret of its belief that, had it been in charge, the campaign might have gotten off the ground.

TOA, in turn, feels that, with the exception of the tax relief, largely accomplished by Robert W. Coyne, COMPO hasn't outdone itself. While it's supposed to be something of a p.r. mouthpiece for the industry, its actual program and activities have been very limited.

How strong the feeling is between the two orgs was emphasized recently when COMPO put out its release on getting the tax exemption raised to $1. It prominently noted that it was obviously the outfit to represent the industry in any joint endeavors.

New Pix Boost Det.; 'Yankees' Smash $20,000, 'Parisienne' Hot 19G, 'Tiger' 16G, 'Stranger' Same, 'Cat' 12G, 5th

Detroit, Sept. 30.

New product is going over with a bang here currently. "La Parisienne" is hot at the Madison, but "Damn Yankees" is the real champ at the Michigan, where it is socko. "Never Love A Stranger" looks great at the Palms. "Harry Black and Tiger" is okay at the Fox. "How to Make A Monster" is fairly okay at the Broadway-Capitol.

"Search for Paradise," in its final (34th) week at the Music Hall, still is smash. "South Pacific" continues strong in the 25th week at the United Artists. "Cat on A Hot Tin Roof," at the Adams, is rated wow in its fifth week.

'Yankees' Rugged $15,000 in Frisco

San Francisco, Sept. 30.

First-run trade is offish currently, most of deluxers showing lightweight returns. "War of Satellites" shapes fair at Golden Gate while "Harry Black and Tiger" looms slow at the Fox. "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" is still good in fifth Warfield round. "Damn Yankees" is a bit disappointing but promises to get a fairly good take at Paramount. "Big Country" is okay in fifth United Artists stanza. "Me and Colonel" looks fine in second week at St. Francis. Ace longrunner is "Around World in 80 Days," still lively in 92d session at Coronet.

A hot spell, heavy legit, baseball and football activity are blamed for general biz downbeat.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,859; $1.25)—"War Of Satellites" (AA) and "Attack Of 50-Ft. Woman" (AA). Fair $10,000. Last week, "Never Love Stranger" (AA) and "Bullwhip" (AA), $9,500.

'Parisienne' Dandy 10G, L'ville; 'Matchmaker' 6G

Louisville, Sept. 30.

Newcomers "La Parisienne" at the United Artists and "Matchmaker" at the Kentucky, are giving the downtown wickets some lift this week. Perfect early fall weather and an ideal weekend brought out the college crowd. First-runs too were helped by military personnel on weekend leave from Ft. Knox. "Parisienne" looks lively at the United Artists. "Matchmaker" at the Kentucky is brisk. "Harry Black and Tiger" at the Rialto looks mild.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Ave.) (1,200; $1.25-$2) — "South Pacific" (20th) (21st wk). Last Saturday helped by influx of college students, was best such day chalked up so far. Likely $6,000 looms, same as last week.

Kentucky (Switow) (900; 60-90)—"Matchmaker" (Par). Brisk $6,000 in view. Last week, "Kathy O" (U) and "Last of Fast Guns" (U), $5,000.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,000; 60-90)—"Indiscreet" (WB) (3d wk). Steady $5,500 after second week's $8,000.

Rialto (Fourth Ave.) (3,000; 60-90)—"Harry Black and Tiger" (20th). Mild $7,500. Last week, "Camp Blood Island" (Col) and "Curse of Demon" (Col), $9,000.

United Artists (UA) (3,000; 60-90)—"La Parisienne" (UA). Dandy $10,000. Last week, "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (4th wk), $5,500.

'Matchmaker' OK $7,000, K.C. Ace

Kansas City, Sept. 30.

Mild week is in progress here currently with some new product shaping as a disappointment. "Raw Wind in Eden" in three Fox Midwest houses looks moderate while "Dunkirk" at the Midland is dull. "Matchmaker" at the Paramount looms okay. "Never Love a Stranger" in four Dickinson theatres is running at average pace. Holdovers continue sharp. "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" being sock in fifth week at the Roxy, while "God Created Woman" looks highly satisfactory in 34th week at the Kimo. "Windjammer" sails steadily on at fast pace at the Missouri in fifth stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Glen, Dickinson, Shawnee Drive-in (Dickinson) (700, 750, 1,100 cars; 900 cars; 75-90)—"Never Love Stranger" (AA) and "In Between Age" (AA) with "The Oklahoman" (AA) (2d run). Average $8,000. Last week, "China Doll" (UA) and "Lost Lagoon" (UA) plus "Satchmo the Great" (UA), same.

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; 90-$1.25)—"God Created Woman" (Kings) (34th wk) holds up at unusually good pace to set a record each succeeding day, for length of run. Nice $2,000. Last week, same.

Midland (Loew) (3,500; 75-90)—"Dunkirk" (M-G) and "Andy

'Yankees' Robust 11G, 'Cat' 9½G, 5th 'Country' Boffo $10,000 Tops Cincy;

Cincinnati, Sept. 30.

Three brisk newcomers and continuing sturdy life of "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" at flagship Albee are bolstering Cincy film biz this week. Fresh product outlook has "Damn Yankees" in lead with lively take at Palace. "Big Country" shapes socko at Keith's. "China Doll" is okay at smaller Grand. "Cat" bids for a moveover and sixth frame on main line. Long-runners "South Pacific" and "Search for Paradise" retain strength as their engagements roll on.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 90-$1.50)—"Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (5th wk). Sturdy $9,500 after $11,000 in fourth frame.

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65) — "Search for Paradise" (Cinerama) (43d wk). Close to last week's swell $12,000 with windup here three weeks away.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 75-$1.10)—"China Doll" (UA) and "Ft. Massacre" (UA). Oke $7,000. Last week, "Party Crashers" (Par) and "As Young As We Are" (Par), $5,000.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 90-$1.25)—"Big Country" (UA). Socko $10,000. Holds. Last week, "At War With Army" (Indie) (reissue), $6,000.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 90-$1.25)—"Damn Yankees" (WB). Lively $11,000. Last week, "Dunkirk" (M-G) and "Tarzan's Fight for Life" (M-G), at 75-$1.10 scale, $6,000.

Valley (Wiethe) (1,300; $1.50-$2.50)—"South Pacific" (20th) (23d wk). Hugging on at okay $7,500 for third straight week.

'Yankees' Wham 14G Paces Prov.

Providence, Sept. 30.

It's those "Damn Yankees" even at the boxoffice here, to give the Majestic a smash session and current leadership. Holding the runner-up spot is the State's "La Parisienne," with nice take. RKO Albee is slow with "War of the Satellites." "The Whole Truth" shapes drab at the Strand.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 65-80) — "War of Satellites" (AA) and "Attack of 50-Ft. Woman" (AA). Mild $5,000 expected. Last week, "Raw Wind In Eden" (U) and "Oregon Passage" (AA), $6,000.

Majestic (SW) (2,200; 90-$1.25)—"Damn Yankees" (WB). Heavy early play building to around sock $14,000. Last week, "Oklahoma" (20th) and "Carousel" (20th) reissues), $7,000.

State (Loew) (3,200; 65-80)—"La Parisienne" (UA) and "The Careless Years" (UA). Snappy $10,000. Last week, "Cat On Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (4th wk), $8,000.

Strand (National Realty) (2,200; 65-80)—"Whole Truth" (Col) and "Ghost of the China Sea" (Col). Drab $3,500. Last week, "Matchmaker" (Par) and "As Young As We Are" (Par), $6,000.

'Yankees' Big Noise In Pitt at Hotsy $16,000; 'Colonel' Light $6,500

Pittsburgh, Sept. 30.

"Damn Yankees" at the Stanley is the big noise this week, with "South Pacific" also making a big dent in the finale at the Nixon before legit season opens there. "Cat On Hot Tin Roof" is winding up big at Penn. "Windjammer" is inching ahead a little at the Warner. "Me and the Colonel" is a big disappointment at the Harris. "Harry Black and the Tiger" is going nowhere at the Fulton.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 80-$1.25)—"Harry Black and Tiger" (20th). Won't do much more than lean $4,000. Last week, "Tale of Two Cities" (Rank), $4,500.

Guild (Green) (500; 99-$1.25)—"Loser Takes All" (DCA) and "Cast a Dark Shadow" (DCA). Good $2,500. Last week, "Demoniac" (UMPO) (3d wk), $1,800.

Harris (Harris) (2,165; 80-$1.25)—"Me and the Colonel" (Col). Kaye hasn't been b.o. locally in a long time. Doesn't look much more than mild $6,500. Last week, "Tank Force" (Col), $5,000.

Nixon (Rubin) (1,500; $1.25-$3)—"South Pacific" (20th) (25th wk). Closing down Saturday night (4) after six-month engagement on account of legit season. Last-minute rush boosting to big $11,000. Last week, $9,000.

Penn (UA) (3,300; 99-$1.50)—"Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (5th wk). Had to come out Sept. 29 on account of locked booking for "Big Country" (UA) Oct. 9 and necessity of windup week hit oke $8,000 to make it close to $90,000, sensational for 32-day stay.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (900; 99-$1.25)—"Law and Disorder" (Cont). Fine notices but won't do more than fairish $2,200. Last week, "Matchmaker" (Par) (6th wk), $2,500.

Stanley (SW) (3,800; 80-$1.25)—"Damn Yankees" (WB). Crix gave it a fine sendoff. Fancy $16,000 or over, holds. Last week, "Never Love Stranger" (AA), $7,000 in 6 days.

Warner (SW-Cinerama) (1,500; $1.20-$2.40)—"Windjammer" (NT) (3d wk). Moving up slowly but surely, with advance sale growing and kiddie trade getting better, both good signs. Present outlook is for almost $10,000, good. Last week, $9,500.

'Defiant' Whopping 31G In Hub; 'Desire' Record 18G, 'Colonel' Hep 13G

Boston, Sept. 30.

Film biz is building here, with overflow crowds and SRO prevailing at some houses. "Defiant Ones" is standout, with a rousing total at the Memorial. "Time of Desire" is breaking house record at the Capri. "Me and Colonel" is sock at the Exeter.

Paramount and Fenway combo went to oldies with "At War With Army," results being barely good. Hardticket long runners forged ahead, with "Gigi" hotsy in fifth and "South Pacific" torrid in 25th session. "Windjammer" also was strong in its fifth round.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,371; 75-$1.50)—"Matchmaker" (Par) (2d wk). Neat $12,000. Last week, $14,000, below hopes.

Beacon Hill (Sack) (678; 90-$1.50) — "Night Heaven Fell" (Kings) (5th wk). Hotsy $7,500. Last week, ditto.

Boston (SW-Cinerama) (1,354; $1.25-$2.65)—"Windjammer" (NT) (6th wk). Fifth week was $21,000.

Capri (Sack) (1,150; 90-$1.50)—"Time Of Desire" (Janus). Record breaking $18,000. Last week, "Night Heaven Fell" (Kings) (4th wk), $5,000.

Exeter (Indie) (1,300; 75-$1.25)—"Me And Colonel" (Col) (2d wk). First week was sock $13,000.

Fenway (NET) (1,376; 60-$1.10)—"At War With Army" (Indie) (reissue) and "Hong Kong Affair" (AA). Good $4,000. Last week, "China Doll" (UA) and "Ride Out For Revenge" (UA), same.

Gary (Sack) (1,340; $1.25-$3)—"Gigi" (M-G) (5th wk). Wham $22,000, ahead of last week's $19,000.

Kenmore (Indie) (700; 75-$1.25)—"Constant Husband" (BL) and "Last Holiday" (Rank) (5th wk), Nice $5,000. Last week, $6,200.

Memorial (RKO) (3,000; 60-$1.10)—"Defiant Ones" (UA) and "Fort Massacre" (UA). Wham $31,000 or over. Last week, "Twilight For Gods" (U) and "Saga of Hemp Brown" (U) (2d wk), $7,500.

'Yankees' Tall $13,000 Leads Mpls.; 'Defiant' Socko 9G, 'Pacific' Same

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.

Three "big league" Loop newcomers have been sold in such a big way and have so much to recommend them that the public is really taking notice, and so traffic downtown has been accelerated.

"The Defiant Ones" is socko at State while "Damn Yankees" shares lofty at Radio City. "Harry Black and Tiger" looks hefty at State.

Holdovers again are much in evidence. Hard-ticket "Search for Paradise" and "South Pacific" are in their 31st and 14th weeks. It's the fifth big week for "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" at Orpheum and second for the "Camp on Blood Island"-"Snorkel" combo, still fancy at Lyric.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (947; $1.50-$2.65) "South Pacific" (20th) (14th wk). No complaints here. Okay $9,000. Last week, $10,000.

Century (SW-Cinerama) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65) "Search for Paradise" (Cinerama) (31st wk). Announcement of final eight weeks is stimulating biz. Looks oke at $8,000. Last week, $9,000.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 85-90) "Reluctant Debutante" (M-G) (2d wk). Much-liked pic not doing as well as hoped. Okay $4,000. Last week, $5,000.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 85-90) "Camp on Blood Island" (Col) and "Snorkel" (Col) (2d wk). Real boxoffice combo. Fancy $4,500. Last week, $7,500.

Radio City (Par) (4,100; 90-$1.25) "Damn Yankees" (WB). Still another advanced admission pic but public's pouring in. Theatre bows out of existence after this one's three-week run. Tall $13,000. Last week, "Matchmaker" (Par), $8,000 at 85c-90c scale.

RKO Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 90-$1.50) "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (5th wk). Stout $9,000. Last week, $11,000.

RKO Pan (RKO) (1,800; 75-85) "Female Animal" (U) and "Last of Fast Guns" (U). Satisfactory $4,000. Last week, "Law and Jake Wade" (M-G) and "Handle With Care" (M-G), $5,000.

State (Par) (2,200; 85-90) "Harry Black and Tiger" (20th). Well liked but only light $5,000. Last week, "Tank Force" (Col), $6,000.

Suburban World (Mann) (800; 85) "Tides of Passion" (Indie). Good $2,000. Last week, "Demoniac" (Indie), $1,400.

World (Mann) (400; 85-$1.25) "Defiant Ones" (UA). Went limit in exploiting this one. Socko $9,000, is the answer. Last week, "Streetcar Named Desire" (20th) (reissue) (2d wk), $4,500 in 6 days.

NEW PRODUCT PERKS UP CHI

L.A. in Nosedive But 'Yankees' Fine 19G; 'Tiger' So-So $14,500, 'Cat' Brisk 14G, 5th, 'Days' Wow 14½G for 93d

Los Angeles, Sept. 30.

L.A. firstruns are taking a nosedive this session, with outlook for the smallest coin take in many months. "Damn Yankees" shapes fairly brisk $19,000 in three houses. "Harry Black and Tiger" looks only so-so $14,500 for four situations. "Badlanders" is just fair with $11,000 for three houses.

Splurge of reissues also is contributing to the offish showing this week. "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" still is strong at $14,000 in fifth stanza at Fox Wilshire. "Big Country" shapes steady in sixth round at Warner Beverly.

On hard-ticket front, "South Pacific" looks tall $17,400 in 17th week at Egyptian, "Windjammer" is solid $17,000 for 25th round at Chinese, "Gigi" looks strong $17,000 in 12th Hollywood Paramount stanza while "Around World in 80 Days" is smash $14,500 in 92d session at Carthay. "Seven Wonders of World" wound 68-week run Sunday (28) with sockeroo $35,700 in final eight days. "South Seas Adventure" replaces at Warner Hollywood Oct. 1.

Seattle, Sept. 30.

Biz is sagging in current round here, with newcomers being especially light. Even "Damn Yankees" looms barely good at Orpheum. "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" still is fine, however, in fifth Music Box round. "Big Country" shapes okay in fifth session at Paramount. Elsewhere takings are mostly very disappointing.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick), 800; $1.50-$2.50)—"South Pacific" (20th) (18th wk). Swell $7,500. Last week, $7,100.

'Tiger' Good 12G, St. L.; 'Kathy' 15G

St. Louis, Sept. 30.

"Cat on Hot Tin Roof" has moved into a fifth big week at Loew's. A couple of other holdovers, "Windjammer" at the Ambassador and "South Pacific" at the Pageant are doing nicely, too. New pic "Kathy-O" at the huge Fox, looks okay. "Harry Black and Tiger" at the St. Louis shapes good. "A Man Escaped" at the Apollo Art is fast. "The Matchmaker," on moveover at two houses, looms oke.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Cinerama) (1,400; $1.20-$2.40) — "Windjammer" (NT) (5th wk). Big $9,000. Last week, $11,000.

Shady Oak (Arthur) (560; 90)— "Matchmaker" (Par). Neat $3,000. Last week, "Your Past Is Showing" (Rank) (3d wk), $1,900.

'YANKEES,' 'WIND' 'COLONEL' BRISK

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Seasonal weather should abet a flock of new entries and sturdy longruns to give Loop deluxers real action this round. Of the newcomers, "Damn Yankees" expects a socko $19,000 at the United Artists while "Certain Smile" is headed for a nice $27,000 at the Oriental. "Me and the Colonel" is rated a boffo $24,000 at the Esquire.

Preem sesh of "Wind Across Everglades" and "Bullwhip" at Garrick should collar a big $10,000.

Holdover heavies include "Cat on Hot Tin Roof," rated smash in fifth frame at the Chicago. "Defiant Ones" still is solid in seventh session at the Roosevelt. "Big Country" is rated okay in sixth week at State-Lake.

Woods' second round of "Harry Black and the Tiger" is shaping fair. "White Wilderness" is big in third stanza at the Loop while third week of "Your Past is Showing" shapes dandy at the Surf.

Of the hard-ticket pix, the new Cinerama pic, "South Seas Adventure," posted a great $34,000 in initial frame at McVickers. "Gigi" is sturdy in 12th Harris canto, with "Windjammer" ending Opera House run strongly after 14 weeks. "South Pacific" is fine in 27th frame at the Harris. "Around World in 80 Days" looks smash in 78th week at Todd's Cinestage.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (Teiem't) (485; $1.25)— "Pepote" (UMPO) and "Marianne of My Youth" (UMPO). Soft $2,800. Last week, sub-runs.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 90-$1.80) —"Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (8th wk). Sock $28,000. Last week, $33,500.

Esquire (H&E Balaban) (1,350; $1.50)—"Me and Colonel" (Col). Smash $24,000 or near. Last week, "The Whole Truth" (Col) (2d wk), $7,000.

Harris (Indie) (984; $1.25-$3)— "Gigi" (M-G) (12th wk). Steady $16,000. Last week, $17,000.

Loop (Telem't) (606; 90-$1.50)— "White Wilderness" (BV) (3d wk). Smash $9,500. Last week, $19,000.

McVickers (JL&S) (1,580; $1.25-$3.30)—"South Pacific" (20th) (27th wk). Fine $21,000. Last week, $23,000.

Monroe (Jovan) (1,000; 65-90)— "Bad Girl" (DCA) and "Wolf Pack" (DCA). Oke at $5,000. Last week, "Ride Out for Revenge" (UA) and "Steel Bayonet" (UA), $5,400.

'PACIFIC' ROBUST 7G, PORT.; 'TIGER' $6,000

Portland, Ore., Sept. 30.

Biz is dragging along the main stem currently but some holdovers are strong. "South Pacific" moves into a big 18th week at the Broadway. "Gigi" stays solid in sixth round at the Guild. "Damn Yankees" at Liberty and "Me and the Colonel" at Fox are major disappointments, the former being only so-so.

Estimates for This eek

Broadway (Parker) (890; $1.50-$2.50) — "South Pacific" (20th) (18th wk). Big $7,000. Last week, $7,800.

Fox (Evergreen) (1,536; $1-$1.50) —"Me and Colonel" (Col) and "She Played With Fire" (Col). NSH $6,000. Last week, "Whole Truth" (Col) and "Life Begins At 17" (Col), $2,900.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

H.O.s Hamper B'way; 'Yankees' Plus Stage Boff $97,000, Defiant' Giant 39G, 'Cat' Rousing $158,000 in 2d

'Yankees' Hep $16,000, Cleve.; 'Tiger' Mild 7G

Cleveland, Sept. 30.

"Damn Yankees," hitting a good total opening week at the Allen, is getting a holdover but no home-run biz as top entrant of a rather mild session here. "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" is still torrid in second week of a moveover engagement at the Stillman. "Harry Black and Tiger" looms very light on opening round at the Hipp while "La Parisienne" also shapes disappointing for initial frame at the State.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (S-W) (3,800; 75-$1.25)— "Damn Yankees" (WB). Good $16,000 or near. Last week, "Winds Across Everglades" (WB), $8,000 in 5 days.

Hippodrome (Telem't) (3,700; 75-$1)—Harry Black and Tiger" (20th). Sad $7,000. Last week, "Here to Eternity" (Col) (reissue) and "Case Against Brooklyn" (Col), $9,000.

Lower Mall (Community) (500; 70-90)—"Diary of Bad Girl" (Indie) and "Slaves" (Indie). Oke $2,500. Last week, "Girl in Bikini" (Indie), $2,200.

Ohio (Loew) (1,244; $1.25-$2.50) —"South Pacific" (20th) (24th wk). Thin $6,000. Last week, $7,000.

Palace (SW-Cinerama) (1,523; $1.25-$2.40)— "Search For Paradise" (Cinerama) (6th wk). Wobbly $11,800 after $12,500 in fifth.

State (Loew) (3,500; 70-90)— "La Parisienne" (UA). Dull $7,000. Last week, "Reluctant Debutante" (M-G) $9,000.

Stillman (Loew) (2,700; 70-90)— "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (m.o.) (2d wk). Hotsy $9,000. Last week, $10,000.

'Defiant' Hot 30G, Philly; 'Cat' 45G

Philadelphia, Sept. 30.

New product is giving midtown business a shot in the arm this session. The boxoffice for ace pix was not dampened by the terrific downpour over the weekend. "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" is hottest thing in town with a giant take at the Stanley while "Defiant Ones" shapes equally as big with a wow session at the smaller Stanton. "Reluctant Debutante" is smash, too, at the Viking. "Gigi" looms as best of longruns being big in 14th stanza at the Boyd.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (536; 99-$1.80)— "Decks Ran Red" (M-G) (2d wk). Thin $5,000. Last week, $6,000.

Boyd (SW) (1,480; $1.25-$2.75)— "Gigi" (M-G) (14th wk). Big $9,000. Last week, same.

Fox (National) (2,250; 65-$1.49)— "Man With Golden Arm" (UA) and "Moon Is Blue" (UA) (reissues). Okay $7,000 or near. Last week, "Fiend Who Walked West" (20th), $9,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (2,250; 65-$1.49) — "Terror From Beyond Space" (UA) and "Curse Faceless Man" (UA). Fair $7,500. Last week, "Gun Runners" (UA), same.

Midtown (Goldman) (1,000; $2-$2.75) — "South Pacific" (20th) (27th wk). Fancy $8,500. Last week, $8,300.

Randolph (Goldman) (1,250; 65-$1.80)—"Me and Colonel" (Col) (3d wk). Okay $9,000. Last week, $12,000.

Stanley (SW) (2,900; 99-$1.80)— "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G). Whopping $45,000. Last week, "Big Country" (UA) (7th wk), $8,000.

Stanton (SW) (1,483; 99-$1.80)— "Defiant Ones" (UA). Mighty $30,- (Continued on page 18)

Broadway first-run theatres appear to be suffering from too many prolonged engagements currently, this situation even extending to some hard-ticket pix. The few new bills indicate that fresh fare is the crying need to hypo trade over the usual pre-October lull. Very rainy Saturday did not cut into trade at many houses while the much cooler weather starting Sunday (28) was rated a plus factor.

Reopening the Roxy with a new stageshow policy is paying off in spades. "Damn Yankees," plus a straight stagebill (sans iceskaters), is headed for a giant $97,000 in first week. House had been shuttered for nearly a week to re-seat with something like the old capacity of 5,705, and re-arrange the stage.

"Defiant Ones," of course, is the ace straight-filmer with a mighty $39,000 in prospect for the opening stanza at the Victoria. It appears set for a longrun. Most surprising arty theatre entry was "Pather Panchali," prize-winning Indian film, which hit a new house record of $7,200 opening week at the Fifth Avenue Cinema. Other arty entry, "Town Like Alice," was just good $5,200 on initial week at the Sutton.

Ace holdover is "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" with stageshow, with a big $158,000 in prospect for second session at the Music Hall. It's holding over, naturally. "Harry Black and Tiger" is down to fair $21,000 in second round at the Paramount where "Barbarian and Geisha" opens tomorrow night at a special preem. Second round of "Crime and Punishment" still was great at $8,000 at the Paris.

"Raw Wind in Eden" looks to dip modest $15,000 in second frame at the State. "South Sea Adventure" was off at the Warner. "Big Country" moves into the Astor today (Wed.) after "Vikings" held at big $11,000 or better in 16th session. "Onionhead" opens today (Wed.) at the Capitol after three laggard weeks of "Dunkirk."

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv) (1,094; 75-$2)— "Big Country (UA). Opens today (Wed.). Last week, "Vikings" (UA) (16th wk), was okay $11,000 or near for six days after $17,000 for 15th week and a great longrun.

Little Carnegie (L. Carnegie) (550; $1.25-$1.80)—"Matchmaker" (Par) (8th wk). The seventh round ended yesterday (Tues.) was fine $6,200 after $9,200 in sixth week.

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$1.70)—"Premier May" (Cont) (3d wk). Second week ended Monday (29) was oke $5,100. First was $7,800.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50) —"Onionhead" (WB). Opens today (Wed.). In ahead, "Dunkirk" (M-G) (3d wk), was slow $12,000 after $18,000 for second.

Criterion (Moss) (1,671; $1.80-$3.50) — "South Pacific" (20th) (28th wk). The 27th round finished Sunday (28) was nice $24,200 after $27,000 in 26th week. "Old Man and Sea" (WB) opens Oct. 7.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80) "Me and Colonel" (Col) (6th wk). The fifth session completed Monday (28) was great $10,000 after $12,500 in fourth week. Stays on.

Guild (Guild) (450; $1-$1.75)— "Hot Spell" (Par) (2d wk). This stanza winding today (Wed). looks like stout $8,000 after $12,900 opening week. Holds.

Mayfair (Indie) (1,736; 79-$1.80) —"Wind Across Everglades" (WB) (3d wk). This round winding up today (Wed.) looks to sag to lean $6,500. Second was $8,000. "Streetcar Named Desire" (20th) (reissue) is due in next, and soon.

Normandie (Trans-Lux) (592; 95-$1.80)—"White Wilderness" (BV) (8th wk). The seventh frame ended Monday (29) was okay $5,500 after $6,500 for sixth week. Continues, with "Rocket To Calabuch" (T-L) due Oct. 7.

Palace (RKO) (1,042; $1-$3)— "Bridge on River Kwai" (Col) (42d wk). The 41st week ended yesterday (Tues.) was good $20,100 after $21,700 for 40th round. "Roots of Heaven" (20th) opens Oct. 15. Fact that "Kwai" opened last Saturday in Brooklyn is hurting final weeks here.

West End Buoyant; 'Defiant' Mighty $17,000, 'Carry On' 11G, 'Smile' Fast 11G, 'Indiscreet' Great 12G in 6th

London, Sept. 23.

The West End first-run scene retains its buoyant appearance with standout returns being chalked up by a number of new and holdover bills. Pacing the newcomers is being "The Defiant Ones," with a mighty $17,000 or near likely at the Odeon, Leicester Square opening round. Another stout opener is the British-made "Carry On Sergeant," which shapes fine $11,000 in its first week at the Plaza.

"The Proud Rebel" made a more modest start at the Empire, with an average $12,000 on opening week. "Rockets Galore" at the Odeon, Marble Arch is heading for an okay $7,800 in initial stanza. "A Certain Smile" is shaping to get a fancy $11,000 or more in its first Carlton session.

The blockbuster longruns include "Seven Wonders of World," a big $27,500 in its 30th Casino frame; "South Pacific," a torrid $20,000 in its 23rd Dominion week; and "Around World in 80 Days," boff at $12,300 in 64th Astoria stanza. Another great holdover hit is "Indiscreet," which started off with over $18,400 at the Warner Theatre and is still big at $12,000 or near in its sixth round.

Estimates for Last Week

Astoria (CMA) (1,474; $1.20-$2.15) — "Around World" (UA) (64th wk). Great $12,300.

Carlton (20th) (1,128; 70-$2.15)— "Certain Smile" (20th). Fancy $11,000.

Casino (Indie) (1,337; 70-$2.15)— "Seven Wonders" (Robin) (30th wk). Big $27,500.

Dominion (CMA) (1,712; $1.05-$2.20)—"South Pacific" (20th) (23d wk). Tall $20,000.

Empire (M-G) (3,099; 55-$1.70)— "Proud Rebel" (M-G). Average $12,000 or near.

Gaumont (CMA) (1,500; 50-$1.70) "Twilight for Gods" (U) (3d wk). Modest $4,000. First was $4,800. "Naked and Dead" (Rank-RKO) preems Sept. 24.

Leicester Square Theatre (CMA) (1,376; 50-$1.70) — "Next to No Time" (BL) (3d wk). Winding current run with stout $9,500. Second was $11,000. "Passionate Summer" (Rank) follows on Sept. 25.

London Pavilion (UA) (1,217; 50-$1.70)—"God's Little Acre" (UA) (3d wk). Heading for solid $7,800. Second was $9,400.

Odeon, Leicester Square (CMA) (2,200; 50-$1.70) — "Defiant Ones" (UA). Opened in fine style with prospects for mighty $17,000 or near on first frame.

Odeon, Marble Arch (CMA) (2,-200; 50-$1.70) — "Rockets Galore" (Rank). Oke, $7,800 or close Odeon, Tottenham Court Road (CMA) (1,800; 95-$2.80)— "Windjammer" (19th wk). Fair $7,500.

Plaza (Par) (1,902; 70-$1.70)— "Carry On Sergeant" (Anglo-Amal). Fine $11,000. "Rock-A-Bye-Baby" (Par) due Oct. 3.

Rialto (20th) (592; 50-$1.30)— "Fiend Who Walked West" (20th) (2d wk). Fat $4,700 after $5,600 in opening session.

Ritz (M-G) (432: 50-$1.30)— "Merry Andrew" (M-G) (2d wk). Good $3,600. Opener was $4,000.

Warner (WB) (1,785; 50-$1.70)— "Indiscreet (WB) (6th wk). Consistently big since its opening with smash $12,000 or near this frame and better than last week.

Re-Edited Version Fits 'Key' in Irish Release

Dublin, Sept. 23.

"The Key" (Col), which was nixed by film censor Liam O'Hara as well as by the censorship appeal board, has been okayed in a re-edited version. Columbia has been pulling stout grosses in Ireland this year and had three pictures showing concurrently recently in the city.

Trio of pix were "World Was His Jury," "Camp on Blood Island" and "The Goddess." Despite some minor scissoring, "Island" did big biz at the Adelphi. "The Goddess," also subject to some cuts, did a b.o. nosedive at the Regal although it won critical acclaim.

British Techni Pays 7½%

London, Sept. 30.

Although the board of Technicolor, Ltd. is maintaining its interim dividend at 7½%, stockholders have been warned that the volume of business in the current year is down as compared to the past year.

With a view to securing additional production, Technicolor has acquired certain rights to do business in additional territories and the cost is being written off over a comparatively short period. This, states a circular to stockholders, imposes a further, but temporary, reduction of profits in addition to the reduction arising from lower output. Provided there is no further deterioration in the general level of business and costs remain steady, the board anticipates an improvement in the profit situation.

French Filmgoing Dipped 14% in Last Half of '58, Government Tally Shows

Paris, Sept. 23.

Statistics disclosed by the governmental Centre Du Cinema show that filmgoing during the second semester of 1958, as compared to the same period last year, fell by 14%. But a drop in revenue due to less attendance was compensated by a 26% hike in general film theatre admission prices.

CNC maintains that since the beginning of the year French pic theatres are losing one filmgoer out of every eight. Reasons for this drop are given as the rise in ticket prices, the higher cost of living and a general falling off in film quality.

During this time the English film, though getting only 8% of the total gross, went up in following by 113% in comparison to its showing in '57. This was mainly due to the phenomenally grossing "The Bridge on the River Kwai" (Col) being as an Anglo film. Otherwise, English items remained as before.

The Russian film showed a fabulous climb of 164% over '57, but still reps only .05% of the overall gross. This was partly due to one picture, the Cannes fest prize-winning "Flying Cranes," which is in its fourth month in its firstrun.

Yanks went up 10% in attendance over last year and still take 33% of the gross, while the French film fell .02% and gets 46.9% of its own mart take. Italian, German and other nationality pix also fell off somewhat.

YANK, ITALO PIX GET JAP BONUS PERMITS

Tokyo, Sept. 23.

Two American films and two Italian pictures were chosen for the four bonus import licenses for the first half of this year. Selected were "Ten Commandments" (Par) and "Witness for Prosecution" (UA) from the U.S., and Italian films "Il Bidone" (Taiei Eiga) and "White Night" (Italifilm).

These respective importers are credited with an extra permit for films which must be released prior to Dec. 31 this year. Selections were made from 13 films submitted by 10 importers.

Rank's Irish Profits

Dublin, Sept. 23.

Both J. Arthur Rank's Irish outfits dropped trading profits slightly during past year. The Irish Cinemas group reported earnings at $324,176, against $364,316 last year, but maintained dividend on ordinary stock at 17½%, and 6% on preference stock.

Odeon (Ireland) Ltd. trading profit was $153,069, compared with $161,057 in 1956-57, but here again divvy was maintained at 17½%.

THE HEATHER TOUCH

'39 Steps' Unit Locationing In Mountain-Loch Country

Glasgow, Sept. 23.

Auld Lang Syne terrain is a favorite for lensing. A rush of locationing has taken place before daylight conditions worsen with the late fall. A Rank unit has planed in to make "The Thirty-Nine Steps," thriller based on the John Buchan novel. Stars are Kenneth More and Taina Elg. Betty Box is producing and Ralph Smart directing. Unit is filming outdoor scenes in the mountain-and-loch country known as the Trossachs, and also at Edinburgh.

Frank Launder and Sidney Gilliat are filming "The Bridal Parth" in the Argyll area near Oban. Bill Travers, who starred in "Wee Geordie," is featured. "Rockets Galore," with Jeannie Carson, Donald Culver, was recently lensed on the northwest Scotland island of Barra. It has its preem at the Odeon here Sunday (28).

Hoyts Loop Would Unload 9 Cinemas

Sydney, Sept. 23.

Hoyt's major Aussie cinema loop is ready to unload nine suburban houses to commercial interests. Circuit operates about 180 houses coast to coast here. Selling figure of the nine currently on the market is $600,000. Sale stipulation is that none of the block can be used as a cinema or as stage house.

20th-Fox holds the major stock sayso in the loop, which is headed here by Ernest Turnbull, who is also topper of the local 20th-Fox distribution outfit. Figuring here is that the cinemas put on the block are now regarded as outdated and unsuitable for the presentation of new screen techniques such as Cinerama and Cinemascope. Most of the theatres are in industrial zones which have been hard hit by the inroads of tv and unemployment. Understood that Hoyts also will unload outmoded cinemas in the Melbourne zone, keeping only thoses houses showing no red.

Hoyts will curtail playing time in several nabers from six days weekly to three a week. Staff cuts will see house managers asked to manage three cinemas instead of one. This move is irksome to the managers' union, which maintains there must be a manager employed at each theatre. Matter is to go before the Arbitration Court for a decision.

Greater Union Leasing

Greater Union Theatres, opposition circuit, headed by Norman Rydge, is leasing many of its suburban cinemas to former employees to operate on a family basis. Rydge, it's understood, figures this to be the most profitable avenue for so-called fringe houses. Rydge firmly believes that the Aussie industry will outsmart tele with too product, sharp salesmanship and a new showmanship.

Biz in the Aussie houses is causing no headaches when pix like "80 Days" (UA) runs over 47 weeks, "Kwai" (Col) goes 35 weeks, "Peyton Place" (20th) tops 21 weeks and "Witness for Prosecution" (UA) lasts more than eight weeks. These pix prove that the Aussies are willing to pay increased admissions for the type of fare they want.

Biz is bad in the suburbs, not because of tele, say many showmen, but because the key city longruns hold up suburban release and force exhibs to play old product having little appeal. To remedy this setup, Hoyts, Metro and Greater Union are now all setting certain product in the suburbs on a day-date basis with the keyers.

Cagney 'Dublin'

Dublin, Sept. 23.

James Cagney, here with the "Shake Hands With the Devil" location company, will don greasepaint for one of his rare stage appearances Oct. 12 at the Royal Theatre for benefit performance of Ireland's Variety Club.

Actor will do his George M. Cohan routine as part of his act.

Shepperton's 'Thanks A Million' For Britain's Act of Faith In Studio

London, Sept. 30.

Modernization of British Lion's Shepperton Studios at a cost of almost $1,000,000 represented an act of faith by the government in the British film industry, said Douglas Collins, chairman of the parent company at the reopening ceremony last Tuesday (23). There had been proposals to turn the studios into a site for a housing development or to convert it into an aircraft factory, but the government agreed to the plans for transforming it into one of the most modern producing outfits in Europe.

The whole project, Collins added, represented a great show of faith in the industry. He paid particular tribute to the government authorities concerned, who had demonstrated their confidence by giving the green light to the project.

He described it as a "public studio," analagous to public baths which were open to all who wanted to use them. They would welcome producers who wanted to combine economy, efficiency and service, whether they were making feature films or whether their particular concern was television.

In its modernized form, Shepperton comprises four large stages, three smaller stages, one large silent stage, as well as insert, trick and scoring stages, plus an exterior lot extending over 60 acres. There are also four preview theatres, 36 cutting rooms, administrative buildings, etc. The inaugural ceremony was performed by Heather Sears and Terry-Thomas.

Harold Boxall, who is studio managing director, revealed that within a month the name of the operating company will be changed from British Lion Studios to Shepperton Studios. It will, however, remain a wholly-owned subsidiary of British Lion Films, which, in turn, is operated with government finance via an arrangement made a few years back with the National Film Finance Corp.

Fete Spanish Exhib

Madrid, Sept. 23.

Spanish exhibitors gathered in Vigo recently to do honor to Isaac Fraga on the 50th anniversary of his career as an exhib and theatre impresario. He opened his first cinema in Santiago de Compostela in 1908.

Through the years Fraga acquired 32 film showcases and theatres. His Empresa Fraga owns legit Alcazar, Infanta Beatriz and Figaro in Madrid.

Brit. Cinema Admissions 15% Below 1957 For 2d Quarter This Yr.

London, Sept. 30.

More evidence of the continuing decline in admissions comes from the Board of Trade in its survey of more than 4,000 picture theatres for the second quarter of 1958. Admissions were down 15% over the same period in the previous year and gross receipts were 7% lower, difference being caused by increased seat prices.

Paid admissions in the period from April to June totalled 191,-000,000 and 4% below the returns for first quarter of the year. This was 35,000,000 below the total for the second quarter of 1957. The survey points out that the decline has been smaller than in previous returns.

Gross takings for the second quarter totalled $58,250,000 or 4% below receipts for the first quarter of the year. Average admission price was around 31c, a fraction below the previous quarter.

The BOT report also shows that 190 picture theatres have shuttered in the past year with a decline in seating capacity of under 4%, which is much less than the fall in admissions.

According to a breakdown of the statistics, the rate of decline in admissions continues to be less in southern than in northern regions and it is thought that attendance in London and the southeast regions were adversely affected by the bus strike in May and June. Theatres most hit by the decline were the smaller and medium-sized houses.

PRINT REGULATIONS HIT U. S. MAJORS IN JAPAN

Tokyo, Sept. 23.

U.S. majors here had another crisis heaped on them by the Finance Ministry's announced intention to hold up import licenses on pictures not conforming with recently stated print cost regulations. These, as MPEA Far East veep Irving Maas put it, ask that "everything must be charged to New York including the kitchen sink."

Majors except Columbia and Universal are immediately affected and may soon be lacking product to distribute. Feeling is that legally the Finance Ministry has no right to dictate terms between buyer and seller. But since the Ministry has right to dictate imports, subsidiaries here don't have a leg to stand on. Columbia and Universal are thus far exempt because their franchises already conform to required new policy.

Name WB Italo Chief Veepee of Film Union

Rome, Sept. 23.

Umberto Orlandi, Warner Bros. general manager for Italy, has been named veepee of the UNDF, the Italian Film Distributor's Union. Post was recently vacated by Vittorio Mattea, Italian RKO topper here, until that company's sellout to Rank Films. At the same meeting, Michele Lauria, local Columbia Films topper, was named counselor of the Union.

Other topics of discussion at the session were relations with exhibitors, which have been very strained here for a long time plus other AGIS-ANICA trade problems concerning the Rome and Bari areas.

Rocket Opera to Blast Off '59 Edinburgh Fest; Map Robt. Burns Salute

Edinburgh, Sept. 23.

Highbrow section of the 1959 International Edinburgh Festival will be brought into tomorrow with a futuristic opera written around the fate of occupants of a Mars rocket lost in space. Entitled "Anlara," by Swedish composer Karl-Birger Blomdahl, it will be performed by Stockholm's Royal Opera with Jussi Bjoerling as a principal singer.

Rocket opera, according to Festival artistic director Robert Ponsonby, will have its world preem at the King's Theatre here next August. Another likely offering in 1959 will be a show to commemorate the bicentenary of the birth of Scot national poet Robert Burns. Orch and chamber concerts as well as art and drama programs are being set.

Idea of staging top-jazz units and revues under the official Festival banner has not been lost sight of. A 1958 plan to bring Louis Armstrong and his group to the junket failed to come off. "But we are certainly still trying to arrange entertainment of this type," said Ponsonby. "I cannot say at this stage," he added, "whether Mr. Armstrong will be invited." However, he confirmed that some big-name jazz men will be invited next year.

A revival of the Scot success of some years ago, "The Thrie Estaites," with a complete Auld Lang Syne cast, is skedded. Play is adapted by Robert Kemp from Sir David Lindsay's satire.

Meantime, a top-level conference of all parties interested in the Festival's future has been suggested to find methods of saving the junket financially. Minimum of aid has followed public appeals for support, with little interest on the part of city firms and businesses. The civic head, Lord Provost Ian Johnson-Gilbert, describes the response as "terribly disappointing," saying: "We asked for $75,000 and we got $19,000."

GERMAN TUNERS NEED 'TIME'

Russian Films Cheered in Caracas; Reds Breed There In New Fresh Air

Caracas, Sept. 23.

Audiences broke tradition by applauding the first night of Russia's Film Week here. Films grossed as much as 20,000 bolivars ($6,000) on a week night, where 2,000 bolivars is average. The country's Communist party has erupted into the political vacuum left by the former dictator. Press and radio swarm with Reds and the Commie line has not been cut from these Soviet films.

On the other hand, at the U.S. embassy-sponsored plays given recently by a Catholic university, there was not even a line. Although a caravan of cars did meet the actors, remarks went like this:

"This is the second time the State Dept. has sent us a Catholic troupe. You don't have to convince our Catholics, you have to convince our leftist laborers!"

"The plays do more to keep up Americans' morale abroad than nurture international relations."

Another Venezuelan remarked: "Why do you keep sending us amateurs? Many of our most prominent actors have never seen a good play. Russia sends us Chabukani from the Ballet Bolshoi (theatre was sold out for the first time since Grace Moore sang in 1941").

60 Brit. Scribes Flown To Dublin for Focus On Irish Film Centre

London, Sept. 23.

A planeload of 60 newspapermen, photographers and tv commentators was flown to Ardmore Studios, Bray, near Dublin last Thursday (18) to visit the studios which are to be the centre of a new Irish film industry.

The spree was organized by Jock MacGregor on behalf of Troy Films, which is shooting "Shake Hands With the Devil." This is a $1,600,000 production for United Artists starring James Cagney, Don Murray, Michael Redgrave, Sybil Thorndike, Glynis Johns, Dana Wynter and a host of Irish artists headed by Cyril Cusack and Noel Purcell. Miss Wynter flew over with the scribes and was greeted by the Emerald Girls' Pipe Band at Dublin Airport, where she was interviewed by Derek Bond for BBC-TV's "Picture Parade."

Following junketing on the plane, the party lunched at the studios, which are about 12 miles out of Dublin, watched shooting, met the stars, was taken around the up-to-date studios, attended a cocktail fest hosted by the Irish Tourist Board and returned to London the same night.

The Ardmore Studios are owned by Emmet Dalton Ltd., and Dalton and Louis Elliman are the company's toppers. The studios — an $840,000 project — have virtually sprung up within a year. Three productions by Emmet Dalton Ltd. have already been shot at Ardmore, "Home is the Hero," with Arthur Kennedy; "Sally's Irish Rogue," with Julie Harris, and "The Big Birthday," with Barry Fitzgerald, but "Devil" is Ardmore's first major international production and opens up a new vista for Ireland's film future.

The studios are set in 35 acres, with production offices in an old manor house and director Michael Anderson told VARIETY that facilities are as up-to-date as any with which he has worked. Building is still in progress, but already there are three large stages in operation and complete self-contained technical facilities. Westrex Magnetic sound is in use and, as proof of the up-to-dateness of the equipment, the studio owns one $28,000 Mitchell BNC camera and has hired the only other one in the U.K.

Greater Union Slates Buy Of Top Canberra Circuit

Sydney, Sept. 23.

Greater Union Theatres, headed by Norman B. Rydge, is reported set to buy a major stock interest in Canberra Capital Theatres, top circuit in the Aussie capital. Understood Rydge and his general manager, John Evans (currently in U.S.), will move on to the board of directors as soon as the deal is consummated.

CCT, headed by Malcolm Moir, also operates a major drive-in in addition to class cinemas in the territory on a first-run policy. GUT, opposition to the Hoyts' pic loop, is 50% controlled by the Rank Organization. It's known that Rydge is keen to expand in key positions here.

Davis To Reveal Rank Exhib Plans In Near Future

London, Sept. 30.

The Rank Organization's plans for rationalization are to be announced by John Davis at a dinner next Oct. 9, to be attended by a representative gathering of exhibitors. His aim, in his own words, is "to put exhibition in this country on a sound basis before it is too late."

The urgency of introducing rationalization was stressed by Lord Rank in his annual report to stockholders a fortnight ago, and at a meeting with the press Davis intimated that the group had decided to go it alone in view of the negative response from the industry.

In his invitation to the dinner, the Rank aide points out that the last budget granted a measure of temporary relief but the rate of admissions has continued to fall and the costs to rise. Supply of film from Hollywood has also been steadily falling for a number of years and he sees no prospect of any improvement.

As, therefore, the need for rationalization was greater than ever. Since his suggestions had evoked small response from the industry, Davis explains that the Rank Organization has been compelled in self preservation and in the interests of its shareholders to take action on its own.

Davis adds that as the Orangization's plans have now been formulated and as there are many reports as to their intentions, he feels that the sooner the industry knows what they really intend to do the better. "Certainly," he adds, "we have nothing to hide."

SEE RKO AUSSIE EXIT AS PRODUCT DWINDLES

Sydney, Sept. 23.

General opinion in industry circles here is that RKO will exit from the Aussie scene around next Yuletide despite strong denials by Jack Labow, RKO chief here, and other RKO execs.

Exit prediction follows disclosure that Metro will now handle top Disney product here, thus leaving RKO with little product in the vault. Not enough, it's said, to permit costly exchange operation coast to coast. A few weeks ago Allied Artists quit RKO distribution to switch to Paramount.

Not long ago RKO was one of the toppers in this zone on release via the Hoyts' pic loop. But now there are few RKO pix in circulation here.

JACOBY IRKED BY LIMITATIONS

The limit on what a German producer can spend on a film musical is Deutsche Mark 1,700,000 (about $400,000). If the budget runs above that figure, recoupment becomes risky, Georg Jacoby, yet German director and a specialist in musicals, stated in N. Y. last week. Jacoby had been in the States to compare notes and to scout vehicles for his wife, the German star Maria Roekk, with whom he has made several recent films.

One of the troubles of the German producer is the enforced length of the pictures. "You Americans can afford to make long films," he said. "In Germany, we can't. Exhibitors wouldn't pay any more for them, and the added costs would be too great. As a result we have difficulties in telling a good story in our musicals. At least 3,000 feet must be given over to songs and dancing. That leaves only 5,000 to 6,000 feet for dialog. It's not enough."

Two of Jacoby's recent filmusicals—"Nachts im Gruenen Kakadu" and "Buehne Frei for Marika," both produced by Real Film of Hamburg—have proven big hits. Pix star Miss Roekk. "Kakadu" got back its negative costs in Europe during the first four months of release.

"We do what we can to improve our films," Jacoby said, "but we are so limited in our release. We sorely miss the east, with its many theatres. Places like Prussia and Schlesien used to give us the bulk of our audience for German films. Now we don't have them any more."

Jacoby, a vet of the old UFA, said the German industry was making progress in exporting its films to everywhere except the United States. "For some reason or other, the German mentality does not seem to please in the U.S.," he held. "It's odd, because your mentality is fully accepted by our people." He said some of the younger German critics had complained that German musicals required modernizing and that this was one of the reasons for his current visit, i.e., to look into the various new processes like Cinerama and CineMiracle.

"We don't have any of them yet," he said. "We are behind. It's incredible, but the UFA Pavillion in Berlin still doesn't have a wide screen, and the same is true of a great many German houses."

U.S. Imports Top Swiss Pix Market

Zurich, Sept. 23.

Recently revealed statistics here show that Yank films again topped all other Swiss pix imports in 1957 by a wide margin. American films totaled 223 pictures, or 39.9% as against 165 or 36.7% in 1956. Total of imported films was 557.

Runnerup position here is held by West Germany with 108 pix (about 19%) against 79 (17.4%) in the previous year, followed by France with 107 films and Britain with 46 pix. Next on the list is Italy with 41 imports. It had 49 films in 1956.

Contrary to 1956, no imports are registered from Africa, Denmark, Finland, Greece Mexico and Soviet Russia.

Rank Official Retires

London, Sept. 23.

Frederick M. P. West, joint managing director of Rank Overseas Film Distributors, has retired. He joined Eagle Lion Distributors, as R.O.F.D. was then known, in January, 1946, as assistant managing director and was upped to managing director in September, 1948.

No successor has yet been named.

British Seeking Way-Around Necessity of Boycott of ABPC For 'Trading With (TV) Enemy'

By HAROLD MYERS

London, Sept. 30.

As the deal whereby Associated British Picture Corp. gains control of Ealing Films (via its takeover bid of the parent company, Associated Talking Pictures) has been accepted by stockholders, the industry in Britain is now seeking a compromise formula to avert the introduction of sanctions. The threat of boycott against ABPC stems from anxiety within the Film Industry Defense Organization (FIDO) which was set up earlier this year to prevent feature films finding their way to the television.

FIDO, which is financed by a levy on boxoffice takings, came into being largely as a result of negotiations by ABC-TV, the corporation's wholly-owned commercial television subsidiary, for a franchise deal to show 100 Ealing oldies on its web. The rumpus stirred up within the industry finally agreeing to the terms for operating FIDO, ABPC made its takeover bid.

When news of the takeover first broke on the stock exchange without mentioning a buyer, the industry thought that one of the other networks, without film industry affiliations, had pulled a fast one. When ABPC, however, was asked by representatives of Rank and Granada, who also have commercial tv interests, to join forces and better the offer, the real identity of the bidder first became known.

At that point, the industry, through its FIDO machinery, swept into immediate action. The FIDO board of directors took the view that if the ABPC takeover meant that all Ealing product became available for tv, their project would be stillborn. Strong action, they decided, was called for unless an assurance was given that the films acquired in the deal would be put into cold storage and not released on tv. So far, such undertakings have not been forthcoming but there has been no announcement to the effect that they will be released on tv.

In highly confidential talks between industry leaders and top ABPC brass it has been made clear to the corporation that, if necessary, complete sanctions will be introduced against every arm of the organization. It was further made clear that such action would be taken with utmost reluctance and an appeal has been made for a compromise solution which would satisfy both sides in the controversy.

There's been a standstill on the negotiations recently, but a decision may be taken within a few days. Wolfe Cohen, Warner Brothers International veepee, arrived here yesterday (Mon.) on a routine visit, but is taking advantage of his stay to discuss the situation and its implications with ABPC executives. WB, with its 37½% investment, is the biggest individual stockholder in ABPC and would be seriously hurt by any boycott action.

As top industry observers see the situation, the compromise could decide not to take any action whatsoever, so long as the Ealing films remain in the vaults and only consider a boycott if it is decided to release them on the air. Secondly, FIDO could be allowed to outbid ABPC and acquire the rights to the Ealing product. Thirdly, the Ealing films could be paid off by FIDO in the same way as it would pay off any other producer who was being tempted with a tv deal.

Irish Condemn Horror Pix, Yet Patronize 'Em

Dublin, Sept. 23.

Dept. of Justice here is receiving protests from pressure groups and private individuals against importation of horror pictures. Letters are being passed down the line to censor Liam O'Hara, but he can do nothing about them. Censorship Act makes no provision for censoring horrors or restricting audiences to adults. But he can, and does, crack down on "excessive brutality," suggestive dialog or situations and too much flesh exposure.

Not only are horror scenes not censorable, but they are hypo for the b.o. The 3,500-seater Theatre Royal did s.r.o. biz for two weeks early this month with "Dracula" (Rank), the biggest biz this year, and other exhibs are lining up at the distributors' offices for more chillers.

Top Product KO's Opposish as B.O. Spurts in Aussie

Sydney, Sept. 23.

Knockers of motion pictures are exiting from the Aussie scene as top product proves conclusively there's nothing wrong with films irrespective of the strongest opposition including television. Terrific business also proves that the public is prepared to pay increased admissions for the type of fare desired—from the teenager upwards.

"The Young Lions" (20th) preemed at the 3,300-seater Regent, Sydney, for Hoyts, plus key nabers on day-and-date, pulled 30,000 payees in one day—a record for the loop. Pic is tipped to set an all-time Aussie high.

Cinerama got underway at the Plaza, Sydney, 1,500-seater, via the Hoyts' banner Wed. (17), with a gala charity show at $4 top and scored with the sophisticated payees. Regular season started Thurs. (18) with a once-nightly and three matinees weekly schedule at $2 top. Ernest Turnbull, managing director of Hoyts, predicted the initialer, "This is Cinerama," will run one year at this house.

Metro has gotten on the blockbuster gravy train with "Gigi" at the 700-seater Liberty, Sydney, on two-a-day at upped admissions. This one looks okay for six months or more.

Block buster toppers here are "Bridge on River Kwai" (Col), 28th week; "Around World in 80 Days" (UA), 50th week; "Ten Commandments" (Par), 28th week, with "Peyton Place" (20th) winding up a 23 weeks' run. Todd-AO comes into the Mayfair, Sydney, 1,300-seater, Oct. 13 with "South Pacific" under the Hoyts' banner.

Indie Shoots 'Bridge'

London, Sept. 23.

The Xanadu Films production, "The Boy And The Bridge," which is being shot on location in London, has made British history by being the first film production to be granted the use of the Tower of London and Tower Bridge.

With full police and authority assistance the unit has been enveloping the span in thick fog several times a day. Whenever this happens traffic stops. It's been a major attraction both with Londoners and tourists.

Henry G. Plitt of Paramount Gulf Theatres is a Theatre Owners of America vicepresident. He also has another title: Chairman of TOA's New Personality Development Committee. It's in that capacity that he arranged for Jerry Wald to speak at the TOA convention in Miami Oct. 21-25.

ARTHUR-CANTON DECAMPS

Metro's Liaison With Indies Joins Blowitz-Maskel

Arthur Canton has resigned as Metro's publicity liaison with independent producers aligned with the company to become head of the New York office of Blowitz-Maskel Co., indie public relations outfit specializing in motion pictures.

He had been with M-G eight years and took over as contact with the indie film-makers three years ago.

to any and all Communist or Communist-affiliated distribution setups in Italy. At the same time, they stressed that action should be initiated not by them, but by ANICA itself. The Italians apparently also have booked films into Communist-run theatres.

Specific target is CREC, a "cultural" outfit said to be distributing films to the "culture" clubs. Italo government, which is dominated by the Christian Democrats, has complained that the theatres aren't properly licensed. Also, the regular exhibitors have put in their beef. The Roman Catholic Church in Italy operates a great many houses. Difference, presumably, is that they're properly licensed.

There's some local dissension in Rome about CREC, which a recent investigation is said to have shown not to be all-out Communist, but only between 40% and 60% Red.

A Yank source in Rome said the American position was against any and all groups with monopolistic tendencies, regardless of political affiliation. He said several other monopolistic situations in Italy were being watched by MPEA. Monopolies in booking are fairly common throughout Europe and operate openly in such key areas as Rome, for instance.

The understanding in N.Y. is that one or two of the American companies already have stopped supplying films to the Commie clubs. However, these bookings are apt to be handled out of the local exhanges, and no "monopolies" are involved here. It's simply a case of the Americans, and the Italians, providing free entertainment for Commie gatherings, which is a source of annoyance to the anti-Red Christian Democrats. MPEA doesn't seem to be eager to go out on a limb by taking unilaterial action which doesn't represent a joint Italo-American decision.

Nostalgia

present at this gathering who have contributed to show business in the past, not be allowed to lie fallow.

Gaxton traced what is a cavalcade of the theatre through the members of the dais. He and his longtime sidekick Victor Moore in "Of Thee I Sing" sang a duet (unprintable); he recited some facts about those on the dais and provided recollections of some very bright moments of offstage and onstage life. In a recitative lasting about a half-hour, filled with instructions to waiters in a form of Italian jive, Gaxton gave proof that he was still one of the theatrical greats.

Bert Wheeler provided one of the funnier stories of the evening with a recollection of a Sunday in Philadelphia during Prohibition era, when in desperation he pleaded with a policeman to tell him where he could buy a bottle of whiskey. The cop told Wheeler around the corner and pointed to a big building saying, "You see that building? It's the Wanamaker store. That's the only place in town where you can't get it."

Among those attending this Lucullan feast were Bert Lahr, Sophie Tucker who did a duet with Ted Lewis of latter's "Me and My Shadow," Conrad Nagel, Russell Patterson, who designed the restaurant, Mickey Alpert, Harry Hershfield, Walter O'Keefe, Grace Menken, Stuttering Sam McDowell, Rube Goldberg, and newspapermen Earl Wilson, Danton Walker, Doug Watt, Hy Gardner, Louis Sobol, Bernard Sobel (author of the "History of Burlesque" and at onetime Ziegfeld's pressagent), Jim Connor, Eddie Black, Frank Farrell and others. Jose.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

A temporary determination of the ratio of dollars to foreign currency in the operation of the International Media Guaranty program is seen pending in an IMG plea to Congress next January for a supplemental budget allocation. Under the Media Guaranty program, the film companies can turn over their accrued local earnings in given countries to the State Dept. and obtain dollars in N.Y. The program applies to all media of communication.

The IMG program, which is within the framework of the U.S. Information Agency, had its allocation knocked down to $2,500,000 in the late stages of the last session of Congress. Even though it had some money left in its authorized borrowing authority, funds were considered inadequate to keep IMG in business. Some of the contracts have to be renewed this fall, and it appears certain that no decision re convertibility will be made pending indications of whether or not the bid for supplementary funds stands a chance in the light of the sympathetic Congressional hearing IMG got earlier this year when it first applied for an expansion of its borrowing authority.

It originally asked for $7,000,000, got knocked down to $5,000,000 by the Senate and was reduced to zero by the House. Conferees then agreed on a $2,500,000 allocation.

Special discount rates for patrons over 60 will be introduced on Oct. 15 by more than 200 neighborhood theatres in the N.Y. metropolitan area. The theatres, members of either the Metropolitan Motion Picture Theatres Assn. or the Independent Theatre Owners Assn., have banded together to organize the "Golden Age Movie Club." Membership cards will be given to all those who apply at the participating theatres and present reasonable proof of their age. No obligation or cost is involved. It's hoped that the special rates will stimulate filmgoing among the senior citizens.

"He's an incorrigible optimist," commented a prominent industry executive. The reference was to Ernest G. Stellings who, as president of Theatre Owners of America, had promised full exhibitor support for the proposed business-building campaign.

Stellings is still pressing exhibs to ante up and apparently is confident that the $370,000 required for institutional radio promotion will be raised.

This is only a fraction of the overall b-b campaign that was to cost $2,800,000. Stellings was unstinting in his assurances that such a tall amount of coin would be forthcoming.

This, apparently, is what happened. The TOA exec addressed numerous meetings of exhibitors throughout the country. He made the pitch for the b-b project that was to include the radio promotion, newspaper ads, star tours, other promotional gimmicks. Pledges of financial support were immediate. But the money never came.

Footnoted the exec observer: "Stellings reminds me of Norman Thomas. Lots of applause—but no votes."

Chicago projectionists union has offered Windy City exhibs a two-year extension of their pact which ran out Aug. 31—but so far no contracts have been inked. It's understood the theatres still hope for some liberalization of the terms, although the probable union attitude is that they're lucky new stiff demands weren't made.

Expired contract ran five years, and decision of the Local 110 hierarchy to let it ride another 24 months likely reflects two things: (a) reluctance to risk forcing the shuttering of marginal houses, with consequent layoffs of IAers, and (b) a desire, linked to allegations of mobster infiltration, to avoid further unfavorable publicity.

Irving Lesser has abandoned plans to distribute "Assignment: Mankind" in the theatrical market and instead will concentrate on release of the documentary to schools, film societies, libraries, service clubs, etc. Film details a day in the life of The Christian Science Monitor, published in Boston. It was produced, in color and 16m, by the Monitor.

Because the cost of creating a 35m negative from the 16m original was deemed too great, Lesser decided to forego theatrical exhibition. Some 60m prints, an unusually large number of this type of subject, are being made, and Lesser said interest in the picture was considerable.

Allied States Assn. has designated its annual convention, slated for Chicago, Oct. 13-15, as "a convention for action." All efforts are being made, according to general convention chairman Jack Kirsch, to remove all the frills and atmosphere of a lecture hall. The aim, he said, is to devote the business sessions "to subjects which are deemed to be vital to the continuation of motion picture exhibitors in business." By action, he stressed, he did not mean the efforts of a handful of leaders operating behind closed doors, but "action by exhibitors in convention assembled."

Concessions will occupy a major portion of the agenda at the 11th annual convention of Theatre Owners of America at Miami Beach, Oct. 21-25. A concessionaire's roundtable entitled "Better Concession Business" has been scheduled for Friday afternoon, Oct. 24, for the more than 1,000 theatremen from all over the country who will be attending. In addition to a moderator, concession experts from all sections of the country will be on the panel which will direct the discussion.

"The Spartan," film based on the 480 B.C. incident when 300 Spartans held off the Persian army at the Thermopylae pass, will be produced by Joseph Lebworth. Herman Raucher wrote the screenplay. Lebworth is due to leave shortly for Greece and Spain to seek local government cooperation for the production. He'd like Rock Hudson and Tony Curtis for the leads.

Arthur Rosen and Ed Grainger were elected secretary and treasurer respectively of the National Junior Committee for the Will Rogers Hospital at a luncheon meeting in N.Y. last week. Group is being expanded to take in young film industry execs from all over the country. It seeks to raise additional funds for the hospital.

Frisco Film Fest's Would-Be 'Fix'

San Francisco, Sept. 30.

Careful approach to Irving M. Levin, director of the Frisco Film Festival, has been made with idea of trying to guarantee that an American-made film will be "eligible for a top award" at the Oct. 29-Nov. 11 event.

Approach was made by a Frisco contact who works with a Hollywood firm. The Hollywood publicist represents the film's producer.

Idea was that this particular producer should enter his picture in the festival on the conditions that:

1) It would pass festival screening committee;

2) It would be assured of one of the four Golden Gate Awards for best picture, best actor, best actress or best director—no "secondary awards" would do.

Levin says he is confident that the film's producer does not even know the approach was made and feels that the Hollywood firm — which, of course, would deny the "fix" attempt—was the instigator.

In any event, Levin bluntly turned down the entry, pointing out that the festival has plenty of foreign films and at least one major U.S. film entered.

Ways & Means Engross Japanese

Shimizu Here to Study U.S. Market—Stresses Theatre—Television Segregation in Nippon

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Japanese film producers are exceptionally conscious of new technical developments in America and constantly are watching the market for improvement of their own product. "When you have something new, we come immediately to buy," Masashi Shimizu, prexy of Toho Co., one of the largest film outfits in Nippon, said here last week.

Here to show his company's Venice Film Festival Grand Prix winner, "The Rickshaw Man," and attend opening of Toho's third overseas theatre for showing of its product, Shimizu readily admitted he is seeking Japanese-American co-production deals and is looking into an American market for Japanese vidpix series. Japanese producers, while not yet interested in making such series for their own people, are definitely planning them for export.

Shimizu pointed ou that although Japanese television is on 18 hours a day, no Nipponese film made for theatrical release is sold to tv. "We not only are producers but distributors, as well," he said, explaining that such practice would hurt business. Instead, about 22 telepix are turned out monthly, running from 15 to 30 minutes. Balance of tv time is consumed by live programs.

Japan is so interested in latest American technical developments, Shimizu explained, that Tokyo now has four of the hard-to-get AMPEX video tape recorders. Color tv already is on the way in Japan, according to visitor, who said one station in Tokyo is ready to go with it.

In addition to its new film house in Los Angeles, Toho has one in Honolulu and a third in Sao Paulo, Brazil for exhibition of films abroad. Negotiations also are on for opening of others in Paris and Lima, Peru.

Production-wise, Shimizu said Toho, which releases approximately 60% of the annual 130 American imports, has just completed a co-production deal with a French company for the making of "The Road of Marco Polo." Another deal is on with an unspecified Hollywood producer.

Shimizu is making a tour of the U.S. with "Rickshaw," is an attempt to acquaint American public with his company's product. He was feted here by Assn. of Motion Picture Producers at a Paramount luncheon attended by various studio execs and stars.

Not Playing—Two Ways; Berger Notifies WB He Suspects Their 'Bidding'

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.

Warner Bros. is currently the object of circuit owner Bennie Berger's anger. He's aroused because of his failure to win any of the company's "important" picture on competitive bids for his local loop firstrun Gopher. He charges that the cards have been stacked against him in favor of the competing Minnesota Amusement Co. (United Paramount) and the RKO Theatres here.

After losing out on "Onion Head," which went to the MAC's State instead of his Gopher, Berger advised Warners by mail that he doesn't wish to bid any more for its pictures firstrun in Minneapolis.

The lone Warners picture obtained by the Gopher the past year was "Bomber B-52."

"Losing the picture 'Onion Head' sort of confirms my suspicions (that there are shenanigans in the handling of competitive bids) as outlined in my letter of last July 11," Berger wrote to Art Anderson, the WB branch manager here.

However, in the letter, Berger informed Anderson that if he changes his mind later he'll so advise the branch manager and that if any of the company's pictures become available other than by bidding he'll be glad to negotiate for them.

Berger sent copies of his letter to United Paramount and RKO Theatres.

Barnum Born Every Min.

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Phineas T. Barnum is likely to hit the front pages again, with two production companies prepping biopix on early circus king.

Martin Jurow and Richard Shepherd will do "The Fabulous Showman" as first on a multi-pix deal with Paramount, to be shot both here and abroad. William C. Thomas also has been working on "There's One Born Every Minute," based on original by Martin Berkeley and Clark E. Reynolds. Frank Tashlin will direct film later in year.

Philip Barry Jr. Pulls Switch in H'wood Debut; He Loves TV, Legit, Too

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Philip Barry Jr. is one tyro Hollywood producer who does not have any harsh words to say about tv or the legit theatre, fields which propelled him into his present situation as contract producer at Metro.

"As a matter of fact, the length of time it takes to make a motion picture terrifies me," says Barry. "In television there is so little time that your enthusiasm and excitement carry you through from the beginning to the actual presentation. In the theatre, you have the reaction of audiences during tryouts to stimulate you. I only hope we can sustain the same excitement in filming our picture."

Barry's production is "The Mating Game," screenplay by William Roberts from the H. E. Bates novel, "The Darling Buds of May." George Marshall is directing the cast headed by Debbie Reynolds, Paul Douglas and Tony Randall. Filming began this week.

Barry doesn't knock the theatre or tv to the advantage of films because he doesn't believe there is any sharp division between the mediums anymore.

"The entertainment business used to be departmentalized," he says. "You were a picture man, a theatre man or—recently—a tv expert. Now there is a more general concept that entertainment is entertainment and someone might might have something to offer to each medium."

Barry will exercise the clause in his Metro pact allowing him outside activities to go to Broadway next winter to prepare production of a new play by Lorenzo Semple, as yet untitled as well as unfinished. Barry's Metro pact allows him to do one play a year.

One of a number of young men coming along in various phases of show business these days bearing a famous name, Barry seems to labor under no strain as the son of the late playwright. He disclaims any ability himself, although he has several credits in tv. "I am not a creative person in the writing sense," he says. "If I have any ability, it is an editorial sense, probably inherited or absorbed from association with my father."

Compromise Ends Par, Shochiku '10 C's' Dispute

Tokyo, Sept. 23.

Long pending deadlock on closing dates of "Ten Commandments" in Tokyo and Osaka ended in a compromise between Paramount and Shochiku with the latter accepting closing dates of Sept. 19 at Shochiku Picadilly in Tokyo and Oct. 13 for Namba Daigeki in Osaka. Conflict arose when Par insisted on closing date of Oct. 7 in both cities and Shochiku asked for Sept. 19 dates.

As of Sept. 5, blockbuster earned 100 million yen ($280,000) for 25 weeks in Tokyo and half that amount in Osaka, making it one of all-time grossers in Japan and earning a bonus import license for Paramount.

Buffalo Subtracts Two

Buffalo, Sept. 30.

Two Buffalo neighborhood theatres are to be razed, per the owners.

The 35-year-old Central Park in the North Park Section which has been dark since last spring will give way to a gas station. At the same time, Dipson Theatres revealed that the 40-year-old Capitol on the South Side of town is due to come down "to save taxes." It has been closed three years.

Irv Sochin Exits At Rank-Yank

Irving Sochin, general sales manager for Rank Film Distributors of America, resigned last week effective October 3. He had been with the Rank outfit in the States since its inception and had created its sales structure.

News of Sochin's resignation came from the Rank office via a one-sentence statement which said that Kenneth N. Hargreaves, RFDA prez, announced "with regret" Sochin's resignation.

There were no indications immediately of what had caused this abrupt split. Sochin insisted his parting with Rank was "amicable." Hargreaves has left for London. It's known, however, that Sochin and Hargreaves haven't been seeing eye-to-eye for some time. During Sochin's tenure with Rank, the British outfit had suffered severely from a shortage of product suitable to the U. S. mart. The only big film that came through was "Pursuit of the Graf Spee." Recently, Rank found favor with its "Bolshoi Ballet" release, which it acquired from the outside. British org has some some important films coming up, including "A Night to Remember."

Sochin joined Rank as of Jan. 1, 1957. Prior to that, he had been with Universal as shorts subjects and newsreel sales manager. Rank outfit in the U. S. so far hasn't proved to be a money-maker, though film rentals do cover immediate expenses like salaries, etc. Counting in prints, advertising and other costs, the Rank losses for the first year are said to run close to $1,000,000. In the recently-published Rank financial statement there were no details regarding the U. S. operation.

to put those words into the lines of the Republican national chairman in his play.

Teichmann left Washington Sunday (28) for further tryouts in Philadelphia, relieved he hadn't been stoned locally.

Peggy Wood ignited his fears. There is a line Miss Wood has in "509" which goes:

"Roosevelt—he was a traitor to his CLASS." But Miss Wood, described as a lifelong Republican by Teichmann, delivered the line more than once like this: "Roosevelt—he was a traitor to his COUNTRY."

"If she doesn't stop that," said Teichmann, "somebody is going to kill me."

From the Casino Royal, where he headed a revue here, Dave Gardner passed along this message to his followers, whoever they are:

"The glory of working in thought patterns is they can never say he said anything. They can only say I thought he thought."

Fearless newshens here have arranged a double bill for Oct. 16.

The Women's National Press Club has set up a luncheon jointly honoring Peter Ustinov and Tallulah Bankhead.

On that date, Ustinov's "Romanoff and Juliet" will be at the National Theatre, while Tallu's "Crazy October" will be preeming at the Shubert.

Ustinov, by the way, wired his advance pressagent, Joe Shea: "Please, no Washington hotels undergoing repairs.

In Detroit, where "Romanoff" runs until Oct. 12, Ustinoff is in the Sheraton-Cadillac, currently being undermined by a riveting machine.

Ustinov reports that it's tough on the nerves of the ruler of a shaky little country.

prez Kunizo Matsuo of the Sentochi Theatrical Co., Ltd., who is acting as Hurok's counterpart in Japan. Matsuo said the kabuki tour is slated for two months to coincide with the celebration of 100 years of diplomatic relations between the U. S. and Japan. Tentatively penciled into plans are appearance in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco. The troupe is expected to number between 60 and 70.

Asked how he intended to overcome the staggering transportation expenses which have turned back ambitious impresarios in the past, Matsuo declared with certainty that he expected the Japanese government to foot the bill. At the suggestion of a high government official, he has already submitted an application and budget estimate. Because of the centennial program, Matsuo is confident travel expenses will be granted.

The tour of the OSK girls, Matsuo revealed, is already firm. He said his pact with Hurok calls for a 10-week schedule with six weeks of options. American musicians will be utilized, but otherwise the program will be all-Japanese. Matsuo regarded the latter deal as having more commercial potential since these girls were introduced to American audiences in "Sayonara."

There is a possibility that 60 to 80 additional OSK girls will line up at the American Embassy in Tokyo for visas. Through night club talent scout Tom Ball, a recent Japan visitor, Beverly Hills realtor Sandy Adler has been negotiating with Matsuo for an array of girls to fill the stage of the Moulin Rouge nitery in Hollywood and a bistro in Las Vegas with a contract of 10 weeks plus 16 weeks of options.

Ball's Girl Revue

Returning here several months ago, Ball set up house and proceeded on his brushbeating mission armed with contracts. Having wrapped together a Japanese show last year that played choice locations on the nitery circuit for eight and a half months under the billing of "Geisha Girl Revue," Ball lined up talent for a second edition.

With some repeat performers and some new faces, Ball's second "Geisha Girl Revue" will open at the Saxony Hotel in Miami Beach for the winter season and then goes into the Thunderbird in Las Vegas for six or eight weeks before another stint at the Riverside.

A contract with the Toho Company, Ltd., was signed by New York theatrical attorney Albert B. Gins for the famed Takarazuka Girls' Troupe to make its first post-war mainland American tour next year, the first of four consecutive annual U. S. junkets. This pact calls for 36 cities in 13 weeks including the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. However, it's believed that this project to still contingent on Gins and his associates securing the necessary playdates and guarantees.

NBC Spec, Too

Biggest single hypo for Japanese entertainment is calculated to be a one-hour NBC "special" Feb. 1. NBC producer-director Alan Handley recently surveyed available talent while in Japan and returned to the U. S. to convey his enthusiasm to NBC and the Chevrolet sponsors. Some 15 Japanese performers will fly to the U. S. for a week of rehearsals and the actual telecast which wil originate at the NBC color studios in Burbank. The acts will be interlaced with commentary by Shirley MacLaine and a male star, tentatively David Niven or Robert Cummings.

Back on the classic side, Columbia U. professor and playwright Maurice Valency is here investigating the possibility of bringing bunraku puppets to Broadway. Having been stimulated by lectures on the subject by a Japanese student, he is looking into bunraku potential while here on a Ford Foundation mission.

Valency feels that Broadway intellect and curiosity would absorb this esoteric dramatic form. He sees it as being suitable for a short run at an intimate Broadway house with a tv shot and a tour following. The "Garry Moore Show" has already expressed interest. After watching a bunraku appearance on tv from Tokyo, Valency felt that with a humorous and gifted English-language narrator, bunraku has commercial possibilities.

Adapter of the current Lunt-Fontanne hit, "The Visit," Valency would do the scripting if the venture materializes. He reps several Broadway producers who would back the project if he gives the word. Valency is now ogling the puppets at their home base at the Bunraku-za in Osaka.

three years) on charges that he had committed a "gross violation of censorship rules." Essoyan had done occasional broadcasts to fill in for this NBC correspondent.

The viruses particularly hit William Jordan of the N.Y. Times who was forced to leave for Helsinki, Finland, to seek appropriate medical attention. Also briefly out of action was Howard Sochurek, Life photographer, after a trip in the remote Central Asian region of the U.S.S.R.

The 'El' With It!

Speaking of television, Moscow tv has subtle ways of getting across its "messages" about the U.S. Recently a half-hour documentary film was shown on a congress of architects which had been held during the summer in Moscow. It was attended by leading architects of many nations, including the United States, who discussed their countries' plans for civic improvement. There were Soviet exhibits. The documentary tv showed all this and added a few library film clips of the various citie represented.

A brief scene of New York ran this way: a glimpse of the skyscrapers; a series of shots of crowded Third Avenue buildings with the old elevated trains in the background and full sound of the roar of the 'El'; closeups of the noisy 'El' trains with their clatter on in realistic volume. Then came the "kicker" picture: a woman lying in bed, holding her head, a contorted expression on her face at the sleep-depriving noise of the elevated trains. It looked like the most evocative Anacin commercial.

No one bothered to explain that it's been some years since the "El" has been removed and quiet reigns on Third Avenue.

More TV

In these days of tension between east and west over the crisis in the Formosan straits, a recent tv offering (to quote the television program notes published in the Evening Moscow newspaper) was: "'Alive Forever,' a program on 26 Commissars in Baku murdered by the British in the Civil War."

No Like Gunther's Book

The Russians have finally reviewed John Gunther's book, "Inside Russia Today." To no one's surprise, they don't like it. A review in the Literary Gazette was entitled "Gunther's Crooked Mirror," and described the author's aim this way: "to portray the Soviet Union in as unseemly a light as possible." The Soviet paper complained that Gunther tried to write a detailed book about Russia after having only spent several weeks in the USSR. Gunther was said to write about Marxism-Leninism in vocabulary of comic strips. Examples of what Literary Gazette termed errors in Gunther's book were given:

The emblem of the Moscow Art Theatre was described by Gunther as being a dove. Actually the emblem is a sea gull.

The novel "Young Guards" was described by Gunther as taking place during the Civil War. Actually the scene was laid during World War II.

Bachman's Chi Switch

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Robert Bachman, exec with Alliance Theatres, switched last week to Park Heights Theatre Corp., which plans a 1,200-car suburban ozoner on which construction has just begun. Chief bankroller is exploitation pix distributor Irwin Joseph.

Bachman had been manager of Alliance's midwest drive-in division, overseeing 26 units for the circuit.

Picture Grosses

Balto B.O. Bogs Down But 'Yankees' Good 11G; 'Cat' Nice $10,000, 5th

Baltimore, Sept. 30.

Pix biz took a dip this frame, and exhibs are playing the waiting game, hoping the lull won't last. "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" at the Stanley still is nice in fifth round. "Damn Yankees" at the Century looms good. Others are mild to okay mostly. "Kings Go Forth" in third at the Mayfair shapes oke. "Big Country" looks passable in seventh stanza at the Hipp.

Estimates for This Week

Century (R-F) (3,100; 50-$1.25)—"Damn Yankees" (WB). Good $11,000. Last week, "Street Car Named Desire" (20th) (reissue), $6,500.

Italo Govt. Asked What It Plans Doing to Aid Films Vs. Tele Menace

Rome, Sept. 23.

The Italian government, through the Ministers of Finance, Industry and the Interior, have been formally asked to reveal what it plans to do in defending the Italian film industry from the growing menace of television. Formal plea has been presented in the Italian chamber of deputies by Giuseppe Brusasca, onetime government Undersecretary for Entertainment.

In his petition, Brusasca warns of the dangers facing film production and the creative side of the industry if steps are not taken to curb tele which is merely "a means of transmission."

The deupty asks that the government take rapid steps to alleviate the fiscal burden of the film industry. Also to remove other dated and dangerous controls which run the risk of "irreparably" damaging the Italian film industry.

Bailey, the U.S. Government, or the Baumholder Officers' Club. If Uncle Sam transfers Bailey back to the States, Rogers can bring suit in the U.S. for damages there.

Local reaction is that the court-martial "greatly suprised" the 250 spectators that jammed the court in that Bailey pleaded innocent to the charge of "inflicting grievous bodily harm" on Rogers and was found not guilty on two charges of felonious assault and "conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman." The seven-man, high officers' court overruled defense Major E. M. Chandler's plea for dismissal of all charges because of temporary insanity. Major Bailey had brought two colonels as character witnesses. Dr. George Oswald, of the Baumholder dispensary, testified Rogers "had alcoholic odor" when brought for treatment following the pummeling allegedly inflicted by Bailey, although Rogers testified he doesn't drink or smoke.

Major Bailey claimed Rogers' unit, after having done two previous shows at the EM and NCO Clubs, had been late for the midnight show at the Officers' Club and "had been drinking." Rogers maintained the attack was completely unjustified. (The original VARIETY report, which first broke the story, had it that Major Bailey took Rogers into a side room for the beating; abused him for "being late"; called him "nigger" and other derogatory terms; and that Rogers was taken to the Wiesebaden Air Force Hospital for treatment.)

Sentence of the court-martial is subject to review.

Rogers is remaining in Germany to start his civil action and is also slated for an appearance Oct. 11 on the Hessischer Rundfunk Television. (His agents in New York, the William Morris office, have some backlogged bookings which will probably be part of Rogers' civil suit damage claims).

The comedian termed the outcome of the trial—the $1,000 fine—"the most disgusting thing that has ever happened to me."

Par Marketeers Gather

Los Angeles, Sept. 30.

Paramount launches third in a series of worldwide marketing-merchandising meets here Thursday (2) when George Weltner, global sales vp, hosts 100 western circuit execs, indie exhibs and press at kickoff luncheon held at Ambassador Hotel. Previous sessions were held in N.Y. and Toronto.

Sidney Deneau, western sales manager, will conduct two-day conclave, arriving today from the east with Weltner and Jerry Pickman, ad-pub-exploitation vp. Among studio execs who will participate in discussions of company's upcoming product, composed of a minimum of 20 multi-million-dollar films, will be Y. Frank Freeman, Jacob H. Karp, D. A. Doran, Bernard Feins, Luigi Luraschi and Herb Steinberg.

Little Intimate Junkets To The Grape

Universal's 'Winelift' Operating Under Military Logistics As Staffers Dedicate Their Stamina

Napa, Cal., Sept. 30

Universal is using a new publicity gimmick on its biggest-budget production, the $3,500,000 "This Earth Is Mine."

Henry King is shooting on location in the Napa Valley—wine capital of the U.S.—for six weeks and studio has devised system of "individualized junkets" to get full coverage for the picture.

Instead of bringing 40 to 50 newsmen and magazine reps from New York and Los Angeles en masse, Universal is bringing them in by twos and threes all through six-week location period.

This has resulted in a headache for the location publicity man, Fred Banker, and his assistant, Mike Baumohl, not to mention the Frisco exploitation man, Mike Vogel, and Jack Diamond and Harry Niemeyer in Los Angeles and Phil Gerard in New York.

But Universal staff, convinced that barrage of publicity is necessary from the time shooting started early this month until release next July, figures small, continuous junkets will pay off.

Logistics of junkets involve:

(1) Sending actor Alberto Morin, dressed as a sommelier, to five dozen writers in Los Angeles and New York to pour an iced glass of champagne and to deliver junket invitation personally;

(2) Follow-up phone calls to each writer to set a definite date;

(3) Delivery of four bottles of still wine, with round-trip air tickets to Frisco attached;

(4) Picking up writers in publicity limousine at Frisco Airport and chauffeuring them north to Casa Lu-Al Motel, 50 miles north of Frisco and a mile outside Napa;

(5) Putting writers up at motel—80% taken over by Universal—and then taking them another 25 miles into vineyards where Henry King is shooting;

(6) Arranging valley winery tour—premium wineries, Charles Krug, Inglenook, Beaulieu, Schramsberg and Louis Martini are all working with studio;

(7) Shipping writers back to Frisco and home bases after two or three-day stay.

Whole thing is called "Operation Winelift" and Banker says it isn't unusual to put a pair of writers on a 9 a.m. plane bound for New York and walk a few yards to pick up another pair of writers in on the 9:05 a.m. plane from Los Angeles.

Each tour gets full-dress treatment—last weekend, for instance, U's eastern publicity manager, Gerard, escorted Ed Miller of Seventeen, Florence Sommer of Redbook and Mark Nichols of Coronet in from New York.

U feeling is that this picture, scripted by Casey Robinson and coproduced by Robinson and Claude Heilman, marks a definite turning point in company policy. Idea is that only a dozen films a year, half of them big budget and other half somehow unusual, will be produced henceforth instead of three dozen programmers.

But, says Banker, "we can't afford to shoot a picture and then forget about it until it's in release . . . we have to have a consistent, long-range campaign and that's what we're getting here."

Total publicity budget for these six weeks may run as high as $75,000, and that's just a starter—film is on a 12-week shooting schedule with last half to be done at studio.

Among those who've already had individualized junkets are:

Norman Siegal, Photoplay; Dave Zeitlin, Life; Stan Gordon, Look; Tom Wood, N.Y. Herald Tribune; Erskine Johnson, NEA; Betty Voigt, Newsweek; Dean Gauchey, legman for Harrison Carroll; Paine Knickerbocker, repping N. Y. Times; Louis Wolf, Chicago Tribune.

Booked for current or future junkets are:

Neil Rau, repping Louella Parsons; Nelson Hughes, repping Hedda Hopper; Rick DuBrow, UPI; Larry Barbier and Don Ornitz, Globe Photos; Lize Wilson, American Weekly; Pat Campbell, Motion Picture; Peer Oppenheimer, Family Weekly; Lowell Redelings and Len Boyd, Hollywood Citizen-News; Harold Heffernan, NANA; Nat Dallinger, King Features; Simon Bourgin, Newsweek; Ruth Waterbury, Cosmopolitan; Herb Stein, Triangle Publications; Sara Salzer, Seventeen; A. M. Colegrove Scripps-Howard; Hal Boyle, AP.

U has grabbed considerable space in Frisco and other Northern California dailies, figures on bringing in as many of what it calls "key people" as possible in preparation for months-long campaign. Picture, which centers on a Napa Valley wine-making family and is based on Alice Tisdale Hobart's novel, 'The Cup and the Sword," also has fervent co-operation of California Wine Institute and Wine Advisory Board.

Shipman & King Profits Dip Sharply in Line With Less British Filmgoing

London, Sept. 23.

A profit slash of $103,000 for the year is reported by Shipman & King Cinemas, which operates over 40 picture theatres in the Home Counties. Profit recorded this year was $308,000 against over $411,000 in the previous year.

Brian Manning, company chairman, told stockholders that the accounts reflected the general downward trend in admissions throughout the country. But he added that somewhat better financial results during the five months since the close of the year gave some encouragement for the future. The board was confident, he said, that given complete freedom from restrictive taxation, the industry could continue to play its important part in the field of public entertainment and meet the challenge of its competitors.

One of the essentials for survival of the cinema, Manning emphasized, was an efficient British film production industry, and British films of the quality expected by the public could only be made successfully if a sound domestic market was made available. This could only be achieved by the abolition of admissions tax.

ceived reports that Germany, in particular, is spurting ahead in developing the stereo market. Europe, he pointed out, is particularly ripe for the stereo system because the monaural hi-fi biz is comparatively new there and it's likely that consumers interested in new equipment will skip over the monaural system directly to stereo rigs. Marek also said that the large rooms which are typical of European homes are also ideally suitable for stereo sound.

Even in Japan, Marek stated, stereo is making strong inroads. One of the first segments of the overseas market to be influenced by stereo is the American Armed Forces. Inquiries about stereo disks have been rising steadily on the U.S. posts and once machines are generally available, the sales upbeat can be expected.

Marek will be in Japan for several weeks conferring with execs of Nipponese Victor, an independent affiliate of RCA Victor. He will study the sales of U.S. disks in the Far East and discuss methods of further stimulating biz in this area.

Biz-Still-Alive Godspeed Theme Of WB's Smith

Albany, Sept. 30.

The going recently has been rugged in the distribution end of motion pictures, but sentiment still holds sway—as demonstrated by an attendance of 80 at a farewell dinner in the Sheraton-Ten Eyck Hotel last week for Ray Smith, recently retired after 28 years as branch manager for Warners. The turnout was one of the largest in recent years, for such an affair.

Kallet Theatres, of Oneida, had Sidney Kallet and Sam Le Balbo as its representatives; Schine Circuit, of Gloversville, sent four men, the delegation being headed by Bernard Diamond, a speaker, and including William Kraemer, Chris Pope and Dick Dickerson.

Don Wilson, of the Border Drive-in at Chazy, was also on hand to voice his regard for Smith, who sold for Fox, Universal and RKO before joining WB. Even far-away Binghamton had two exhibitors present: Leonard Kaufman and Norman Pearlman.

Ralph Ianuzzi, Warner Eastern division manager and Smith's former boss, attended with Ernest Sands, New York branch chief. Harry Rogovin, Columbia district manager, from Boston, likewise showed.

George Thornton, Saugerties exhibitor, served as toastmaster.

Capping the gay-but-sad proceedings was an address by Smith in which he not only praised Warner Bros., but also made a strong pitch for its new product.

Ed Susse, MGM resident manager, served as chairman. Thornton, John Gardner, of the Glens Drive-in, Glens Falls, Joe Miller, operator of Menands Drive-in and one-time Columbia branch manager, and Clayton Eastman, 20th Century-Fox local chief, were others on the committee.

WB Further 'Restores' Albany

Film Row There Believes Closing in March Created More Costs Than It Cut

Albany, Sept. 30.

There was joy and satisfaction on Film Row here last week; Warner Bros. Distributing Corp. had further reversed its March 28 action in closing the Albany exchange, was hiring more people, as well as re-equipping the office. Bookings and billings were being returned from New York, and the local operation began to approach the full-exchange level at which it had so long been conducted.

Two changes that had been made, however, stuck. A sales representative, Ed Segal, who recently was transferred here from the Syracuse zone, to replace Ray Smith (now retired), continued to be the lone Warner man on the road. And Clark Service remained as inspecting and shipping agents.

There were many assertions—none official—that the original move had been a serious mistake. Almost from the day in March that the WB branch office closed its doors, and even after they were reopened in early June, with a three-person staff, billings had become somewhat fouled up in New York. Situation was taking money away from the Warner treasury.

Mrs. Carrie Rodgers, manager's secretary for many years, has returned to the fold—she had been vacationing in Florida. Mrs. Lillian Buschofsky, with 10 years' service at Metro, most recently as assistant cashier, resigned to become cashier for WB. Mrs. Jennie Nash was hired as a biller.

Remaining at posts they took when WB relighted the exchange last June were: James Evans, booker; Mrs. Nancy Di Sorrento, booking clerk (she had been with the company seven years).

Evans, head shipper at Paramount for more than 25 years before his retirement, joined WB as a date-setter three years ago. He was pinkslipped in March; had just gone to work for Clark Service when an opening re-appeared at Warners.

Par's Four-Approach Test on 'Houseboat'; Result: All-Angles-of-Appeal Fused

Combine all the elements of a film production in the advertising campaign—that's the best way. At least, this is the way Paramount found things with its four different approaches with "Houseboat," Cary Grant-Sophia Loren costarrer.

Company played the picture in four Michigan situations, each with different press insertions and radio copy. One played up the family angles as concerning Grant and his three children, second hit the Grant-Loren romance, third underscored the comedy and the fourth was the combination of the first three.

The combo idea, as tried at the State Theatre, Kalamazoo, won out. In the first three days (Friday-Sunday) the picture grossed $8,400. Par measured the returns in comparison with Warners' "Indiscreet" (Grant and Ingrid Bergman) which reportedly took in slightly over $6,000 in a full week.

Par gauged "Boat" against "Indiscreet" in the three other Michigan situations—in Jackson, Ann Arbor and Battle Creek—and "Boat" was ahead in all three. But the Kalamazoo outing proved best of all and the campaign in this city is the one which is to be used nationally.

Par spotters noted that the Kalamazoo run brought out more of the all-around family-type audience, meaning kids with parents, etc. This was not so noticeable at the other locations.

"Boat" will be opened in Philadelphia and Washington in October.

Wave-Borne or Cable-Carried If It's Toll Harris Agin It; Fights Skiatron

Washington, Sept. 30.

The top Congressional tollvision investigator, Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.), today (Tues.) revealed that he plans to probe Skiatron's effort to sew up telecasts of games by Los Angeles and San Francisco baseball and football teams for closed-circuit feeds for fees.

Harris told VARIETY that no matter what Skiatron may call it, he calls it pay-tv. And, he said, Congress should be informed on what is going on because only Congress can change the law.

The Arkansas Congressman understands that Skiatron's deal, using the lines of telephone companies to put Los Angeles Dodgers and Rams and San Francisco Giants and Forty-Niners games on a closed circuit, to be "bought" by viewers in their own homes, is, as the law now stands, outside the jurisdiction of the Federal Communications Commission.

His proposed airing of the situation before Congress is aimed at collecting the facts as Congress can —if it wants—make such a practice illegal by passing a new law. The implication is that he is receptive to offering a bill along that line.

Harris said the Skiatron situation will be aired when the House Commerce Committee, which Harris serves as chairman, takes up the general subject of tollvision again—for a "showdown" this time. These hearings will "definiteiy" be the first order of committee business in January, he said, if not before. They could possibly start in December, he said.

Harris showed letters he wrote a week ago to Skiatron, the Giants, the Dodgers, the Rams, the 49ers, New York Telephone, Jersey Bell and Pacific Telephone.

The identical letters asked for all the facts from each "with regard to your participating in any commitments, negotiations or plans relating to the operation of subscription television broadcast operations or closed-circuit pay television operations."

Harris also "threw a scare" into the sports clubs in a separate prepared statement which noted his strong support earlier this year of a bill to exempt professional team sports from the provisions of anti-trust laws, a bill which missed enactment in 1958.

He added this verbally-raised political fist: "Plans of baseball or football clubs to televise their games on a subscription basis should certainly be taken into consideration when Congress (is) called upon during the next session to give consideration to such legislation."

Harris pointed out that FCC, at his request, has postponed any definite decision on pay tv until his committee has more time to explore the subject next year. The issue of to fee or not to fee tv is certain to emerge in bill form from his committee early in the new Congress. Harris will be there then for certain; he has no Republican opponent in Arkansas in November, not that it would matter anyway in his Democratic state.

His own position is openly anti-feevee.

In his statement about the Skiatron, et al, letters, Harris declared: "Subscription television limits the viewing of major sports events and other programs to those who are willing and able to pay. This constitutes a major departure from our present system of 'free' broadcasting. It does not matter whether subscription operations utilize radio waves or wire (telephone) circuits for this purpose. The principle involved and the effect are the same."

700-DATE SATURATION FOR 'MAN OF WEST'

"Man of the West," Walter M. Mirisch production for United Artists, has been set for a 700-date saturation booking next month, the biggest opening for a pic in UA's history, according to distribution v.p. William J. Heineman.

Booking for the pic, which stars Gary Cooper and Julie London, blankets the 33 exchange areas in the U.S. and Canada.

Films (Not Legit) To Escape Chi's 3% Ticket Tax

Chicago, Sept. 30.

An overdue citizen's committee report urging modification of Chicago's 3% amusement tax finally reached the city council last week (25) with the personal blessing of Mayor Richard J. Daley. Its recommendation — elimination of the admission impost on the first 90c of every picture house ticket— went to the finance committee, with the possibility it may reach the full council by the next meeting, Oct. 8.

Unaffected by the report, and presumably any legislation that results, are legits and other entertainments.

There's scant doubt the filmeries will get the relief for which they've long pleaded, what with Daley in their corner. A spur to action is that theatre shutdowns mean loss of city revenue from real estate taxes, although it's noted granting a reduction to exhibs will mean a loss to Chi of around $500,000 per. No one knows how this will be offset, the mayor pointing out that it's up to the council to find ways to make it up.

Daley appointed the fact-finding panel early this year. Its verdict was returned in April, but the mayor suggested the committee beef it up before offering it to the aldermen. Its delay till now probably was due to the busy schedule of committee chief Patrick H. Hoy, prez of the Ambassador and Sherman Hotels here.

Chief beneficiaries from the tax reduction will be the long-suffering nabe houses. One closed a fortnight ago, and another folds this Friday (2), leaving the Windy City with around 160 theatres. Once there were well over 300, but the number began to dwindle in 1948, with the advent of both tv and the 3% levy. If the council goes with the report, Chi will be following the lead of New York and other cities which have recently adopted tax relief for theatremen.

Century Circuit Inc., New York chain with headquarters in Queens Village, N.Y., last week disclosed the election of Norman J. Ayers to its board.

'La Parisienne's' Non-Art Dates, First for Bardot, A Select Wow to Svensk

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.

A Bardot picture, "La Parisienne," has hit the local neighborhood non-art subsequent-run houses for the first time and en masse.

Picture, which ran five weeks downtown at the 400-seat World to big business, went into all of the city's 10 uptown non-art theatres in the earliest subsequent-run clearance slot, 28 days, day and date, and it has been playdated for a slough of the remaining later slotted neighborhood theatres

The non-art theatres passed up "And God Created Woman," probably because of its Legion of Decency condemnation, but it cleaned up at the uptown art houses after having run six weeks downtown to smash grosses. Now, however, they apparently felt it was necessary to try to cash in on all of the word-of-mouth and other notoriety Bardot has been enjoying here, "La Parisienne" not being Legion-condemned.

Talk of the industry here is the fact that "And God Created Woman" has gone into its 12th week at the neighborhood Avalon, breaking all records by far for any picture in a local uptown theatre. Making this all the more remarkable is the fact that "And God Created Woman" had long runs previously in three other local neighborhood "art" houses after its downtown firstrun.

Politician Sues To Stop Cabling Of Football

Detroit, Sept. 30.

A Michigan legislator, a long-time foe of "pay-as-you-see-television" has obtained a temporary injunction in Wayne County Circuit Court against a closed-circuit theatre telecast of the Michigan State-Michigan football game Saturday (4).

State Rep. John J. Fitzpatrick, a Detroit Democrat, named as defendants the State Board of Agriculture, governing group at Michigan State; the U. of M.'s Board of Regents and three metropolitan Detroit theatres, the Fox, Royal and Wyandotte.

Judge Theodore Bohn issued an order restraining further sale of tickets or further promotion. Show cause hearing was set for this Thursday (2).

Fitzpatrick and a group of followers picketed the Michigan theatre in 1950 when U. of M. games were large-screened there. In 1951, he was instrumental in getting the State Legislature to pass a law prohibiting state institutions (both Michigan State and U. of M. are) from telecasting events on a closed circuit unless they also are made available on home receivers. Fitzpatrick said his present action stem from a desire to have the Michigan State-Michigan game shown on home receivers.

Sam Jaffe Back as Producer

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

After 24 years of agenting the Hollywood scene, Sam Jaffe, who recently dissolved his partnership with Charles Feldman's Famous Artists, is returning to film production, in which he started in 1920 as studio manager for Mayer-Schulberg Productions.

Jaffe, with his own coin, has purchased unpublished novel by Richard Powell for $175,000 for indie production. Terms also call for 6% of gross and additional $15,000 if it selected as a Book-of-the-Month Club entry. Scribner's will publish tome next Spring, as follow-up to Powell's "The Philadelphian," upcoming Warner Bros. production.

Foes of Tollvision Keep Strewing Its Path With Banana Peels

San Francisco, Sept. 30.

San Francisco's civic supervisors have taken under consideration a resolution to provide a license tax on tollvision "if the telephone company prevails in its position that it does not need a city franchise."

Supervisor James Leo Halley introduced the "standby" ordinance which would permit the city to collect a business license fee or franchise tax from any closed-circuit firm. Halley candidly admitted the ordinance was aimed at Skiatron.

The resolution followed by one day a call of California Assemblyman Louis Francis, of San Mateo, for the State Public Utilities Commission to deny approval of an engineering study contract between Skiatron and the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. until the State Legislature has a chance to meet.

Skiatron claims it's reached a "firm" agreement with the PT&T on establishing home—toll service here. The phone company, however, says it's "undecided."

Francis, chairman of a legislative subcommittee which investigated pay-see last year, said State legislation was "imperative and urgent" to avoid the possibility that toll might deprive viewers of present advertising-paid programming. He wrote C. Lyn Fox, chairman of the State Public Utilities Commission, that toll presents "many complexities, ramifications and dangers."

Halley's proposed ordinance does not establish city fees but, if passed, would require any tollvision company to report its gross and net to the Frisco tax collector, who would be authorized to established a license fee. Halley said he was fearful Skiatron might try to sidestep the city and added: "I want this to be ready in case other things fail."

Greenberg Rises in West

Fred Greenberg, Los Angeles branch head for Warner Bros., has been named to succeed Roy Haines as the company's western division sales manager.

Joseph Sarfaty, Greenberg's assistant, will succeed Greenberg at the L.A. branch.

Ozoners' Lessons: Fast-Time, Cold, Batter the B.O.

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.

What has been, with a few exceptions, a poor season for most of this territory's small-town drive-in theatres, has ended, the wholesale shutterings having started last week.

However, at the same time, a check indicates that many of the 13 Twin Cities area ozoners found the boxoffice going better than a year ago and will wind up well in the black. Despite temperatures in the low 30's most of these outdoor theatres still haven't halted operations.

Daylight saving time is blamed by many of the small-town ozoner operators for their boxoffice troubles. In Minnesota and in North Dakota towns bordering this state it was the fast time's second summer and the boys feel that the hurtful impact increased, if anything.

Even before DST, however, most small-town ozoners in this area had a difficult struggle to make both ends meet, according to exchange managers here. The season for most of the ozoners is only of about four month's duration and even during that time there are numerous cold nights. Also, apparently, the outdoor stands need populous surroundings.

This year has been notable for the dearth of new outdoor theatre construction. Whereas in previous years the ozoners sprung up like mushrooms, the 1958 fresh entries numbered only three, two of which had been started in 1957 and with construction delayed in one instance.

GAS LEAK EMPTIES THEATRE

Chicago, Sept. 30.

A leaky gas refrigerator in the cellar chased some 200 patrons from the Hyde Park Theatre, nabe indie. They filed back—10 minutes later after unit was repaired.

On the screen: "Raising a Riot."

'TIN ROOF' DETOURS OTHER METRO PRODUCT

Pittsburgh, Sept. 30.

Extended run of "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" at Penn, which plays all of the MGM product here, has sent a flock of other Metro pictures into other downtown houses. Fulton has already had "Dunkirk," Harris gets "Andy Hardy Comes Home" and pop-price showing of "Gigi," with a 10-week road-show engagement at the Warner already behind it, will wind up at the Stanley. In addition, Brigitte Bardot's "La Parisienne," which had been booked to follow "Cat" at Penn, goes to Stanley, too.

"Cat" is now in its fifth week at Penn, and house's future log has been piling up. Elizabeth Taylor starrer still doing well enough to continue but has to get out today (Tues.) to give Rex Harrison-Kay Kendall "Reluctant Debutante" at least nine days before the locked booking on "The Big Country" Oct. 9. Latter can't be pushed back because Gregory Peck is coming here in person to kick off the tri-state premiere of the deluxe Western.

Gable in Par Stable

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Clark Gable inked a two-pix deal with Paramount, first to roll in 1959 and second following year. Neither story property yet has been selected.

Actor, who previously did "Teacher's Pet" for Perlberg-Seaton, will do a second for producers late this year at Paramount, "But Not for Me." Walter Lang will direct film which also costars Carroll Baker, Lilli Palmer and Lee J. Cobb.

Theatremen Widen Their Opposition; Cable, Too, Like Wave, The 'Enemy'

Strategy to deal with pay-as-you-see television, particularly the closed-circuit variety, will be one of the main topics at the Theatre Owners of America convention agenda in Miami next month.

Feeling is that while it'll be possible to ram through legislation aimed at outlawing over-the-air transmission of tollcasts, the closed-circuit issue could best be handled by a law which would hand control over the cable offerings to the various states. Exhibitors frankly hope that, on that level, they are influential enough to block progress possibly via state control of various aspects such as rates.

There was a time, when broadcast pay-tv was still an immediate feasibility, when exhibs more or less ignored the cable aspects, feeling that the closed-circuit approach would be impractical in that it'd be too costly. Situation has changed now, with Federal Communications Commission hesitancy driving the pay-tv proponents into the cable field, where some progress has been made.

Some years back, at a press confab at TOA, the view was expressed that exhibs had no quarrel with closed-circut video. This seemed logical in the practice-what-you-preach vein since the theatres appeared interested in the theatre television. Argument at the time was that over-the-air transmission gave an "unfair advantage" to the pay-tv group, whereas cable transmission simply constitute fair competition. This view has undergone some change in ratio to theatremen's concern over the possible practicality of closed-circut tollcasting.

PUBLIC VOTES 'NO' ON QUIZZES

They Said It Couldn't Be Done

Probably the most unique sale in broadcasting this season—either in radio or television—is the six-installment CBS Radio documentary series "The Hidden Revolution," which premieres on Oct. 22 with Ed Murrow narrating the series, being underwritten by Nationwide Insurance Co. Outfit is splurging to the tune of $200,000 for the series of documentaries, which will teeoff in full hour form, with the remaining to be done as half-hour entries.

It's been more years than any network cares to remember since a documentary series has been brought in under commercial auspices, and unique aspect of "Hidden Revolution," out of Irving Gitlin's Public Affairs Division, is that the project came into being because Nationwide Insurance asked CBS to develop a series of uninhibited mood and significant depth.

Country's foremost atomic scientists, sociologists, educational leaders and government heads will participate in the series. They include Admiral Rickover, General Twining, Advance Research Projects Director Roy Johnson, Secretary of Interior Fred A. Seaton, John Kenneth Gailbraith and others.

After the Oct. 22 preem, the series will be of half-hour duration with the following theme breakdown:

Nov. 19: "Freedom's Last Stand," dealing with challenges to democracy and liberty in nuclear age; Dec. 17: "The 20-Hour Week."; Jan. 21: "My Friend, My Enemy," examination of the changes in human relations brought about by "The Hidden Revolution"; Feb. 18: "The Empty Schoolhouse," study of new needs and problems of education, and March 18: "The Day Called X," probing of war or peace.

"Hidden Revolution" will attempt to reflect the public relations approach of the sponsor, a comparatively young insurance company but fourth largest in one field, namely automobiles. With some 3,000,000 policy holders regularly contacted by field agents, Nationwide expects to start series with a substantial "pre-sold" audience for the series.

Gitlin will handle overall supervision of "The Hidden Revolution." James Fleming will be executive producer in association with Arthur Rabin and Richard Siemanowski.

Best Laid Plans of CBS Go Awry In Projecting Shows Year Ahead

Approximately one year ago, at the start of the '57-'58 season, CBS-TV stuck out its chest, its money and possibly its neck by proudly proclaiming that the network had no less than a dozen programming projects on tap for the '58-'59 season. Tallying time has come around and the new motto at the web might well be "don't plan too far ahead, for only one of the programs the network counted on for this fall has panned out.

Of the brand new programs to be presented this fall only "Pursuit," a live one-hour detective series to be presented Wednesday at 8, will be aired. None of the other programs CBS counted on for this season made the grade for one reason or another, most of the skeins failing to attract sponsor attention.

The programs which didn't materialize are "The World of White," Sydney Kingsley's series, the pilot having been shot last fall and 13 scripts completed; Nat Hiken's "The Magnificent Montague," pilot shown around the ad agencies this fall; Howard Erskine's "Rendezvous" anthology, of which the web gave the go-ahead sign for 13 films; a series titled "Front Office," in which Ralph Bellamy was slated to play the lead role and two additional holdover pilots, "Nancy Drew," and what was then titled "21st Precinct."

Two of the CBS programs made

Winston Salem's 'NW Passage' Buy

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Winston Salem ciggies has bought alternate sponsorship on 10 "Northwest Passage" vidfilms, thus giving Metro TV vidseries on NBC-TV full sponsorship. RCA and Winston Salem will split the tab on the series henceforth.

Meanwhile, studio tv production chief Richard Maibaum has just finished supervision of connectives for a trio of the vid segs to be release abroad as a theatrical film. Metro spent $260,000 more on the series than it receives from NBC-TV, because it was lensed in color. However, studio expects to recoup that coin and more via the release of the telescoped vidpix in the foreign market.

BBC-TV Opera Version Of 'Tale of 2 Cities'

London, Sept. 30.

A two-hour production of an operatic version of Charles Dickens' "A Tale Of Two Cities" will be aired by BBC-TV on Thursday (2) evening.

The opera, with libretto by Cedric Cliffe and music by Arthur Benjamin, had its first stage production by the New Opera Co. last year. It has 23 featured parts plus a large chorus and extras. Music will be played by the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra and the program will be produced by Rudolph Cartier.

'Yoder's Raiders' Still Raise Havoc With Live Shows

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Lloyd Yoder and his Philadelphia raiders have struck again at WMAQ-WNBQ. This time they felled a pair of live cross-the-board entries in the noon hour, "Bingo" and the kidshow "Commander 5," both of which had been installed last spring by the Jules Herbuveaux regime. Elected to replace the extirpated shows are a pair of half hour vidpix, "It's a Great Life" and an anthology series.

This is the second major onset of the former Philly NBC veep and his boys since they marched in on the Chi o&os less than a month ago. In their programming pogrom there have been some comparatively minor purges too, such as the lopping off of veteran newscaster Jack Angell and the switching of several radio pubaffairs opuses from weekends to weeknights to make added room for the saleable "Chicago Monitor."

Latest programming assault, of the two video daytimers, was made boldly in the face of a generally bad local press resulting from the Yoder clan's rub out of the five-minute nightly contributions of Dorsey Connors, Norm Barry and Clifton Utley. Unhappy sentiment

SCORECARD ON NEW SEASON

By GEORGE ROSEN

The first real measurement of the network quizzes since the initial outbreak of the scandal is now available, based on rating returns of the new season. At the time the scandal broke, it's recalled, the quiz packagers (and at least one network) went on record as saying that the public would be the judge. The returns are now coming in—and the public has voted an emphatic "no."

Exhibit A: NBC-TV's "Twenty-One," which had slipped from 6th to 35th place in the early September Nielsens, hit its lowest score to date in its switchover last week to Thursday night. Against reruns of the ABC's "Real McCoys" and the CBS summer replacement "Verdict Is Yours" entry, its 11.2 Trendex was swamped by "McCoy's" 20.0 and just managed to match the CBS summer filler.

Exhibit B: Without even any network competition in its Saturday night 10:30 to 11 slot, NBC-TV's "Brains and Brawn" could only muster an 8.0 Trendex first time out and a 9.0 on the second week. On the other hand, the rival WCBS-TV in the New York market, with a half-hour syndicated vidpix entry, ran off with an 18.7 rating.

Exhibit C: "Price Is Right" on NBC, which had been flirting with the Top 10 contenders all summer, dropped to 16th position in the new September Nielsens. It now has the distinction of being the highest Nielsen-rated quizzer on tv, but interesting to note is that not a single quiz program shows up among the Top 15 Nielsen entries. (First time that's happened since "$64,000 Question" made it big.)

Exhibit D: "$64,000 Question" returned to CBS-TV a couple Sundays back, moving into the Sunday night at 10 period formerly occupied by the now-axed "$64,000 Challenge." First time out it took a Trendex beating from a film anthology rerun series ("Decision") on NBC-TV, latter snaring a 23.5 as opposed to the quizzer's 17.4 And this despite the fact that "$64,000 Question" enjoyed an enviable lead-in with the Alfred Hitchcock series. (Return of Loretta Young to the 10 o'clock berth, always a fave with NBC audiences, is expected to widen the gap further.)

Exhibit E: NBC's "Tic Tac Dough," after a longtime boast of 40.0 share of audience in its 7:30 evening berth, dwindled to a 28.0 share.

There's no denying that the scandal has soured the audiences on money shows, hence the Trendex-accented repudiation. (That's why CBS has reportedly been having some secret huddles on the advisability of doing away with all quizzers.) If NBC is having more than its share of discomfiture, it's because so much sponsor coin (in the aggregate representing some $18,000,000 in total annual billings) is riding with money shows on that network. Out of the Barry & Enright-created stable alone, in addition to "Twenty-One," there's "Tic Tac Dough," both as daytime and nighttime fare, and "Concentration." There's a nearly $10,000,000 sponsor commitment on the daytime "Tic Tac" and "Concentration" alone, and triggering the distress is the fact that such national clients as General Foods and Procter & Gamble (who run fast from anything even remotely suggesting skulduggery) are involved.

ZSA ZSA'S 15G FOR GILLETTE BLURBS

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Gillette has added Zsa Zsa Gabor to its pitching battery for vidblurbs during upcoming World Series telecasts over NBC-TV. She joins Bob Hope, John Wayne and Rock Hudson, previously signed for blurb-beaming.

Actress reportedly will be paid in excess of $15,000 for season.

Morris Plan (Wm., That Is) Into '58-'59 TV Season With Whopping 27-Show Scorecard for New Mark

By JACK HELLMAN

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Topping the previous high mark in its 60-year history of talent management and tv package sales, the William Morris agency will have more shows riding the networks under its sales aegis this season than any competing outfit. The margain of superiority is so marked that the second best sales record is far distant numerically.

Agency's sales record for the season is 12 new shows. Together with the holdovers from last season, the company will be represented by 27 shows, believed to be unparalleled in tv history. For the record, here are the new programs that will carry the Morris sales stamp:

Ann Sothern Show, "Steve Canyon," "The Rifleman," "Wanted-Dead or Alive," "Further Adventures of Ellery Queen," "Brains and Brawn," "Love and Marriage," "The Invisible Man," Milton Berle Show, Peter Lind Hayes and Mary Healey, Firestone Hour, "Mother's Day." In this foregoing list there may be instances of half or no sales but Morris has the order from the network. In syndication are the Morris-sold "Charlie Chan," "Silent Service" and "Trader Horn."

To fill out the list of 27 shows riding out the season in the WM silks must be added those continuing from last or previous seasons, many of them re-sales. Said a Morrisman, "many shows are not just carryovers. The sponsor or his agency must be sold all over again." The renewals comprise Danny Thomas, "Wyatt Earp," "The Real McCoys," Loretta Young, Groucho Marx, "Trackdown," "December Bride," Gale Storm, "The

Groucho's 'Oucho'

If last week's initial Trendex returns on the new season are indicative of a viewing patteren, it looks like Groucho Marx's "You Bet Your Life" will have its hands full this season as result of the show's shift to the Thursday 10 p.m. slot.

CBS-TV's "The Plot to Kill Stalin" (Playhouse 90) outpointed Groucho 18.6 to 18.1 for the 10 to 10:30 period, while in the previous (9:30) half-hour, "Playhouse registered a fat 22.2 as opposed to "Buckskin's" 16.0. Interesting aspect here is that "Buckskin," prior to the last week's Playhouse 90" starter, had been grabbing off Top 10 tallies.

Grey Agcy. Rides Out a Dilemma In 'Pursuit' TV Buy

Grey agency found itself on the horns of a dilemma last week in resolving what to do with its Mennen tv biz (totalling some $3,000,000 in annual billings). Coin was up for grabs when the client decided to pull out of the ABC-TV fights.

Grey is the agency on the NBC account, which seemed to give that network a running start in pitching for the biz. NBC was particualrly anxious to embrace Mennen sponsorship on either (or both) of two hourlong entries, the Friday night "Ellery Queen" and the Saturday night "Cimarron City." It was an attractive offer, involving a sizable NBC contribution on program costs.

But CBS-TV was in there pitching, too, with its new 60-minute "Pursuit" series, which comprises many of the producer-director components of the former "Climax" series and which is budgeted at $60,000 per.

Herb Straus, exec veepee of Grey, Al Hollander, tv-radio chieftain of the agency, and Len Colson, ad director of Mennen, wrestled with the problem and, despite the NBC-Grey allegiance, threw in their lot with the CBS entry, pacting for alternate-week full hour. Program strength (at least on paper) of "Pursuit" was said to be a factor in the decision.

Unhappy With Billing, Jane Powell Scrams Eddie Fisher's Teeoff

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Jane Powell, who was to have guested on Eddie Fisher's seasonal opener on NBC-TV tonight (Tues.) bowed off the show a few days before it went on as the result of a billing clash with Jerry Lewis. NBC-TV publicity department had stated her departure was due to "conflicting commitments."

But Miss Powell explained when she was originally signed her contractual billing specified hers would read "special guest star." Later, however, Lewis was signed to guest on the show and he insisted on the billing, "special added attraction."

Singer objected to this on grounds it would make her billing meaningless, and offered to share equal billing with Lewis. Comedian resisted, however, and held out for his "special" billing, so Miss Powell ankled the show on Thursday.

Keeping Up With Trendex Charts

Looks like a battle royal for audience domination between the two "Perrys" (Mason and Como) on the basis of last Saturday's (27) Trendex returns, with only one-tenth of a point separating the two shows in their competing 8 to 8:30 segment. "Perry Mason" hit a 23.4 as opposed to Como's 23.5.

In its earlier (7:30 to 8) period, "Perry Mason" had itself a Trendex ball, snaring a 21.0 as compared with Dick Clark's "American Bandstand" on ABC (13.3) and NBC's "People Are Funny" (11.0).

On Friday, Phil Silvers edged out "M Squad," 18.2 to 17.6. On Sunday it was Steve Allen's turn to rule the Trendex roost, Allen getting an average of 22.0 for the full hour as against Sulivan's 18.2. On the other hand, "Maverick" trounced them both at 8 to 8:30 with a 25.8.

Await Texaco Decision On 'Friars Man of Hour'

Texaco officials appear to be just as enthusiastic as CBS execs over the audition show cut last week of CBS-TV's "Friars Club Man of the Hour" and a decision will be forthcoming this week as to whether the company will pick up the tab for the series.

Originally it was designed as a weekly half-hour entry, but based on the 53 minutes of show wrapped up for the audition, it's been changed to a full hour one-a-month entry. It's reported board chairman Bill Paley and other top CBS execs literally flipped when they saw the test runoff. Show is the creation of Lester Gottlieb with Nat Hiken producing and writing.

TV PROBES STRIKE POLITICAL NERVES; PUT ON ICE UNTIL AFTER ELECTIONS

Washington, Sept. 30.

Television probes, the House Harris Investigating Subcommittee has learned the hard way, are political dynamite. So the Congressmen have decided to put away the matches until after election day, Nov. 4.

The conclusion was obvious after two days of talking about rumors and important political names connected with the Pittsburgh channel 4 tv case, which is —and has been for some time— before a federal grand jury here.

The hearings slipped ouf of hand politically for the Democrats. And the subcommittee chairman, Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.), found himself in the position of announcing publicly that one of his investigators had goofed when he cast reflections on the Democratic candidate for governor in Pennsylvania and the chairman of the committee set up to elect Democrats to the U.S. Senate.

Harris, who had previously scheduled the current set of hearings to run through Oct. 3, promptly called them off Sept. 26, announcing there would be no further public probe of tv cases until November. The votes in the Congressional election will have been cast and counted by then.

Republicans on the subcommittee mentioned no objection, because in the name dropping which has been going on, no one knows who might be next.

But it was too seductive an opportunity for the GOP national chairman, Meade Alcorn, to pass. He dictated a statement saying Harris' abrupt termination of hearings on the Pittsburgh channel 4 case was an "attempt to slam the door on this political skeleton." Harris acted, Alcorn said, "under pressure from the Democratic high command." But Alcorn did not mention a Republican angle in the same hearings.

A central figure in the Pittsurgh channel 4 case, at least as far as the subcommittee's study is concerned, is George C. McConnaughey, former Federal Communications Commission chairman and a Republican, now practicing law in Ohio. The subcommittee investigator, Oliver Eastland, reported to the subcommittee during the hearings that he had collected unfounded rumors that: (1) McConnaughey solicited a bride and (2) he accepted a bribe. Both were in connection with Pittsburgh channel 4, an outlet originally sought by five companies and which eventually went to two of them in a

Plymouth Shooting The Works (AM & TV) On Welk Wed. Entry

After two weeks of feeling out radio, first by means of a five-station hookup and then a seven-station tie, Plymouth has decided to buy the full ABC Radio lineup for its Wednesday Lawrence Welk show. Tonight (Wed.) the 7:30-8:30 show will both be seen and heard in 75 markets, although the radio buy includes many more than just tv-and-radio markets.

Plymouth has tried out Welk's music as a "stereophonic sound" in N.Y., Detroit, Chicago, Frisco, L.A., and Washington and Philadelphia were added later. The stereophonic angle enabled viewer-listeners to get the band plunkings in fuller sound through the simultaneous use of tv's FM and radio's AM receivers.

Enlarged radio deal was made by Jack W. Minor, assistant general manager of Plymouth.

On the heels of the Plymouth program buy, ABC Radio inked three sponsors to a Saturday morning show for moppets. In a deal closed Friday (27), Cadence Records, Little Craft Inc. and U.S. Pharmacal bought "The Story Princess," readings by Alene Dalton, and started the program the next day, Saturday, in the 10-10:30 a.m. period. Deal, set for 12 more weeks, marks the first sponsored program the web has had Saturday mornings for over two years.

All-TV Legit Show

With so many tv performers in the George Abbott legit production of "Drink to Me Only" opening tonight (Wed.) at the Adelphi theatre, one wonders who's minding the store down video lane.

Tom Poston, a mainstay of Steve Allen's show, has the lead in the Abbott production. Others are Cameron Prud'homme, who did six years as radio's "David Harum;" Paul Hartman, familiar figure on various networks; Royal Beal, a recurring figure on the Phil Silvers show; John McGiver, ex-"Kraft Theatre;" Georgann Johnson, who played Marge Weskit on "Mr. Peepers;" Jack Guilford, whose rubber face has been seen on many tv shows, and Bert Wood, production stage manager, who is also a frequent broadcaster.

Mack, Whiteside Indictments Jolt Members of FCC

Washington, Sept. 30.

The indictment of Richard A. Mack, former Federal Communications Commission Commissioner, and his Florida pal, Thurman A. Whiteside, shook the FCC top to bottom.

It is obvious that FCC has had a morale problem since the Harris Investigating Subcommittee started probing tv cases. For the conscientious public servant in a high or low job with a quasi-judicial agency, negative publicity creating an adverse, questioning public attitude which casts reflections throughout the Commission is tough to stomach.

The impact of the three-count federal indictments of an ex-Commissioner and his friend, who was interested in the way a FCC decision went, was the severest of all to date.

The indictments of Mack and Whiteside charged bribery and conspiracy to influence, obstruct and impede the administration of law in connection with the Miami tv channel 10 case. The indictment charged that Whiteside corruptly influenced Mack to vote for the grant of the channel to a National Air Lines subsidiary, Public Service Television, Inc.

From Florida, where he is now living in his father's hotel, saying he has been unable to earn any money since his resignation from FCC last March 3 in the wake of sensational hearings before the Harris Subcommittee, Mack declared his innocence of the charges. And he pointedly asked why he was the victim of "crucifixion" when other Commissioners who voted for Public Service have not received similar interrogation. Outsiders wondered if he plans to talk about other Commissioners when the case goes to trial.

Warrants are not being issued, and Mack and Whiteside are expected to appear here voluntarily for arraignment, probably Friday.

Maximum penalty for the charges involved is 10 years in prison and a $15,000 fine.

Robert Tamplin Tapped For 'Hit Parade' Entry

Robert Tamplin has been named associate producer of the new "Hit Parade" show which kicks off on CBS-TV Friday, Oct. 10.

Other backstage personnel being lined up by Perry Lafferty, producer, include Clay Warnick for choral director and Pete Gennaro as choreographer.

Tamplin was with Ed Sullivan for more than three years as assistant to the producer. Warnick was with the Caesar show and [illegible] while Gennaro worked [illegible] Broadway production of "East Side Story."

Adman Bob Foreman's 'Hot Half Hour' Reads Like It's Hot Out of the Headlines

By JO RANSON

The postgraduate curricula of network quiz show behavior, Madison Avenue's fancy two-timing advertising agency patterns, the crafty doctrines of certain tv sponsors, the filmy negligee necromancy of seductive spielers, the cunning cost-per-thousand presentations—all this and considerably more are pitched in the glittering patois of the super-sophisticated gray flannel-suited 15%ers in Robert L. Foreman's novel, "The Hot Half Hour" (Criterion; $3.95).

Obviously, the disclaimer in front of this jazzy saga of video giveaways is as phoney as an announcer's sincerity. When Foreman, head of all the creative services at BBDO, sat down to write this first novel of his, he couldn't possibly invent such conniving characters as Merton Karamaz and Myron Essenger, partners in the House of Karess, leaders in women's fashion, and spenders of some $10,000,000 yearly in various advertising media. Nobody, but nobody, could create such fictitious characters and incidents and when Foreman doth insist that any resemblances are merely coincidental, he's most likely copping the fifth.

Messrs. Karamaz and Essenger are as real as a station break but louder and certainly more villainous in their day-to-day encounters with account executives, package producers and network chieftains. There were and are such thimble-

Major Shifts At CBS O&O In L.A.

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

KNXT general manager Clark George made sweeping staff realignments at the CBS-TV o&o here last week, affecting programming, production, administration and sales. Major appointments were those of Bill Alcine to manager of film programming, with responsibility over all feature and syndicated film shows, and exec producer Don Cook to responsibility over live programming. Both report to program manager Don Hine.

Algerta Hackett, administrative supervisor of the station, was upped to business manager, succeeding Larry Lazarus, who became director of systems and procedures. Floren Thompson becomes assistant business manager and Hal Uplinger replaces him as production coordinator. Uplinger was assistant sports director.

Ford's 500G to Vox Pop 400 'Typical Americans,' Week of Detroit Hoopla

Ford Motor Co. is spending approximately $500,000 to bring 400 typical American citizens from all parts of the country including Alaska to Detroit on Oct. 8 and 9 to make their comments first hand on what's wrong with motor car design and at the same time entertain them with a special Tennessee Ernie Ford NBC-TV show originating from the Henry and Edsel Ford auditorium. The Ford show, ordinarily telecast from Hollywood, will originate from Detroit on this occasion and will be aired Oct. 9.

The George Gallup organization chose the 400 citizens who'll participate in what is known as the first Ford Consumer Conference and will attempt to disprove the charge that Detroit does not consider the needs of American motorists when it comes to motorcar design. In addition to viewing the new Ford models, laymen participating in the voxpop powwow will be given the use of new Ford cars for 30 days for test purposes.

Mary Kelly Exits NBC, Joins Wm. McCaffrey

Mary A. Kelly, after a nine-year stay at NBC and longtime associate producer of "Today," is stepping out to join the William McCaffrey personal management outfit.

Before joining "Today" Miss Kelly was with NBC's "Broadway Open House" and "Colgate Comedy Hour."

Meanwhile, Robert Bendick was named producer of the "Today" show. He starts next Monday (6) when the format of the program changes considerably. Bendick was producer of "Today" from Aug., 1954 to Sept., 1955 when he became a "Wide Wide World" producer. More recently he produced tv programs for Merian C. Cooper Enterprises.

Can't See the Dancin' for The Camera Angles, Bud Yorkin Laments

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Television choreography and dancing has lost much of its freshness and originality because it's become too camera-conscious, in the opinion of producer-director Bud Yorkin. Yorkin, who's producing-directing "An Evening With Fred Astaire," first of two Astaire specs for Chrysler, on NBC-TV Oct. 17, hopes to avoid this pitfall on Astaire's tele debut.

Yorkin has found that too many choreographers worry about the camera angles and the photography instead of concentrating on the creation of good dances, with the result that dancing on television has tended to become stereotyped. "It's the same as a dramatic show," he observes, "the important thing is the story, the script. The technical details are secondary to the story, and any problems can be solved quite easily. Similarly, in television choreography, the important thing is in the creation of the dance. Too many choreographers tend to be influenced by their consideration of 'how will that photograph' instead of how will that dance."

With Astaire and his choreographer, Hermes Pan, Yorkin has taken the position of letting Pan go ahead with creation of his dances without regard to the technical problems. "Once he's finished the dance, then we can make minor technical adjustments for the cameras. The important thing is the dancing itself, and we've departed from the ordinary in giving each dance a beginning, middle and end."

Even where a choreographic

More Freeloading

This week's freeloading by the press, as part of the inevitable fall preem showings, included Phil Silver's buffet dinner in the Burgandy Room of the Hotel Berkshire on Monday (29) with a preview of one of the new programs in the "Bilko" series.

Tomorrow (Thurs.) the landlubbing press will sail aboard a tugboat from the Hudson River with "Tugboat Annie Brennan" as the Elsa Maxwell of the marine brawl. Invite is from TPA, makers of "The Adventures of Tugboat Annie" series and urges the voyagers to be on hand early in order that Annie and Chowderhead Bullwinkle can toot the whistle on time mid the flotsam and jetsam on the Hudson River.

NBC Enlists Top Authors on Series

Greensboro, N.C., Sept. 30.

Nine top American authors have been secured for a series of national network broadcasts entitled "American Ideas in the 20th Century" it was announced at the Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, by Elmer Oettinger, director of the NBC-financed project by the National Association of Education Broadcasters.

Thirty-minute dramatic sketches will be written by Pearl Buck, Gerald Johnson, Paul Green, Richard Adler, Frances Gray Patton; Bernice Kelly Harris, Harry Golden, Kermit Hunter and Betty Smith. Four other authors will be invited to write half-hour plays for radio, Oettinger said. Playwright Paul Green of Chapel Hill is a consultant for the series.

The play will begin in October and will be heard over about 75 NBC stations.

This is the seventh series of sketches to be presented by NBC, and the current series will originate at the Univ. of North Carolina and be produced through the cooperation of the University's Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures.

Oettinger added that talent provided by the Carolina Playmakers will assist with the project.

ABC May Push Specials Pronto; Art Carney's Spec

Discounting the Oldsmobile-Bing Crosby specials this season, ABC-TV may not wait until '59-60—as topper Leonard Goldenson indicated recently—to kick off other specials. Network, which until now has shunned the one-shotters, is peddling an hourlong special starring Art Carney, and sponsor interest has already been reported. ABC is also mulling a special based on the circus and is eyeing as sponsor General Foods, which underwrote a CBS stanza two Xmases ago along the same thematic lines.

Carney show, called "Art Carney Meets Peter and the Wolf," has a story outline finished. McManus, John & Adams, on the market for a one-shot to be done around midseason for Minnesota Mining, is said to have shown interest in the stanza, budgeted at $209,000 time & talent.

'MASQUERADE PARTY' GETS LORILLARD NOD

P. Lorillard after two weeks of hectic searching for a replacement for "$64,000 Challenge," (which fell under a cloud of, suspicion when a contestant claimed he received the answers in a pre-game warmup), has selected "Masquerade Party" as replacement in the Thursday at 10:30 spot on NBC-TV.

"Party" enjoyed a summer run on Mondays at 8:30 on CBS-TV. The Ed Wolf package will preem tomorrow (2) with Bert Parks to host the panel affair. Audrey Meadows has been set as one of the panel members. Program was set via Lennen & Newell, agency for Lorillard. Robert Q. Lewis previously emceed show but he'd have been faced with a program conflict.

OUT-OF-TOWN CRIX BURN UP

The out-of-town (non-New York) tv reviewers aren't taking too well to the idea of allowing Gotham critics to preview shows the day before and publish their notices in advance of the telecast. They've been complaining out loud to CBS and claim that once again they're being treated as "second-class citizens." This is a charge that popped up once before; last winter, to be exact, when the out-of-town tv editors and reviewers complained to NBC chieftain Bob Sarnoff that the N.Y. dailes were getting all the breaks on news releases and that little attention was being paid to the hinterland.

In the case of the Du Pont "Show of the Month" presentation of "Harvey" getting advance reviews last week, the out-of-towners have voiced their displeasure on three counts: (1) not that they favor the idea of advance notices, but it isn't fair to restrict such closed-circuit performances for review purposes to N.Y. critics alone; (2) since some of the Gotham reviewers (not to mention the wire services) are syndicated, a continuation of the practice will result in out-of-town dailes also carrying these criticisms, thus rendering their own "after the show" reviews valueless; (3) the fact that they're being bypassed in such consideration once again illustrates the fact that the networks, the agencies and others involved in programming have little, if any concern for what they (the hinterland) reviewers think.

Even among the New York reviewers, there seems to be a preponderance of sentiment against the practice of reviewing shows in advance, with Jack Gould, of the New York Times, standing virtually alone in championing a perpetuation of the practice. It's Gould's opinibn that in doing so he is rendering a service to Times readers. In contrast to Gould's opinion, the New York Herald Tribune's critic, John Crosby, came out last week with a blast against the practice, characterizing it as a "very bad one for any one of a number of reasons." Based on a sampling of people after the "Harvey" experiment, Crosby maintained that, far from whetting the appetite, the advance criticisms tended instead to dull the appetite. Some of those queried said that "the show was an anti-climax after the notices. It was almost like seeing something that had already taken place."

Prime mover of the practice has

British Labor Party Comes to Grips With 'Too Much Yank TV'

London, Sept. 30.

Americanization of British tv, already debated by the Trades' Union Congress and on the agenda for this week's Labor Party conference, is to be discussed at the Conservative Party's annual conference starting in Blackpool next Tuesday (7).

A resolution has been tabled by a local Conservative branch "deploring the continuing Americanization of our television programs in direct contradiction to the express undertaking of the Conservative Government to see that these programs remain predominantly British."

Also on the Conservative conference agenda is a number of resolutions urging the Government to introduce legislation to end the "archaic" Sunday Observance Acts. The motion picture industry, which has to pay a substantial toll for the privilege of opening on Sundays, has been pressing for such legislation, but in the last Parliamentary session the Government refused to find time to debate a motion sponsored by more than 100 M.P.'s.

Abrams Sez He Can Now Deliver New Rating System For $4,000,000

George J. Abrams, veepee of Revlon and chairman of the radio-tv committee of the Assn. of National Advertisers, recently said advertisers "are alarmed over the multi-million dollar decisions being made on program ratings in which they had shaky confidence." Abrams added that a test study of different rating procedures showed a variance of as much as 50% in some cases.

Abrams along with Miles Wallach, prexy of Wallach Research, feel they have come up with the solution of the problem. Last May they came up with the method of personal coincidental interviewing, conducting interviews while the programs are on the air, and also telephoning at the time programs was aired.

The interviewing system devised by Abrams and Wallach did not strike the fancy of the networks or the agencymen for the simple reason that it was too expensive. Abrams this week told VARIETY that the cost had now been reduced from an estimated $5,000,000 to $4,000,000 annually because of the new porto-punch interview method in which the interviewer can now punch out the answers on an IBM card.

In studying the existing rating services Abrams said the audimeter system measured dial changes minute by minute therefore reporting "receiver-in-use" information but it could not measure qualitative data on the viewer of a program or that viewer's identification of the sponsor. He stated that he felt the diary method could provide all of the desired qualitative information but required reporting throughout the day and night of the reporter's viewing habits and depends on memory and recollection.

Abrams opposed the personal interview because it relies on recollection the next day and the interviewer uses a program listing guide to suggest programs the viewer might have seen.

And Paar's Complainin'

Pittsburgh, Sept. 30.

Town's newest tv station, WTAE, Ch. 4, has just signed Barry Kaye for a nearly two-hour show every Saturday night, which will make the local deejay just about the busiest guy there is in the communication field here or anywhere else.

Kaye's regular berth is at NBC-o&o WAMP, where he spins platters for two hours five afternoons a week. A couple of months ago, he started an interview program, also over WAMP, from Holiday House nitery from midnight to 2 a.m., Monday through Friday and it was so successful that a few weeks ago he was given an extra-hour, beginning at 11 p.m.

And now the tv show, which will be a partially video version of his Holiday House airer, adds Saturdays as well to his on-the-air schedule. It begins Oct. 11, from 12:15 a.m. to 2, to give Kaye a total of around 27 hours a week.

'Kaleidoscope' As NBC Sun. Entry As 'Omni' Mate

In an effort to jazz up its Sunday afternoon lineup, Bob Lewine, NBC veep in charge of programming, has come up with the "NBC Kaleidoscope" (temporary working title) which will alternate with "Omnibus."

Hour-long production, starting Oct. 19 at 5 p.m., will run the gamut of the arts and public affairs. Series will recreate, among other features, the rise of a Broadway hit, the study of the ballet, the examination of a great American dramatist and other aspects of contemporary life.

Preem showing of the "NBC Kaleidoscope" will bring five NBC correspondents to Gotham for a probing of what's ahead for the final quarter of the year. Subsequently the series will unveil Charles Van Doren as host of a program called "The Ten Commandments" from an idea developed by Jess Oppenheimer; "The Actor Prepares," behind-the-scenes story of how an actor launches his career; "The Best in the World," offering the best of tv productions from around the globe and "Psychoanalysis" during which an actual analysis will be offered "live" during the program.

Additionally, "NBC Kaleidoscope" will do the behind-the-scenes story of a major motion picture theatre and an in-depth appraisal of a famed playwright

CBS' 'TEXAN' 17.8, 'RESTLESS GUN' 18.6

Looks like a real shootin' match Monday nights 8 to 8:30 with a couple of westerns slugging it out. The heretofore toprated "Restless Gun" on NBC may have found its match (Trendex-wise) in CBS' new "Texan" series, both shows running neck and neck in the ratings. "Texan," 17.8; "Restless Gun," 18.6

In the 8:30 slot, "Wells Fargo" reversed the previous week and went ahead of "Father Knows Best." "Fargo," 21.8; "Father," 20.8

Stunning surprise of the new ratings was Arthur Murray Monday nights at 10 on NBC. It got a whopping 23.9 as against "Studio One's" 11.8 and 7.4 for ABC's "This Is Music."

Untermeyer Axed In Frisco Shuffle

San Francisco, Sept. 30.

Jules Dundes, CBS vice-president running o-and-o radio stations, arrived in Frisco and a few minutes later informed Henry Untermeyer, KCBS general manager for two-plus years, that he was fired. Maurie E. Webster, sales manager of KNX, Los Angeles, pulled into Frisco within 12 hours to become KCBS boss.

Webster figures to reap benefit of Untermeyer's prime accomplishment: within past year Untermeyer has cut KCBS overhead $60,000 a year, despite the engineers' raise. Untermeyer also managed to push a new, lower ratecard through New York seven weeks ago, was projecting better business.

Dundes offered Untermeyer, a CBSer 21 years, a spot sales job in New York, but Untermeyer nixed it, will stay in Frisco, accept his 21 weeks of severance pay and look for an independent station to buy or some other business opportunity.

VAN HEUSEN COIN FOR 'PERRY MASON'

Phillips-Van Heusen Corp. signed this week for one-third alternate week sponsorship of CBS-TV's "Perry Mason" series effective with this Saturday's (4) show.

The men's apparel outfit joins the other regular clients, Sterling Drug and Parliament Cigarets, both of which have signed for a regular run.

Simultaneously, the web grabbed Colgate-Palmolive for a purchase of one-third sponsorship on six Perry Mason shows starting Oct. 18.

Now It's Chicken Incubator Outfit Moving Into TV Film Financing

Flamingo Telefilm Sales, the Herman Rush-Ira Gottlieb helmed outfit, has been holding talks with a farm machinery outfit, called Buckeye Corp., on the acquisition of fresh capital.

Exact nature of the talks are being hushed pending the outcome. But it's reported in the trade that the Ohio farm machinery company, listed on the American Stock Exchange, has been giving telefilms the once-over for possible expansion. Move of Buckeye isn't as outlandish as it may appear on the surface—a maker of chicken incubators moving into show biz. Scranton Corp., formerly a lace making house, acquired Roach Studios and Mutual Broadcasting System as part of its diversification program.

Flamingo Telefilm Sales was formed about eight months ago following the exit of Sy Weintraub from the firm. Rush, formerly with Official Films, joined Flamingo's Ira Gottlieb to run the outfit, still backed by Joe Harris coin. Since the exec switchover, Flamingo has been handling Distributors Corp. of America feature product for tv. It also has a first-run syndication entry, "Citizen Soldier," as well as a library of product.

Flamingo's prez Rush declined comment on the Buckeye report, or rumbles that he is talking with Roach Studios. He confined himself to the generalization that Flamingo Telefilms is interested in expansion and is open to propositions on additional financing and product.

Hi Brown Helms 'Int'l Airport'

"International Airport," starring Lee Bowman, will be produced by Himan Brown for United Artists Television. The series, to be shot in New York, will involve the adventures of an airport special services topper.

"Airport" is the fourth series set by UATV for lensing of 39 episodes. On the "Viking" series, to be produced by Byrna Productions, Elmo Williams has been signed in the dual capacity as director and supervising film editor. He will share directorial duties with George M. Cahan, who also will produce. Lensing is due to begin in Munich, Germany, in January, '59.

Other UATV properties include "The Dennis O'Keefe Show," and "The Troubleshooters," starring Keenan Wynn.

KELLOGG'S BIZ TO WRCV-TV IN PHILLY

Philadelphia, Sept. 30.

One of the major Philly tv buys of the season was registered with the announcement that Kellogg has purchased five 30-minute time periods on WRCV-TV, for the programming of a strong smallfry lineup.

The company sponsors four (5:30-6) sessions on station's revamped late afternoon roster, plus an additional early evening slot. List includes "Superman," "Woody Woodpecker" cartoons, "Wild Bill Hickok," and "Huckleberry Hound," a new cartoon series. Cereal outfit bankrolls a second and completely different "Hickok" pix on Sat.

New Kellogg strip joins a revised afternoon list with "Adventures in Sherwood Forest," (5-5:30, Mon.-Fri.), and 6-6:30 adult fare with the local tv preem of "Union Pacific," "Men of Annapolis," "Danger Is My Business" and the return of "People's Choice" and the "Honeymooners."

'Bold Venture' for Ziv

Ziv, now out selling "MacKenzie's Raiders" is prepping "Bold Venture," starring Dane Clark, as the next syndication entry.

Ziv execs held a meeting in N.Y. on the new property, canvassing regional prospects.

OF SCRATCHED FROM OVER-COUNTER LISTING

Official Films, currently engaged in merger talks with Guild Films, has been taken off the listing of the Over-The-Counter Market in N.Y.

Reason is that the rules provide that if a stock falls below one point, it automatically is taken off the Market's listings for at least 10 days. The high for Official this year was 1⅝. Its drop marks the first time in at least four years that Official Films stock has gone below the one point mark. The stock, in order to get back on the market's listing, must reach a 1½ point mark over a 10 day period.

Telefilm Blurb Outfits Working At Peak Output

Indications are the companies making telefilm blurbs are working at capacity business and have been for the past three to four weeks. It's the annual rush to get the new pitchlines on celluloid at season's start.

The upsurge of biz followed a serious falloff last spring and early summer, when the "recession" had a greater hold on the economy. Not all the news from the film houses is so good: Industrial film making is off, although in the last few weeks or so some of the lost ground has been recaptured and some of the animation houses in commercials are hard hit.

It appears that the recession caused the suffering among the industrials. This is because the chief components of the industrial line are soft sell institutionals, and in a poor biz climate manufacturers seem to want none of that.

That industrials have reemerged to some degree is evidenced in the fact that just lately Caravel Films, which also makes commercials, sold three industrials. Same holds for other major outfits, Transfilm for one, which is understood to have sold several multi-reelers. Much of the new biz is reported to be sales promotional stuff and other hard-sell celluloidal lines, but even then the industrials are not working at the same capacity as commercials.

The recessive climate touched animation, because the process is more expensive than "live action" goods. The squeeze, though some feel it may break shortly, is still on, it is reported. Academy, a company with a big rep in animation, went out of biz last month.

Andrew Stone Eyes Hour Suspense Series

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Andrew Stone, vet indie producer-director, is setting his sights on television. Stone, who recently completed "The Decks Ran Red" under a four-pix deal with Metro, is discussing a suspense-mystery anthology of one-hour film shows tentatively tagged "Jeopardy."

Proposed deal calls for Stone merely to supervise series rather than final writing, producing or directing. He already has submitted treatments for first 13 segments.

Pall Mall's WPIX Buys

In one of the few program buys on WPIX, N.Y., American Tobacco has bought alternate sponsorship on "Flight" and "Decoy." Indie, despite scarcity of program buys by sponsors, has been doing fine biz with participations, inking over $2,000,000 in biz for the fall season.

American Tobacco will use the two adventure skeins for Pall Mall.

WPIX Gets Code Sticker

WPIX, N. Y., has become a subscriber to the Television Code of the National Assn. of Broadcasters.

Leavitt J. Pope, v.p. and operations manager, said the indie joined because of its belief that "only through voluntary membership in the code can the broadcasting industry police itself and help fend off pressure from governmental regulation."

Other indies in N. Y., WNEW-TV, WNTA-TV, Newark, and WOR-TV are not NAB code subscribers.

Comedy Shows Also on Upbeat In Syndication

In syndication, too, the comedy shows are looking up.

CBS Films, which had a rerun ball with Jackie Gleason's "The Honeymooners," decided that this was the season to come out with a made-for-syndication, first-run vidpix series. In the past, virtually every made-for-syndication comedy skein had a rocky road, many of them not recovering costs.

Syndication, being a "bread and butter" affair, couldn't invest in top comedy talent, nor laugh-em-up scripters. Against the network comedics, many of the syndication entries looked like poor relations. Business, in short suffered and syndicators stuck mainly to action-adventure.

But syndicators may take a fresh look at the comedic field the next time around. "Col. Flack," which is the only first-run laugh-em-up syndication show in circulation at this time, is garnering all sorts of sponsor coin. Of the 80 markets sold, the majority of them are directly with advertisers.

The sponsor list includes Standard Oil of Texas, Anheuser-Busch, Pacific Gas & Electric, Heidelberg Brewing, Colgate - Palmolive, Kroger Co., Dayton Power & Light, Bell Bakeries, Hass-Davis Packing, Oklahoma Gas & Electric, Midland Federal Savings & Loan Assn., Loblaws Super Markets.

"Col. Flack" has turned out to be one of CBS Films' fastest selling first-run syndication entries other than "Gray Ghost."

GILBERT ROLAND'S 'AMIGO' MG SERIES

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Gilbert Roland may star in a new vidpix series, "Amigo," for Metro TV. Negotiations are currently being finalized for Roland to play the lead role, that of a San Diego detective.

Richard Maibaum, production chief of Metro TV, is handling the Roland negotiations. Plans are to put Don Siegel on the vehicle as producer-director. Dan Mainwaring wrote the pilot script.

It's understood Maibaum is planning the new entry as an adventure series, not a mysterioso. Plot line has main character a liaison officer between San Diego and Mexican police, so that his adventuring takes place both sides of the border.

Heileman's Renewals On Ziv's 'Sea Hunt'

Heileman Brewing, which bumped a renewal on "Sea Hunt" in Milwaukee in favor of "Citizen Soldier," has renewed on Ziv's underwater skein in a number of its principal markets.

Ziv renewals for Heileman include Chicago, Madison, La Cross, Green Bay and Wausau. Heileman picked up "Soldier" in Rockford, Ill., Davenport, Ia., and Eau Claire, Wisc.

Tap Freeman for 'Ivy'

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Everett Freeman is new executive producer of Alan Ladd's forthcoming Jaguar Productions teleseries, "Ivy League," to star William Bendix.

"League" is fourth tv series being prepped by Jaguar.

Top 20 National Syndicated Shows

(Based on U.S. Pulse Spot Film Report for September)

Compilation of the top 20 syndicated shows in the U.S. is based on 22 basic markets, representing about 16,391,500 tv homes. Pulse, in compiling the list, utilizes a weighted average keyed to the number of sets in each of the 22 markets. The weighted average takes in only the markets in which the program has been telecast. In order to qualify, a property must be telecast in at least ten of the 22 markets. Total number of the 22 basic markets included in the rating compilation for each series is listed in the brackets.

The markets include Atlanta, Baltimore, Birmingham, Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Detroit, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Minneapolis-St. Paul, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, San Francisco-Oakland, Seattle-Tacoma, St. Louis and Washington.

It's Time More Thought (& Coin) Was Given to Producer: Breslow

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Function of the producer in telefilms far transcends that of any other element in the production of vidpix, yet of all the creative elements, the producer is the one person whose rewards don't extend beyond his salary. It's about time, in the opinion of vet producer-writer Lou Breslow, that the producer got a share of residuals, along with the current recipients, the writers, directors and actors.

Breslow, currently producing "Mackenzie's Raiders" with Elliott Lewis for Ziv, characterizes the telefilm producer as a unique breed in show business, in terms of his responsibilities and efforts. He's the one indispensable person who assumes all the responsibility involved in production.

"We've got to sit on top of scripts, writers, directors, casting, cutting, scoring, budgets and everything else. We've got to work on half a dozen scripts at the same time, whipping them into shape and sometimes doing one we're not satisfied with. We've got to go out on location every time to see that the director brings the film in on time without going over budget. We've got to fight for actors and directors with the front of-

'FAR EAST DISPATCH' AS TELEPIX SERIES

Singapore, Sept. 30.

Shaw Bros., in association with producer George Breakston, has begun filming a telefilm series titled "Far East Dispatch. After six days of shooting in Singapore, the production unit left by air for Tokyo.

Breakston last did "African Patrol" for Gross-Krasne. Peter Dyneley, who also had a supporting role in "African Role," plays the lead in "Dispatch."

Par Library Buy Steps Up Red Hot Mpls. Rating War

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.

Zooming ratings for its nightly 10 o'clock "firstruns movie spectaculars," heavily advertised in the newspapers and otherwise elaborately exploited, have prompted WTCN-TV, Time, Inc., station here and the ABC local outlet, to step out and splurge still further in the acquisition of more topnotch screen product.

At a cost of nearly $1,000,000 the station has bought the Paramount tv library of 700 pictures which include "Going My Way" and all the Bob Hope-Bing Crosby "Road" features. The deal was completed by Phil Hoffman, WTCN-TV general manager, in New York. Local exhibitors feel it spells still more box-office grief.

The Paramount assortment will augment WTCN-TV's already "largest in the Twin Cities" screen features library. The station also has the Warner Bros. and UA pictures, the latter including soms post-'48 releases, along with part of the M-G-M and RKO films.

One other Twin Cities tv station, KMSP-TV, owned by National Television Associates, also goes in for nightly feature pictures (9 o'clock) in too big a way to suit the area's theatreowners and its ratings are climbing upwards, too. The KMSP-TV array includes the 20th, Selz-

Milland's Dual Role in Telepix

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Deal has been set whereby Ray Milland will produce and star in a telefilm series—as yet untitled—which will be a co-production between his Mirada Inc. company and Revue Productions.

Milland, who last week checked into his office at Revue to begin work on the series, will essay a suave man-of-the-world, "a man to whom things happen," in the series. Exteriors will be shot in locales such as Paris, Mexico City and London, with all interiors to be done at Revue.

Milland is aiming for a January air date for the series, with 39 vidpix to be lensed beginning in the near future. Once production begins he will probably assign another producer to the show because he will be busy starring in it. Three sponsors are dickering for series which would be network.

PRE-'48'S $200,000,000 JACKPOT

Milt Gordon's $1,000,000 Largesse

Milt Gordon, who in five years time parlayed his Television Programs of America operation into a $11,350,000 sale of Jack Programs of America operation into a $11,350,000 sale to Jack fits with key executives and employees of the company, it's been learned. All told about $1,000,000 is being divvied up among his principal aides.

Among the major beneficiaries are Mickey Sillerman, exec veepee of the syndication outfit, and Leon Fromkess, executive producer. Manny Reiner, chief of foreign sales, also shared in the largesse.

Severance checks were distributed to division managers and even the rank-and-file within the TPA org.

Wrather and Gordon signatured final transfer papers over the weekend. Gordon, exiting the new company, is setting up his own offices but will stay out of distribution.

Sillerman, Exiting ITC-TPA, Eyes Ownership Stake in Prod-Distribution

No sooner was the ink dry on the finalization of Jack Wrather's Independent Television Corp. taking over Television Programs of America (a transaction involving $11,350,000) than Michael M. Sillerman, exec veepee of TPA, up and resigned from the merged operation over the weekend. Which means that the combined ITC-TPA operation will function without TPA's two key men, Milton Gordon, principal owner and board chairman of TPA, and Sillerman. Gordon is setting up his own company to finance projects within the show biz orbit (though staying out of distribution).

Sillerman's resignation stemmed primarily from the fact that both he and Walter Kingsley, the president of ITC-TPA, would be operating in pretty much the same area, both having their background in sales. Interesting to note is that both men came out of the Ziv sales setup.

Speculation at the moment within the tv film industry is where Sillerman will go. With a background encompassing a founder-prexy status of Keystone Broadcasting Co. (as a pioneer in syndication radio) and exiting Ziv to partner with Gordon and Ed Small in the founding of TPA, he's eyeing a possible ownership or joint ownership in either a new producer-distribution setup or an existing major operation.

Sillerman's contract still had more than a year to run. In severing his relationship he walked off with a fat chunk of coin, over and above his share of the capital gains profit-taking from the sale of TPA.

ITC-TPA now labels itself as the "dominant company in worldwide tv film production and distribution."

Sun Oil Plays It By Ear in Vidpix

Sun Oil Co., via William Esty, is buying individual availabilities in markets rather than a syndicated program for city-by-city spotting.

The approach for the multi-million dollar account doesn't preclude the agency from buying a series for spotting throughout the country. Agency is looking at properties and will continue to give fresh series the once-over.

Agency found that buying local time availabilities from stations has proven out well for another Esty client in the past. It was found that client got a better shake in the most desired time period, under the local time availability approach.

Par Library for KMOX

KMOX, St. Louis, bought the entire Paramount library from MCA TV, putting the Paramount pix in 16 markets.

Other recent sales included: WBFM-TV and WTTV, Indianapolis; WTCN-TV, Minneapolis; and KUTV, Salt Lake City. Both WBFM-T and WTCN-TV are Time, Inc. stations.

CNP's N.Y. Sweep

California National Productions has New York tv "in the can," what with 14 series being exposed in the Gotham market for an aggregate of 10 hours of airtime weekly divided among the city's seven outlets.

Not only are all seven stations carrying CNP film this season, but the syndication subsid of NBC is represented every night of the week in New York City.

Tape Cues Roach Yen for Bigtime Syndication Biz

Hal Roach Jr., feels that video tape is the coming thing and he's busily making plans in that direction.

First, there's the partnership deal with Guild Films, under which Guild utilizes the Coast Roach Studios for taped productions. Second, Roach plans to equip a tape machine at the Mutual Building in N.Y. for eastern production. Roach is board chairman of Mutual Broadcasting System, recently bought out by the Scranton Corp., which now owns both Roach Studios and MBS.

Roach freely acknowledges that he's eyeing the syndication field on his trip East. He says he wants to get his company into the syndication biz, either via setting up a new organization or acquiring a going syndication house.

Roach was of the opinion that big, important shows will remain on film for period of time, following which there will be the widespread use of tape. The tape development "will allow us to get into the spec field" for network slotting, according to Roach. Taped shows also will be made for syndication.

'Lone Ranger's' Do-Good Role (Peace Patrol) May Branch Out in Britain

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Television is bringing American promotion techniques to England. Britain's National Savings Committee, headed by Lord Mackintosh, which handles England's government savings bonds campaigns, is now weighing use of "The Lone Ranger Peace Patrol" campaign which has proved successful in sparking sales of U.S. Savings Stamps among school children.

U.S. Treasury enlisted the Lone Ranger property from Jack Wrather and planned the promotional campaign around the character and actor Clayton Moore with Wrather's Bevhills publicist Lou Smith. Since July, when the promotional plan went into effect, savings

9,000 FEATURES POURED INTO TV

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

In about three years of selling, the pre-'48 pix of the major studios have topped the $200,000,000 mark from the tv market.

From here on in, the outlook is for a sharply diminishing gross from the video source—not because the market has contracted, but because the supply of fresh pix will be a comparative trickle.

The only fresh vault now making the rounds is the Paramount oldies and the way things are shaping up it looks like MCA-TV will get the top dollar on the 700. MCA TV has hit about $30,000,000 in 15 markets with these. It's not that Paramount cinematics stack up in quality superior to Metro's pix, but MCA came into the market in the "bottom-of-the-barrel" period and is reaping the rewards stemming from relative scarcity.

The over $200,000,000 mark represents contracts inked, payment on which will extend over a six to seven-year period. The gross was achieved with approximately 4,500 pre-'48 features coming from the vaults of Warner Bros., Metro, Columbia, Universal, Paramount, Republic, RKO Radio Pictures, 20th-Fox and United Artists.

If the gross was calculated on all features released to tv, taking in the indies such as Pine-Thomas and the foreign pix making the tv rounds, it would be way over $225,000,000. All in all, from 8,000 to 9,000 features have been dumped on the tv market and the channels utilized the pix like a "drunken sailor," to borrow a phrase once used by Oliver A. Unger, National Telefilm Associates prexy.

UA's Post-'48's

It should be noted that United Artists is releasing post-'48's, as is Republic Pictures. UA, as a distribution organization, has been immune from the Hollywood guilds demands that it be cut in on tv residuals on all pictures made after August, '48. Republic, whose studio no longer is in production, also has taken off on the post-'48's, with the guilds apparently unable to enforce retaliatory action on a shuttered studio.

But the UA and Republic grosses are small compared to those realized from Warner Bros. ($32,000,000), Metro ($52,000,000), et al. What the free exhibition of the oldies has meant to the boxoffice of theatres playing current attractions is history.

But the question remains what would have happened to Loew's without the assured income of $52,000,000, a good chunk of which has been plowed back into the company.

As to the post-'48 issue, it's the stormiest brewing in the trade. Exhibitor organizations are up in arms against any fresh push of features in the tv market, with Theatre Owners of America advancing a plan to buy these pix to keep them from tv. The guilds and the motion picture companies remain far apart on what part of the tv pie should go to the talent unions as residuals.

Pix distributors to tv are cynical about the exhibitors efforts to keep the post-'48's from tv. They feel the dike will break as soon as one of the major motion picture companies is in need of ready cash.

But even with the post-'48's hitting videoland, the number will be comparatively small compared to the 4,500 pre-'48's from the vaults of the majors.

What's shaping up now for the "Over-The-Air-Pix Theatre, U.S.A." is scarcity and rerunitis—and that phase is due about three years.

KNXT's Enviable Status: 7 Years Of First-Run Product Still On Tap

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

The industry trend-seekers who've already begun to worry about what kind of programming will replace feature films may be somewhat premature. If KNXT, the CBS-TV o&o here, is any example, there's enough of feature film available to carry solid programming of the late-nighters well into 1966.

Station's estimate is based on its backlog and its amortization schedule. KNXT recently bought the Paramount library under a seven-year, seven-run deal for $7,000,000, and is finalizing its amortization table on the package. Bill Alcine, manager of film programming, estimates the preponderance of the Par films won't get their first tv showings until well into 1963 and 1964. Nor is the Paramount package the only such case; Alcine states that some pix in the United Artists and Flamingo-DCA packages won't be played until then.

All of which points up the fact that feature film programming, in spite of the eventuality that the well of pre-'48 films will run dry, is far longer-lived than it's given credit for. KNXT, although it has the Paramount library, isn't an extreme case; unlike its sister station in New York, WCBS-TV, it doesn't have the Metro pix as well. No doubt there'll be a station in every market, which to a greater or lesser extent, will be in a comparable position to KNXT.

That seven-years-ahead schedule is dictated by both physical and economic necessity. It's got to amortize its films over a long period, to begin with, and beyond the Par library, has a backlog of 700 other pix which must be played off in advance of or simultaneously with the Par films. It's a staggered schedule of playoff, with the result that the other films will by and large take precedence over the Par package in scheduling. Moreover, even if the station ran one Par pic a night, it would still take nearly two years to firstrun those films alone, to say nothing of other packages in the library.

Hence, KNXT, for one, has no worries over the imminence of the

SG Ups Sales Staff

Three salesmen this week and one last were hired by Screen Gems syndication department. Hired by Bob Seidelman, sales manager of the Columbia subsidiary, were Ralph Mitchell and Robert Kraus and Charles Mason. Week ago, Arthur Greenfield moved into the company.

Mitchell and Kraus move into the central division, under Stanley Dudelson, Mitchell coming from SG's Canadian affiliate and Kraus from J. Arthur Rank in N.Y. Mason—reporting to Frank Stone, the area manager in the southern division—was general manager of WEDU-TV, Tampa educational station. Greenfield, a veteran of Universal, is with the SG western division.

Metro TV Eyeing Flock of Entries For Next Season

Loew's board of directors has given the greenlight to its Metro TV subsid to go ahead with projects for the '59-'60 tv season, allocating a budget which could encompass from five to 10 pilots.

Charles C. (Bud) Barry, Metro TV v.p., leaves for the Coast this week for extended huddles with Sol Siegel, Loew's v.p. in charge of the studio, and Richard Maibaum, exec producer of Metro TV.

Only Metro TV production on the lot now is "Thin Man," which Colgate renewed for 13 weeks. Lensing on "Northwest Passage" has been completed. A trio of the "Passage" vid segs will be released abroad as a theatrical film.

One of the projects up for discussion on the Coast is "Father of the Bride." Benton and Bowles v.p. Tom McDermott will join the Metro execs on that one. Agency's client General Foods has agreed to put up over $100,000 for the production of a pilot and subsequent scripts.

Another project in the works is an hour-long suspense-mystery anthology, tentatively titled "Jeopardy." Producer Andrew Stone has been conferring with Metro execs on that one. Other story properties and ideas will be mulled at the studio confabs.

Gries-MacDonald Head New SG Syndication Unit; Set 3 Yearly

A special unit responsible for the creation of at least three new series for first-run syndication per year has been set-up by Screen Gems.

Topping the new production unit on the Coast for the Columbia subsid will be Tom Gries, tv producer-director-writer, appointed to the new post of director of syndicated program production. Working with him will be Wallace MacDonald, whose post will be director of syndicated program development.

First project will be the supervision of a new series, titled "Stakeout," to be produced for SG by Sam Katzman. New show, starring Walter Matthau, will be based on the criminal investigations of the Florida Sheriffs Bureau. Skein is scheduled for release in January, '59. A similar project "Tallahassee," also starring Matthau, failed to find a network berth this season.

As in the case of SG's network operation, Gries and MacDonald will be charged with the responsi-

N.Y. Gobbles Up New Vidpix Segs

Most of the new syndication product has found a berth in the seven-station New York market. Only long-standing syndicated series yet without a first-run berth in N.Y. is Television Programs of America's "New Adventures of Charlie Chan," and Ziv's "Dial 999."

Indie WPIX remains the most heavily telefilm programmed station in the market. Daily News station has picked up "Flight," "Col. Flack," and "Divorce Court" (tape), among the newer arrivals.

WNTA-TV, Newark based, has accounted for "Danger Is My Business," and will be the showcase for the first-run telepix of the NTA Film Network, "How To Marry A Millionaire," "This Is Alice" and "Man Without A Gun."

WRCA-TV will telcast "U.S. Marshal," with "Rendezvous" slated for a January start. WCBS-TV has "N. Y. Confidential"; WNEW-TV, "Divorce Hearing"; WABC-TV, "Tugboat Annie."

Major first-run properties recently put on the market which have yet to land a N.Y. berth include "MacKenzie's Raiders," Ziv; and "William Tell," NTA.

Entrance of a revived WNTA-TV has bolstered the market for syndicated product. But WOR-TV, which accounted for some first-run buys in the past, has pulled in its horns in the syndicated field, concentrating on cinematics.

All the 'Giants' Are Accounted For As Automotive Sponsorship of TV Shows Takes Turn for the Better

By JACK BERNSTEIN

The network picture and the accompanying profit and loss statements by the webs are in a large measure made up by the way the automotive industry decides to spend its advertising revenue. With the recession scarce and sales down, the automotives were cautious about television commitments, but the tide has turned and out of Detroit comes word that nearly every major division of the corporate giants—General Motors, Ford and Chrysler—will have some major stake in tv.

The sales picture is not as bright as in the '57-'58 season but it is a far cry from the first clouds of distress, that, for example, of Chrysler's decision to cut its corporate television from $5,000,000 to $900,000. Chrysler Corp., outside of its tv network commitments on behalf of Dodge and Plymouth, is breaking a giant radio spot campaign to introduce the 1959 models. The corporation is undertaking the drive on behalf of all divisions featuring the entire line. In addition to spot radio, the auto manufacturer will sponsor Fred Astaire in a special to preem the new models, plus tv programs for Dodge and Plymouth.

During the month of July, two of the top five network advertisers were Chevrolet and Ford passenger cars. Chevrolet for the month of July alone spent $641,914 in gross network time while Ford was not far behind shelling out $473,418 in time charges.

Ford's Heavy Splurge

Ford Motor Co., with its separate divisions, is making a heavy plunge into network television. Mercury division is the bankroller of the hourlong CBS-TV "Ed Sullivan Show" alternate weeks. Ford is currently backing NBC's "Wagon Train" and Tennessee Ernie Ford. In addition to this, Ford Trucks has inked for a one time one-third sponsorship of CBS' "Perry Mason." The latest buy was the purchase of Robert Saudek's package of the New York Philharmonic on behalf of the Lincoln Division. Both Lincoln and Continental will receive top billing on the fare slated for Sunday afternoons on CBS.

General Motors Corp. is swinging into first gear with a heavy tv schedule. Chevrolet division goes to the post with two solid tv performers, Dinah Shore and Pat Boone. The Buick division of General Motors is picking up the tab on alternate weeks of "Wells Fargo," on NBC-TV, and on the series of Bob Hope specials. In all Hope will present eight specials on behalf of Buick.

Not to be outdone by the Buick division, Pontiac has scheduled eight specs of its own to promote the division's line. Specials lined up by Pontiac include "The Ginger Rogers Show," two Victor Borge's specs, Perry Como and a dubious Mary Martin.

Oldsmobile is riding with Patti Page on ABC-TV. In addition Olds has two Bing Crosby specs set, the first one scheduled for tonight (Wed.).

Chrysler Corp. is presenting Lawrence Welk on behalf of the Dodge division on ABC-TV, Saturdays and a Plymouth Show with Welk Wednesday night. Fred Astaire will introduce the '59 line of Chrysler cars on Oct. 17 via a spectacular to be presented over NBC-TV. A heavy spot radio campaign has been kicked off by the separate divisions.

Even foreign cars are getting into the act with Renault taking alternate sponsorship of Edward Murrow's "Small World."

Some of the auto manufacturers plans are still up in the air such as Studebaker - Packard and Edsel division of the Ford Motor Co. (Edsel is expected to take over one of the Sunday nights from Ed Sullivan to preem the new model.) But for the most part most of the '58-'59 tv plans have been set. The networks seem to be breathing easier now that Detroit is once again on the television move.

Shorts: The merger between Lennen & Newell and Buchanan & Co. has been completed with the latter agency becoming a division of L&N. Negotiations had been carried on for approximately two months by top execs of both organizations. With the added $9,000,000 in Buchanan billings, Lennen & Newell is now at the $83,000,000 mark. John Herz Jr., formerly president of Buchanan, will become senior veep in charge of the new division. William Dasheff, also of Buchanan, has been named a senior v.p. and management account supervisor. The new accounts brought to the agency as a result of the merger include Reynolds Metals Co.; Convair Division of General Dynamics; Paramount Film Distributing Corp. (AB-PT); Warner Bros. Pictures, and AM-Par Record Corp.

The W. B. Doner Agency and Peck Advertising are currently carrying on merger discussions. If the agencies joined forces, their combined billing would be an estimated $20,000,000. Peck is a New York based agency while Doner has offices in Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Philadelphia and Baltimore.

Charles H. Brower, president of BBDO, in a speech before the American Management Assn. last Thurs. (25), stated that billings at the agency are five times as high as they were in 1947. Two-thirds of the BBDO growth has come from the increased sales of existing products and the introduction of new products by old clients.

Guild, Bascom & Bonfigli, San Francisco based agency, has purchased the marketing consulting firm of Richard D. Crisp & associates, Chicago.

Ted Bates, which hastily substituted "Top Dollar" into the "Dotto" slot, CBS-TV 11:30 a.m. cross the board, when a standby contestant blew the whistle on the latter show, has found "Dollar" outpulling the competition. Bates has abondoned the search for a replacement for "Dollar" when the ARB ratings showed 4.3 for "Dollar" and a 1.0 for "Concentration."

Bill Hoffman, veepee in charge of radio at BBDO, states that as of this week there is more network radio billing than compiled by the webs for the entire '57-'58 radio season.

Bryan Houston has published a 450-page 1958 edition of the "Major Coverage Study of Media and Markets."

Famous Artists Schools has appointed the Lawrence C. Gumbinner Agency to handle its advertising.

Switches: Charles F. Adams has been upped to exec veepee of MacManus, John & Adams. Adams has been executive assistant to prexy Ernest A. Jones. He will continue to head up the Cadillac motor car division group in addition to taking on other administrative duties.

John E. Martin, copy chief in the Minneapolis office of BBDO, elected a veep of the agency.

Don D. Rumbarger appointed director of sales for Audits and Surveys Co.

Two staff assignments at Fuller & Smith & Ross show Fritz Hellman named copy director succeeding Gordon K. Zern who has been appointed account exec for a new FSR account, Cool-Ray.

Leonard V. Strong III, formerly of Grey Advertising, has joined the copy department of Ted Bates.

Steve Davis, formerly of Young & Rubicam, has joined the p.r. firm of Barkas and Shalit.

Campaigns: Cunningham & Walsh, San Francisco, has kicked off a large spot radio drive for Contadina Foods in an estimated 30 cities. The eight-week campaign schedule calls for 170 spots per week in the key cities. Spot tv will be used in New York with 360 one-minute spots to be scheduled during the drive.

Kenyon & Eckhardt initiating a drive on behalf of Lever Bros. for its Praise soap. Spot tv campaign kicks off Oct. 5 in top markets.

Warner-Lambert, via the Lambert & Feasley Agency, is planning a heavy spot tv campaign for Listerine starting Oct. 6, and running through Dec. One-minute spots and chainbreaks will be used in the top markets.

Reps: Robert D. Gilman, formerly eastern sales manager of WNAC-TV and the Yankee Network, Boston, has been appointed to the N. Y. sales staff of H-R Television.

Harry Smart has earned veepee stripes of Blair-TV and named manager of the Chicago office of the reppery. John W. Davis has been appointed sales promotion manager for the Chicago area.

Katz Agency has issued a "Spot TV Cost Summary" to aid advertisers estimate their spot tv budget.

K&E's Blue Ribbon

Kenyon & Eckhardt has all but confirmed the fact that the agency has landed the $6,500,000 Pabst beer account which had been housed at Norman, Craig & Kummel. The shift of the brewing account marks the first major account shift in over a month. K&E which snared the Blatz account from NK&C in 1956 will continue to handle the account.

Executives at K&E stated that the agency had been working on some Pabst products for over a month. Chief products of the Pabst account are Blue Ribbon and Andeker beers, and Old Tankard ale. The Pabst beer account and Blatz were recently merged.

JWT's Door-to-Door Test of Com'ls

Television commercials are strongly correlated to sales and as a result are of prime importance to the agencies. Sales messages are constantly being tested for their effectiveness to determine whether those important three minutes allowed in a half-hour telecast are being used to the best advantage. J. Walter Thompson, apparently not satisfied with their method of testing television commercials, has this week devised a new method of putting the plugs to the test.

Under the direction of Arthur Koponen, in charge of new research techniques at J. Walter Thompson, the new method calls for the use of a portable movie sound projector resembling a television set which is wheeled from door to door to get detailed individual responses to JWT's blurbs. The objective, according to Koponen, is to develop an improved television procedure which includes better sampling methods, individual commercial exposure (the commercials are shown on the portable machine), and personal interviewing.

Koponen, who has little use for psychological research studies, which includes motivational research, feels that it is more important for the commercial to create a favorable impression of the product than to create only a favorable impression of the commercial itself.

The Thompson study tries to obtain several measures: the recall measure, to find out what ideas are being communicated by the commercial; commercial ratings, to see how viewers react to various characteristics of the commercial; product rating, to see how the blurb influences the judgment of the product; product choice, a test to see how the commercial influences the desire for the product as shown by an actual choice of brands; qualitative indications, to learn of the feeling and mood created by the commercial; and the testing of programs, to see how well the JWT list of network programs is liked and the influence of programs on the sales messages.

For each commercial tested, the agency obtains 200 interviews obtained by block-probability samples in New York, Detroit, Chicago, Atlanta and San Francisco.

TELEVISION'S FIVE-YEAR CLUB

Directors, AFM Dickers Also Due

Already involved in contract talks with American Federation of Television & Radio Artists, the industry before long will have to negotiate other important talent union contracts.

The Radio-Television Directors Guild pact with employer groups expires on Dec. 31, which means dickers should begin in early or middle December, when there is still a possibility that the AFTRA talks will be on. On Feb. 1, 1959, the American Federation of Musicians contract expires, with those negotiations likely to overlap RTDG's, since the latter will be fighting for an edge against the Screen Directors Guild for tape jurisdiction.

Webs will be bucking for a change in the royalties setup now imposed against them by AFM. Fee is 5% every time a program is shown. However, AFM on the Coast has relaxed this ruling with telefilmers such as Desilu and the networks hope this has set a precedent by which to negotiate a reduction for themselves.

Storer, Westinghouse Spanked As FCC Gets Tough on Politico B'casts

Washington, Sept. 30.

The Federal Communications Commission is getting tough about political broadcasting.

The Commission has renewed a group of AM, FM and tv licenses of Storer Broadcasting Co. and Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., while strongly scolding both companies for violating the law and FCC rules with politically-angled telecasts last March.

FCC said the two companies, both with extensive radio-tv interests in major markets, did not "willfully" run afoul of Section 317 of the Federal Communications Act, as well as FCC rules. But FCC added, the violations existed. Explanations by the two companies were dismissed as not being justified excuses for what happened.

Considering the previous good records of both companies in broadcasting, FCC said it would forgive —but not forget. The commission said in letters to the two companies that it would renew the expiring licenses involved, But, FCC said, the facts on what happened will be retained in full in both companies' files at FCC for future reference. They were sternly warned not to get into the same trouble again.

Stirring up FCC was the telecast and broadcast by both companies of kineoscopes of hearings on the Kohler strike in Wisconsin by the McClellan Senate Labor Rackets Subcommittee last March. The kines, made by WTTG-TV here, were bought and paid for by the National Association of Manufacturers and provided free to certain Storer and Westinghouse stations.

None of the stations involved in the license renewal applications before FCC identified the cuffo kines on the air as having been bankrolled by NAM. FCC said the law and the commission's rules require such identification both at the beginning and conclusion of such a program.

In both letters, FCC used one identical punch line: ". . . Your conduct fell substantially short of that required of a broadcast li-

WNEW-TV Going On Sports Spree

WNEW-TV, N. Y., is adding to its live sports lineup this fall and winter. But the indie station is playing a "wait and see" game on the other new live shows it plans for this season's schedule.

Last night (Tues.), station was slated to start a second weekly wrestling show in the 9-11 spot, this time coming from Sunnyside (Queens) Arena. It competes with filmed wrestling on WPIX, in the same market. Move was made on the strength of ratings for its Thursday night wrestling, a show emanating from Washington, where its sister station WTTG is located.

Bullish on sports, WNEW bought Gotham rights to Big 10 basketball from Sports Network, and will be-

Code Post for Ward

Washington, Sept. 30.

Harry H. Ward, continuity acceptance supervisor for NBC in Chicago, has been appointed assistant director of Television Code affairs for the National Assn. of Broadcasters.

Ward, who has been with NBC since 1948, will succeed Charles S. Cady Oct. 15. Cady resigned the NAB post to join WCSC-TV, Charleston, S.C., as national sales manager.

WOR-TV Dickers High School Grid

WOR-TV, N. Y., and producer David Garth are negotiating to telecast high school games in the New York area.

School authorities are described as amenable to the idea, as the station and producer are digging in to line up sponsorship. School authorities, under Garth's plan, would be given the right to approve the sponsors. Prohibited categories would include beers and tobaccos.

Planned line up includes eight games, seven to take place Saturday afternoon and one Thanksgiving Day. Kickoff match would be Baldwin vs. Lawrence.

Starting Monday (6), WOR-TV will begin its broadcast day at 4 p.m. midweek, cutting back to a "one-shift" eight-hour operating day. Retrenchment of the programming day was put in effect by station's new topper Robert Leder, in another move to cut costs. Weekends the station will begin operation at 2 p.m. Station, heretofore, had come on at 1 or 2 p.m. during weekdays.

WIP claimed a radio first when it presented "A Play is Born," the story behind the production of a Broadway play. "Swim in the Sea," the subject of the two-hour behind-the-scenes broadcast was not destined for a splash on Broadway. The drama folded here after a two-week tryout run.

Narrator Ed McMahon detailed the growth of the production from author to critics' reviews. McMahon collected more than 12 hours of taped interviews, rehearsal scenes, business discussions, and background sounds. He interviewed everyone connected with the play, then dovetailed the workings of a hundred-odd people who turned the script into the finished product.

Author Jess Gregg, producers Harold Prince, Robert Griffith and Shirley Ayers, Fay Bainter, director, stagehands, technicians, set and costume designers, all described their functions and analyzed their ideas.

LONG LIFE FOR FACES, FORMATS

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Television's feared and fabled programming turnover, considerable as it is from year to year, nevertheless doesn't assume the gigantic proportions it's generally believed to reach. Spot-check of the new fall schedules shows more than 26% of network programming in the "five-year club," while fully 40% of the shows revolve around formats or personalities who've been around for five years or more.

That "five-year club" qualification comprises programs which have maintained the same format into a fifth season. A rundown shows 16 of them on CBS-TV (some of which switched from other webs, but with star and format intact), seven on NBC and six on ABC. As to the others making up that 40%, list includes such tv staples who don't necessarily qualify under the five-consecutive-year consideration or "same format" qualification but who've been around for a longer time than that.

Latter group includes such stars as Milton Berle, Arthur Godfrey (new format), Jackie Gleason, Ann Sothern, Garry Moore (with his new show, aside from the long-running "I've Got a Secret"), Tennessee Ernie Ford, Dinah Shore, Perry Como and Eddie Fisher (all having gone from 15-minute to hour formats), George Gobel (from half-hour to alternate hour), Steve Allen (from "Tonight" to an hour), Jack Paar (morning to afternoon to night), George Burns (turning solo) and Ed Wynn.

The lineup of five-year entries includes "Lassie," Jack Benny, Ed Sullivan, "GE Theatre," "What's My Line?" "Father Knows Best," Danny Thomas, Red Skelton, "I've Got a Secret," "U. S. Steel Hour," "December Bride," "I Love Lucy," "Your Hit Parade," Schlitz Playhouse," "The Lineup," "Person to Person" and "Name That Tune," all CBS-TV. On NBC-TV, there's Loretta Young, "Dragnet," "This Is Your Life," Groucho Marx, the Gillette fights, "People Are Funny" and "Omnibus." The ABC roster includes "You Asked for It," "Voice of Firestone," "Ozzie & Harriet," the Wednesday night fights, "Rin Tin Tin" and "Walt Disney Presents" (nee "Disneyland).

The statistics themselves tell only part of the story. For generally overlooked in the harum-scarum approach to television is the kind of stability indicated in the fact that 40% of video's programming fare has made it through five seasons or more. Fact is that it's the inferior programming that comprises the mass of the annual turnover, a natural process of elimination, while the worthier fare stays on. For every "Kraft Theatre" that's bounced in a season, there are a dozen "Sally" or "The Brothers" or "Suspicion," etc.

Adding to the overall impression of stability is the list of four-year entries, including Lawrence Welk, "Wyatt Earp," "Cheyenne," "Gunsmoke," "The Millionaire," Phil Silvers, "Hitchcock Presents," Bob Cummings, even the ABC-TV "Jubilee" country music stanzas, variously known as "Ozark Jubilee" and currently "Jubilee, U.S.A."

CBS Chief Beneficiary Of Carter Products Coin

CBS-TV, which wrapped up the entire Florida Citrus Commission tv budget for the coming season, has all but scooped up the tv coin for Carter Products for next season.

Of the nine shows bought by Carter, CBS buttoned up seven, "To Tell the Truth," "Doug Edwards With the News," "Sunday News Special" with Walter Cronkite, Pro Football Kickoff Series, Professional Hockey Games, The Orange Bowl Football Game and Gator Bowl Football Game.

Webs Alerted to 4 'Critical Areas' In AFTRA's New Contract Demands; More at Stake Than 10% Wage Hike

Having had nine days to digest the contract demands by American Federation of Television & Radio Artists, the networks now believe the situation to be most serious. Webs invariably keynote the reaction of all employer groups involved in these bi-annual dickers and fear the negotiations will be protracted because the atmosphere of compromise will be less in evidence than ever before.

In the judgment of the webs, the four critical areas are in the television code and concern rehearsal, revision in rates for across-the-board programs and the union request for control of all tape programs shown on network airtime. Fourth worry is the union's demand that any network affiliates struck by AFTRA must not be fed programming by the web signatories during the course of the fracas.

Industry received the demands Sept. 22 and will meet for the second time on Oct. 7, when employers will make counter offers.

The networks have not yet been able to evaluate what the demands AFTRA has made for the 1958-1960 contract will mean in actual dollar increases, but they say the demands call for an overall hike of "vastly more than 10%." Latter is the increase AFTRA has asked in straight fees, but it does not include the "hidden" costs resulting from a change in working conditions and hours.

Giving the webs the feeling of compromise will be lacking in AFTRA's attitude is the fomenting situation between the Federation and the Screen Actors Guild. As portrayed by the webs, the unions, in the fight centering on jurisdictional control of tape video, are each seeking import of actors, in the event the issue comes to a vote. Hence, in the effort to establish its worthiness to handle tape, AFTRA "will hold intemperately" to demands that might before have ended in compromise, webs say.

Seen to be one of the two most critical areas is the grouped demand being made for changes in rehearsal time and wages. According to the networks, the demand is four-ply: higher rehearsal fees, fewer hours of rehearsal before overtime takes effect, stricter restrictions on when rehearsals shall take place and increased fees for overtime rehearsal.

Attitude of the networks, regarding revision of rates on strip shows, is that this particular AFTRA demand will eliminate for all practical purposes the discounts

Maria Schell's TV Bow

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Maria Schell will make her television debut on "Playhouse 90" in "Word from a Sealed-Off Box" on Oct. 30. Actress was signed by producer Fred Coe for the Mayo Simon adaptation of a Henrietta Roosenberg New Yorker article, which Jack Smight will direct.

Actress just completed filming in "The Hanging Tree," Jurow-Shepard production for Warner Bros.

Coast TV Now 'Living' It Up

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Outlook for live programming originations here, extremely bleak as late as July, has perked considerably in the past few weeks. Result is that the Coast will originate some 11½ hours a week of nighttime, as compared with an anticipated eight and a half-hours back in July. Coast output will compare favorably with New York's 19 hours a week of live programming.

Principal reason for the upbeat situation, insofar as the Coast is concerned, is the downbeat sponsorship picture at the networks. Most of the newly added Hollywood originations stem from the reluctance of sponsors to buy into the expensively trapped vidpix skeins and the subsequent withdrawal of the telefilms by the webs. Replacements were less costly live sustainers. Hence such added starters as "Pursuit" on CBS, "Ellery Queen" on NBC and (still tentative) "Traffic Court" and "Stars of Jazz" on ABC.

If Hollywood's benefitted in the upbeat, it's a schizoid situation, since the live shows are replacing scheduled vidfilms which would have been produced here anyway. "Pursuit," for example, is replacing Ziv's "World of Giants"; "Stars of Jazz" is going into the time slot tentatively intended for "Tombstone Territory." and "Queen"

Grand Jury Fed Some Fresh Ammunition In Quiz of the Quizzers

The parade of former "21" contestants in the direction of the New York County District Attorney's office continues not so merrily. Simultaneously, the grand jury is looking into various quiz shows and it is anticipated that a Congressional committee or two will shortly be quizzing the quizzers.

A major development in the "21" case was James Snodgrass' charge that he was fed answers to questions and has proof to back up his charges. Snodgrass had been questioned by the D.A. and was scheduled to go before the grand jury. Others who had been talking to the grand jury included Harold Craig, winner of $106,000 on the Barry-Enright show as well as David Mayer, a 10-week contestant who had won $47,500 on the program.

Meanwhile, NBC said it was surprised by Snodgrass' charges and was launching a thorough investigation. The producers of "21" said they had been told by the D. A. that the latter's office hadn't released to the press any info regarding "21" and consequently attorneys for "21" had advised them not to give any statements at this time.

More than $1,000,000 in gross billings was obtained in the past two weeks at NBC-TV as a result of eight advertisers placing new orders and one sponsor coming through with a renewal.

Result of this sponsor flurry brings to nearly $3,500,000 biz in the cash register of NBC-TV's participating programs since Sept. 1. Previously reported was more than $2,000,000 from six advertisers.

Latest purchases were from Alliance Manufacturing Co. for participations on "The Jack Paar show"; Northan Warren Corp. for Cutex, also on Paar program; Dormeyer Corp., Paar show. Other new sponsors include Louis Marx Co.; Studebaker-Packard, Channel Master Corp., Mennen, and Belton Hearing Aid Co.

Renewal came from Philip Morris for Marlboro Cigarets calling for more than 100 participations on the Paar show.

THE TEXAN
With Rory Calhoun, Neville Brand, others
Executive Producers: Calhoun, Vic Orsatti
Producer: Jerry Stagg
Director: Jerry Thorpe
30 Mins.; Mon., 8 p.m.
BROWN & WILLIAMSON
CBS-TV (film)
(Ted Bates)

CBS is fighting fire with fire in slotting this new western series opposite NBC's high-rated oater, "Restless Gun." Based on preem show (29) "The Texan" will have to put a lot more into the scripting department if it is to compete successfully in the race to the rating corral.

Opener, "Law of the Gun" by Frank Moss from a story by Frank Gruber was slow and contrived. Story dealt with a tall-in-the-saddle character (Calhoun) who responds to a friend's (John Larch), plea for help after being jailed for allegedly murdering the 14-year-old sister of a rival rancher (Neville Brand). Naturally Calhoun believes in his friend's innocence and the rest of the show is taken up with his various efforts to prove this and, of course, the heavy eventually confesses to vindicate both the friend and the Texan who has become a very unpopular fellow around those parts.

Calhoun in the title role came off a little too strong and silent for believability. His performance was stiff and how much of this can be blamed on the sparseness of the script is questionable. By contrast, Neville Brand turned in a fine bit of acting as the villainous rancher who belatedly confesses to the accidental shooting of his sister. Karl Swenson as the sheriff with a conscience but no guts gave the role a creditable ring. Other supporting roles were strictly routine.

Producer Jerry Stagg and director Jerry Thorpe will need far better material to work with if "The Texan" is to stick around with some of its fast-moving, slickly-produced competitors.

Commercials plugged Viceroy and Kool ciggies. Current Viceroy blurb anent the thinking man's filter and smoking man's taste seem pretty far afield for a western viewer; however, they must be moving the goods. Syd.

U.S. STEEL HOUR
(Death Minus One)
With Meg Mundy, Alex Scourby, Beverly Lunsford, Carson Woods, Donald Moffat, Bryan Herbert
Executive Producer: George Kondolf (for Theatre Guild)
Director: Robert Stevens
Writer: Arthur Hailey
60 Mins., Wed., 10 p.m.
U.S. STEEL
CBS-TV, from N.Y.
(BBDO)

U.S. Steel ushered in its new season of alternate week hour live dramas last Wed. (24) with George Kondolf assuming the exec producer reins for the Theatre Guild and with an original teleplay by Arthur Hailey, who has established something of a rep for himself as Canada's answer to Alfred Hitchcock. Unfortunately it was anything but an auspicious kickoff.

Hailey's forte is suspense and tension, with a peculiar affinity for delayed time bombs. And so it was that "Death Minus One", last week's teeoff contribution, revolved around one of the more impressive V2 jobs all but ready to pop off—12 years later—in some war-devastated ruins adjacent to St. Paul's Cathedral in London. Seems a couple of kids accompanying their Trenton, N.J., mother on a tour of the Cathedral, went snooping in the ruins. Some of the structure collapses and the little girl is buried under the rubble. In the attempt to extricate her they come across the bomb which, in the ensuing disturbance, has been activated, and from then the mission is twofold—to save the girl and remove the bomb fuses.

The melodramatics got lost in the dust, of which there was plenty. In fact it was a case of misplaced concentration, for there seemed less concern over the human equation than in dramatizing flying beams and plaster. At one point it seemed like a herculean effort to budge one of the beams while 10 minutes later, with the accent now on the bomb, the same beam is cast aside casually.

As the pinned-in little girl Beverly Lunsford suggested a rumpled Alice In Rubbleland and tempoed her performance accordingly. Meg Mundy as the mother had little to do but look distraught. Alex Scourby as the London bobby on the rescue scene appeared as though he wished he were somewhere else in some other costume. Rose.

ED WYNN SHOW
With Jocklyn O'Donnell, Sherry Alberoni, Herb Vigran, Jocelyn Fax, others Producer: Ben Feiner Jr.
Director: William Russell
Writer: Devery Freeman
30 Mins.; Thurs., 8 p.m.
LIGGETT & MYERS
NBC-TV (film)
(McCann-Erickson)

This new Screen Gems' pic series is a folksy situation comedy offering with Ed Wynn as the central character. A veteran performer who's demonstrated a savvy approach to dramatic roles in tv via one-shot appearances over the past few years, Wynn still needs material on which to work. On the kickoff stanza (25) he didn't have much to go on.

The preem's story line was sentimental and hokey while the scattered gags were stale and soggy. The yocks on the soundtrack didn't sound very convincing either. Wynn was cast as lively old widower who lives in a college town with his two granddaughters, moppet Sherry Alberoni and teenager Jacklyn O'Donnell. On the first show, Wynn becomes involved in a fight with the local solons over an ordinance banning student boarders from residential homes. The story pursued its foregone conclusion without making a single surprise turn.

Wynn worked with an ingratiating bounce that managed to give some vitality to the show. Herb Vigran, as the friendly lawyer, performed in broad style, hewing to the cliched pattern of his role. Others in the cast handled their assignments in acceptable fashion. Herm.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS
(Profile of a Politician)
With Eric Sevareid
Producer: Bill Weinstein
Director: Roger Englander
Writer: Arthur Barron
Researcher: Stanford Mirkin
30 Mins.; Sun., 5 p.m.
CBS-TV, from N. Y.

As the first in a series of seven shows on the structure of American politics, CBS-TV Sunday (28) presented "Profile of a Politician," an insight into the workings and the mind of Jack P. Russell, boss of Cleveland's 16th ward and president of the Cleveland City Council. It was a disheartening glimpse, to say the least.

It is in public service programs such as this one that television fulfills one of its true and most vital functions. "Profile of a Politician" was exceedingly well done, mostly because it let the subject speak for itself. As a look at what are the underpinnings of the American democratic-political system, it was both searching and frightening, for it virtually proved how a comparatively few men can dominate American politics by dint of public apathy re politics on the local level.

Director Roger Englander tackled his subject head-on, and host Eric Sevareid made for the perfect commentator. The star of this show was Russell, the politician — hard-eyed, powerful, ruthless, the type of man who thrives on democracy but doesn't necessarily practice it. He has created his little empire in Cleveland, and rules it with an iron fist, dispensing favors with one hand and using them as a blackjack with the other.

"We get a man a job if he needs it," said Russell. "If he forgets us in his political activity, we may take it back again." It's as simple as that. The amazing part of the show was Russell's willingness to reveal his strategy—the files kept in his office, the open threats to those who don't fall in line, the three businesses that thrive while he collects only $7,000 on his political job. "These are the realities of precinct and ward life," said Sevareid, apparently quite aware that his listeners would be appalled by the picture of Jack Russell, politician, that emerged from the show.

Filmed parts on tape, which constituted a good 75% of the program, were well integrated, though there was a curious lapse in the editing since long scenes were repeated in toto for no good reason. Arthur Barron's script pulled the show together very well and kept that all-important distance which allowed the viewer to make up his own mind on the visual evidence presented.

The public has a tendency to be concerned mostly with national politics. The result, as this program showed, has been the concentration of power in the hands of a few clever men who know how to give and to take. In a sense, the profile of Jack Russell was a devastating one, because it proved how the processes of democracy can be corrupted in the name of politics. The only sound pinning on the show was the crack of Russell's whip. Hift.

THE BOB CUMMINGS SHOW
With Ann B. Davis, Rosemary De Camp, Dwayne Hickman, Barbara Nichols, others Producer: Paul Henning
Director: Bob Cummings
Writers: Henning, Dick Wesson,
30 Mins.; Tues., 9:30 p.m.
R. J. REYNOLDS
NBC-TV (film)
(William Esty)

Bob Cummings acts good, like a comedian should. Ditto the entire cast of the Winston-sponsored "Bob Cummings Show," as it began its fifth season Tuesday (23) on NBC.

The storyline, still about a girl-crazy photographer, is utter trivia and generally deals out some of the oldest, most utterly inane situations, but the zany acting makes it a lark.

For the semester's first stanza, producer Paul Henning and scribe Dick Wesson teamed to pen the tale of Schultzy's departure for a missiles factory, where the male pickings are plush. Ann B. Davis, a convivial scarecrow, essays the photog's secretary nicely. Although Barbara Nichols, enacting her replacement at the photo studio, became too strident at times, her portrayal of a dumb blond was mainly satisfying. The running roles of Cummings' on-stage sister and nephew, by Rosemary DeCamp and Dwayne Hickman, are most attractive. Art.

MICKEY MOUSE CLUB
With Jimmy Dodd, Mousketeers, others
Producer: Bill Walsh
30 Mins., Mon., Wed., Fri., 5:30 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
ABC-TV (film)

"Mickey Mouse Club" has lost none of its impact since last season, even though the current half-hour is merely a clever rehash of the material the show used in three previous semesters. "MMC" is on Mondays, Wednesday and Fridays and carries the Mousketeers, the Mickey Mouse "Newsreels," various variety artists (such as Harry Corbett, a talented pupetteer who appeared on the first show), and old Disney cartoons. Tuesdays and Thursdays, under the title of "Adventure Time," are the collation of the previous quarter-hour serials Disney used throughout the former regular sked.

On first show (29), editing was tight and the pace fast. As for the lack of new material, there is an age of juveniles who, even after only three years, have never seen this stuff before. This might not hold for "Adventure Time," which had many 10-to-14 old juves in its audience; they are old enough to remember. Art.

THE LINEUP

CBS-TV (film)
(Young & Rubicam)

If the viewer has seen one "Lineup" he's seen 'em all. Ordinarily this would tend to discourage future tuning in but this cops 'n' robbers half-hour meller has a brisk format that can be relied upon to lure the attention of the action fan. Differing little from preceding episodes was the initial installment of the series' fourth season Friday (26) on CBS-TV.

Here again Warner Anderson as Lieut. Ben Guthrie and Tom Tully as Inspector Matt Greb ferret out the wrongdoer against a background of San Francisco landmarks. Season's preem, authored by Fred Eggers and directed by Hollingsworth Morse, had the sherlocks attempting to trace a homicidal male who had a fancy for strangling women. Two corpses and some 26 minutes of footage later the crimes were duly solved.

Such a story would have been a natural for a lurid, sexy treatment. But "The Lineup" doesn't dig that approach, preferring to have the writer, cast and director play it straight with the accent on methodical gumshoeing. While there's nothing glamorous about the way the yarn usually unreels, nevertheless there's a steady, relentless tension inherent in the series that's sufficient to keep action devotees interested.

With boxing, "Adventures of Jim Bowie" and "Harbor Command" on rival nets, it appears that "The Lineup" has more than a fair chance of snaring a reasonable slice of the 10 p.m. audience. Picking up the tab this year is Procter & Gamble for Cheer detergent and Ivory soap. Filmed plugs are unobtrusive. Gilb.

OCTOBER CLASSIC
With Walter (Red) Smith, Phil Rizzuto
Producer: Burton Benjamin
Writer: Earle Luby
30 Mins.; Sunday (28), 6:30 p.m.
PRUDENTIAL INSURANCE
CBS-TV, from N.Y.
(Reach, McClinton & Co.)

As a prelude to the World Series which opens today (Wed.) in Milwaukee, CBS-TV came up with this special pre-season edition of "The 20th Century" series which is due to open formally in a few weeks. For the fans, this show was right on the ball with a rundown of exceptional plays and events from past series encounters.

Red Smith, N.Y. Herald Trib sports columnist, and Phil Rizzuto, ex-Yankee shortstop, opened and closed the show with some baseball chatter and predictions for the upcoming meet between the Yankees and Braves. But the main basis of the show were film clips out of the archives, recreating such moments as Babe Ruth's calling his home run blast against the Chicago Cubs in 1932; the third strike miss by Dodger catcher Mickey Owens in 1939; Dodger Al Gionfriddo's circus catch of Joe DiMaggio's drive in 1947; Willie Mays' sensational catch in the 1954 series with Cleveland; and the 1956 "perfect game" hurling by the Yankees' Don Larsen, among other highlights.

While the quality of the film sequences was uneven, it was good enough to catch the excitement of the game. Rizzuto furnished the baseball-wise commentary for the clips, avoiding for most part any unnecessary sensationalizing while occasionally adding some personal reminiscences. Herm.

CHEYENNE
With Ty Hardin, Claude Akins Dirk Baggot, Sue Randall, Hope Cabot, Jack Elam, Robert Warwick, others
Producer: Arthur W. Silver
Director: Alan Crosland Jr.
Writer: Alan Lipscott, Bob Fisher
60 Mins., Tues., 7:30 p.m.
JOHNSON & JOHNSON, NATIONAL CARBON CO.
ABC-TV (film)
(Y&R, Wm. Esty)

There's a new face in the ol' corral and, podners, he's gonna be all right. While the ol' Bronco Layne, that was Clint Walker, is panning gold and letting "Cheyenne" shift for itself, Ty Hardin, who used to buck the line for good ol' Texas A & M, is now fighting off the varmints for good old WB. He may look boyish but don't get 'im riled.

It may have been a tame start to get "Cheyenne" away on its fourth season, but the story by Alan Lipscott and Bob Fisher didn't call for much blood and thunder, what with Hardin leading a band of Quakers across the plains to California. It should be noted here that the writers have been in the comedy field almost exclusively and, as for Lipscott, he was writing gags long before Texas had a millionaire. They admirably resisted all temptation to slip in a gag or two. Not a laugh in a Lipscott-Fisher script? What'll they tell the kids?

For this season's getaway, the star carried more impact than the high-rated sagebrusher. What the viewers saw was a boyish-looking worthy, with the appearance of fuzz on his face rather than adult stubble. He was eased into his heroic role without the usual gunplay and dueling, although there were some rascals around trying to protect a gold strike against the peaceful migrants. Hardin kept them at a safe distance while the Quakers pursued their prayerful journey, and one of the gals, a real looker named Sue Randall, took a fast shine to the new Brone.

To whip up some excitement, producer Arthur Silver ordered a cloudburst during a prayer meeting and the thees and thous so inspired one of the baddies that he shot down one of his own. Now that things were peaceful again, Hardin rode off leaving behind the band of Quakers and a heartbroken lass.

It was too early to tell how Hardin will react to the gunslingin' and rough-and-tumble ways of the Old West, but there was plenty of evidence in his favor. He has the looks and build of a one-man law wave and knows how to time and punch a line. The heavies, Jack Elam and Claude Akins, and Robert Warwick (remember?) as head of the Quaker band, provided able seconding. Alan Crosland Jr., direction played on mood and character rather than explosive action. For want of a fourth sponsor, ABC used a spot to plug "The Real McCoys." Helm.

PERSON TO PERSON
With Edward R. Murrow, Jerry Lewis, Comdr. William R. Anderson
Producers: Jesse Zousmer, John Aaron
Directors: Robert Sammon, Robert Dailey, Charles N. Hill
Editors: David Moore, Charles Romine, Aaron Erlich, Liz Scofield
30 Mins., Fri.; 10:30 p.m.
P. LORILLARD, MAXWELL HOUSE
CBS-TV, from New York
(Lennen & Newell; Benton & Bowles)

Sixth year opener of the Ed Murrow's "Person to Person" was not one of the choicer sessions, yet it well bespoke the sturdiness of the format, for all the mileage it has run up. Teeoffer was marred not so much by a couple miscues and a momentary audio failure as by Murrow's obvious pique with them. The sound trouble occurred in one of "P to P's" more ambitious undertakings, namely a remote from the good submarine Nautilus, which proved the more interesting of the two segments.

First encounter was with comedian Jerry Lewis at the 30-room second-hand home he purchased from the late Louis B. Mayer. Lewis squeezed in some funny business during the usual tour of the premises, although some of it got squelched by Murrow's readiness with the next question. Par for the course, Lewis' wife and four sons got a look into the cameras, and the comic got a chance to plug his muscular dystrophy work and show off the house's pet gimmick, a convertible living room that makes like a CinemaScope theatre at virtually the push of a button.

Episode closed with hardly a fresh insight into Lewis' personal life nor hardly a revelation of any unknown offstage dimension to his character.

The peg for the camera expedition to the Nautilus was that it is the Navy home for Comdr. William R. Anderson and his "family" of over 100 sailors. Tour of the ship to the quarters of work and relaxation was rewarding, and Murrow's questions of the housekeeping and human interest sort —e.g. "How do the men keep from being bored during a solid month underseas?" and "How do you empty the garbage?"—were well-picked and brought enlightening results.

Comdr. Anderson gave a frank answer to Murrow's query of why he become a submariner, admitting it was because subs offer better opportunities for responsibility and advancement. He revealed he was soon being transferred from the sub to a Navy desk.

Kent commercials promised not to talk down to the audience and then promptly did. Les.

THE CALIFORNIANS
('Dishonor for Matt Wayne')

"The Californians" begins its new semester with an actionful story, "Dishonor for Matt Wayne," in which the marshal of old San Francisco is framed on a murder rap after being accused of running a crooked gambling joint. Richard Coogan is the harassed lawman-gambler, but in this yarn he receives a lot of help from a couple of new characters introed into the series on its opener. They're Arthur Fleming, as an attorney, and Carole Mathews, a gal who helps him run his games of fortune. Both are highly competent in their roles, and should add considerably to the show.

The sin-merchants who rule Frisco don't like the lawman agettin' in their way, so they plot a frame whereby he's fingered as having a crooked gambling hall. This works, and they follow it up with a neat murder frame, so the lawman finds himself in jail. A young attorney repping the heavies has a change of heart about the whole thing, and helps the marshall escape. In no time at all they pin the rap where it belongs, on the villains. However, the idea of a marshall also having a gambling house bothers the city fathers, and they solve all this by having the lawman turn title of his place over to Miss Mathews.

Richard Coogan turns in a good performance as the marshal, and receives fine assistance from Fleming, Miss Mathews, R. G. Armstrong and Harry Anterim. Producer-director Felix Feist handles his dual chores well. Singer Sewing and Lipton are the alternate bankrollers. Daku.

If the show's title did not serve as a constant reminder, it would be easy to forget that Sgt. Bilko isn't playing his improbable self but that someone else quite long ago embodied him for television. Phil Silvers and Bilko are by now interchangeable names for the same man, and the fictional handle appears to be gaining ground.

Which is to underscore the pleasant truth that there's plenty of life in the old con artist yet, as well as in this outlandish saga of a highly imaginary, but recognizable, peacetime army. Season's inaugurer was a real rollicker, giving clear evidence that the Bilko show is going to be a tough baby to beat in its timeslot, provided the writing bears up.

Initialer found Bilko buying an unopened crate for $25 at an army surplus auction in hopes it might contain some treasure. Turns out loaded with antique cavalry paraphernalia from a long-abandoned army post in California, but with it is a hand-sketched map which Bilko logically concludes points to hidden gold.

His determination to get at the treasure inspires him to the following achievements: bulldozing a small town mayor to convince him the N.Y. Yankees are moving to his burg; impersonating a World War I veteran to stir sentiment for the preservation of the old fort; maneuvering the U.S. Army into reopening the camp; and finally convincing his own colonel to volunteer for command. Nearly everyone in the platoon comes in for a brief bit along the way to build the laugh quotient.

Bilko's treasure turns out to be fool's gold, but Doberman saves the day by pointing out the nearness of Las Vegas, and everyone's happy again. Not exactly a morality play, but then it wouldn't be the army.

Schick has hopped onto a good thing, and the blurbs, per usual, were integrated in a fun way.

CAPTAIN KANGAROO
With Robert Keeshan
Producer: Robert E. Claver
Director: Peter Birch
Writers: Bob Claver, Bob Colleary
45 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 8 a.m.
Participating
CBS-TV, from N. Y.

CBS-TV has come up with a winner in its 45-minute early morning return of "Captain Kangaroo." Programmed cross the board, the show will keep the kiddy-set happy and the parents relieved for it's wholesome entertainment for the moppets.

Returning for the fourth season of the program is Bob Keeshan. He was the Clarabell of "Howdy Doody" and in other spheres as Tinker the Toymaker and Corny the Clown. Keeshan plays the role like he enjoyed doing it. He's sincere, amusing and has a pleasant voice. He roams the set petting the live and stuffed animals, gives out stop, look & listen safety advice as well as hints on how to be nice to mothers in general. All of this usually sounds corny but Keeshan manages to put sincerity and feeling into his work.

The first show caught featured film strips on Keeshan's tour of London and in particular an interview with a small English boy who was returning home. The film clips were not outstanding but they served the purpose in getting over the travel idea to the moppets and that little boys and girls across the sea are not very much different.

"Kangaroo" is a low budget show but one high on production values. Live chickens and a pony hold the interest of the children as well as puppets and toys in the "Treasure House," Keeshan's set and playground.

Most of the features that made "Kangaroo" a hit in previous years are back again. Bunny Rabbitt, a puppet, does a bit from an opera; there were clever cartoons featuring "Tom Terrific," a Terrytoon feature; and some chatter with "Mr. Greenjeans" in addition to Keeshan's running through a reading period.

The participating sponsors blend their blurbs well with animated sales messages done in good taste.

DONNA REED SHOW
With Carl Betz, Paul Petersen, Shelley Fabares, Jack Kelk, Howard Wendell, Alice Reinheart, Louise Lewis, Hugh Corcoran, others
Producer: Tony Owen
Director: Andrew McCullough
Writer: Phil Leslie
30 Mins., Wed., 9 p.m.
CAMPBELL SOUP, SHULTON
ABC-TV (film)
(BBD&O, Wesley)

A pleasant family situation comedy is offered in "The Donna Reed Show," which has the Wednesday at 9 p.m. spot on ABC-TV.

Out of the Screen Gems beltline, it has a good plus in pert, likeable Miss Reed. She plays the role of the wife of a busy smalltown pediatrician. Her family is Carl Betz as the doctor husband, Paul Peterson, as her young son, and Shelley Fabares as the teenage daughter. As penned by Phil Leslie, it was nice having the family in on the living room screen for a half-hour diversion.

Initial episode was concerned with various schemes to get the family away for a weekend. The teleplay wasn't a heavyweight in its class, but scripter Leslie did offer some light, warm moments even in the stock setting. The characters registered well and fun flowed over the half-hour span. Leslie's greatest weakness in the plot was his reliance on coincidence. Time and again it was used to keep the story going.

Carl Betz as the doctor husband was engaging. Paul Peterson as the precocious kid brother was winning, and Shelley Fabares, as the teenage sister, was just right. Director Andrew McCullough had the story moving at a neat clip and kept the laugh track subdued, which was a definite asset. Supporting cast was effective.

THE FURTHER ADVENTURES OF ELLERY QUEEN
With George Nader, Vaughan Taylor, David Apatoshu, Andrew Duggan, Ralph Dumke, others
Exec producer: Albert McCleery
Directors: Walter Grauman, Alan Cooke, Livia Granito, Alan Hanson, Lamont Johnson
Writer: Nicholas E. Baehr
60 Mins., Fri., 8 p.m.
RCA
NBC-TV, from Hollywood (color)
(Kenyon & Eckhardt)

There's undoubtedly a built-in audience for any series bearing the "Ellery Queen" tag but NBC-TV and helmsman Albert McCleery will have to do better than the opening show to hold on to it.

Preem showed a lot of promise in many aspects but the "Queen" contingent through the years has been built on solid "whodunit" story line which was lacking in the opening stanza called "The Glass Town." Series has recruited a flock of writers to contribute separate episodes so each week really is another "opening" and perhaps the errors of the lead hour will be avoided in the followups.

Major flaw in the kickoff show was that it wasn't necessarily an "Ellery Queen" program. Plot line could have been fitted around any tv hero, especially of the western do-gooder genre. The slick sleuthing that's been a "Queen" trademark to the mystery novel addicts was sorely missing in the opening show. It was nothing more than a routine meller with sociological overtones that's been done to death on tv's dramatic shows over the years.

Also George Nader, who plays the title role, is built along sagebrush hero lines which isn't quite in keeping with the smooth, urban quality that has made "Queen" a fiction standard. Nader, however, could possibly beat the rap as the series goes along because he's got a good voice (and it was used a lot on opening show in narrative) and a strong, good-looking face. He's building a new impression of "Queen" and it could work.

The plusses as evidenced on the showcaser were in casting supporting roles and camera work. The troupe was uniformly excellent and the lensing heightened the action. Show was caught in black-and-white and the pictures, especially the closeups, provided plenty of impact.

Plot line of the initialer concerned itself with the murder of a Grandma Moses-type small towner and the attempts of the people in that town to make their own sort of justice. Bigotry and intolerance were the real villains of the piece and the uncovering of the criminal was somewhat anti-climactic.

"Ellery Queen" would be better off if he didn't have to cope with that sort of egghead stuff.

ARTHUR GODFREY SHOW
With Jackie Cooper, Peggy King, The Axidentals; musical director, Bernie Green; announcer, Tony Marvin; choreographer, Frank Westbrook
Producer: William Hammerstein
Director: Mel Ferber
Writer: Larry Markes
30 Mins.; Tues., 9 p.m.
TONI, PHARMACEUTICALS (alt.)
CBS-TV, from N.Y.
(North; Parkson)

Having dropped "Talent Scouts" and "Friends," Arthur Godfrey now finds himself with a half-hour entry as his sole nighttime stint. Opener last Tuesday (23) emerged as "just another" variety show. The Godfrey name will probably help sustain it over the long pull —such is fame—with not a single departure from the norm and even Godfrey himself subdued in the process.

If the format can be pinned down, it probably had to do with sentimentality and nostalgia. The headman opened with a vocal of "Thank Heaven for Little Girls" amid the new craze of hula hooping, done by a bunch of juves. Guest Peggy King was in with an overly dramatic number. Jackie Cooper did a conversation piece with Godfrey that segued into a clip of Cooper's 1930 "The Champ" bringer-outer via the walloping rejection scene with Wallace Beery. After that, Cooper was seen wipping away a couple of tears. Then Cooper and Godfrey worked on "Last Night on the Back Porch" with some interpolated lyrics. The Axidentals (4) after a buildup by AG did an over-arranged "June Is Bustin' Out All Over."

Miss King's second number was more in her groove—"I'm Old-Fashioned." (Why does she insist on occasional emoting with "busy" production when, with her bright goodlooks, the simple ones are best for her?). Godfrey's big try toward the finish mark was "September Song." With his low-key approach, he got by. With Cooper on the drums and the other performers plying other instruments (Godfrey handling the uke, of course), the finale was a bit helter-skelter, lacking form. Nothing very exciting about the whole; an innocuous little thing, at best.

Godfrey, as per tradition, is fronting the commercials. Since he has long been regarded as one of the star salesmen of the industry, there's nothing of the offbeat about such personal commerce. The same cannot be said of some other performers, notably actors, who are getting their feet wet as direct pitchmen, presumably in line with what it sez in the contract.

YOU BET YOUR LIFE
With Groucho Marx, George Fenneman, Jack Meakin orch
Producer: John Guedel
Directors: Robert Dwan, Bernie Smith
30 Mins.; Thurs., 10 p.m.
LEVER BROS., TONI
NBC-TV (film)
(BBD&O, North)

Groucho Marx and John Guedel have made a wise format change in incepting their 12th radio-tv season of "You Bet Your Life." They've cut the number of contestants so that only two couples appear instead of three, giving Groucho a greater opportunity to showcase the interesting and occasionally oddball guests, and of course to develop his own dialog and situations vis a vis the contestants. Change is also suitable to the show's new 10 p.m. time slot.

The change worked excellently on the season's opener, with Groucho concentrating in the first round on Eddie Gevirtz, an L.A. furrier, w.k. for his local tv commercials which he delivers himself, replete with an inimitable Brooklyn accent and his own "intimate" style. Groucho went through all the paces and had a ball.

Second team comprised a former Miss Finland and a Hungarian fencing master, and naturally, Groucho and the fencer staged a duel onstage. In the past few years, Groucho's adeptness at physical comedy has tended to be overlooked, but he proved himself a pretty fair slapstician as well as with this bit. If anything, Groucho had less bite in his quips this outing, was a trifle less merciless than usual. But it didn't matter; as always, it was fun.

The quiz aspect of the show has always been secondary, but as per usual, it ran off neatly and quickly. George Fenneman continues to be an able backstop for Marx, and directors Robert Dwan and Bernie Smith click the show off in well-paced fashion. Quality of the Filmcraft production is good.

OLDSMOBILE SHOW
Producer: Ted Mills
Assoc. Producer: George Charles
Director: David Geisel
Writer: Sheldon Keller
30 Mins.; Wed., 9:30 p.m.
OLDSMOBILE
ABC-TV, from New York
(D. P. Brother)

After a run with the ill-fated "Big Record" show over CBS-TV last season, Patti Page has been placed in more comfortable surroundings by ABC-TV and the Oldsmobile people. It's a pleasant little variety musicale that plays up Miss Page's homespun personality and pop pipes in a way that adds up to a diverting half-hour that will keep the thrush's fans happy.

There's a smoothness and easy-going quality to the show, as evidenced on the preem stanza last Wednesday (24), that shows production and performance care. For the opener Miss Page worked neatly through "Let There Be Love," "Summertime," "If Dreams Came True," "The Way You Look Tonight," "Fibbin'" and "Left Right Out of Your Heart." A vocal chorus gave a pretentious air to some of the offerings but when she worked with a keyboard assist from Rocky Cole the songbag had lots of body.

Walter Pidgeon, the initial guester, was spotted in a production-reading sequence mouthing lines by Wordsworth and Shakespeare while Melissa Hayden, Matt Mattox supplied a ballet picture. It may not have been the right fodder for Miss Page's pop fans but it did show some thought and originality on the parts of producer Ted Mills and director David Geisel. However, the bulk of show is on the thrush's back and this time it looks like she can pull it through.

The commercial spiels are set up in such a way that the sponsor identification between "Patti and Olds" may eventually become as strong as that of "Dinah (Shore) and Chevvy." And that's what Detroit seems to want.

THIS IS YOUR LIFE
With Ralph Edwards, host
Producer: Axel Gruenberg
Director: Dick Gottlieb
Continuity Editors: Paul Phillips, Mort Lewis
30 Mins., Wed.; 10 p.m.
PROCTER & GAMBLE
NBC-TV, from Hollywood
(Benton & Bowles)

Ralph Edwards, whose "This Is Your Life" first began poking into people's private lives on NBC Radio back in 1948, started its seventh video season Wednesday (24) via NBC-TV. While six years on the visual medium is a long time to be shoveling out human interest, it's apparent that this formula must be a sound one else these half-hour "living biographies" would have faded like the end of a rainbow many moons ago.

Subject for the season's initialer was Steve Allen. Those viewers who revel in harmless sentiment of bygone years no doubt enjoyed the Allen chronicle replete with snapshots from the family album plus appearances of friends and members of his family. On hand, among others, was the comedian's mother, Belle Montrose Allen who once trouped in vaude with her late husband.

Mrs. Allen's yesteryear reminiscences lent a nostalgic touch as did recollections of her son's Chicago highschool teacher and those of actor Richard Kiley who was a teenage associate. Throughout the proceedings, as per usual, Edwards busily flitted about interviewing the subject's friends and relatives and ultimately all the pieces in the Allen ladder to fame were duly fitted together.

Fortunately, for both Allen and the less vicariously inclined viewer the sketch of his career wasn't overly sentimental. But host Edwards, a high priest of the heart-tug and moist handkerchief, couldn't let the show go by without the lachrymose effort. This was the appearance of a Vietnamese boy "adopted" by Allen under the Foster Parents Plan. On a happier note was the presence of the comedian's wife, Jayne Meadows, and his three sons by an earlier marriage.

Again sponsor this season is Procter & Gamble on behalf of a variety of products ranging from Prell shampoo to Gleem toothpaste. While the Allen "command performance" was only mildly eye-dampening as already noted, next week's appearance of baseball star Roy Campanella should have all the "Life" regulars reaching for the Kleenex.

PLAYHOUSE 90
(The Plot to Kill Stalin)
With Melvyn Douglas, Eli Wallach, Oscar Homolka, E. G. Marshall, Thomas Gomez, Luther Adler, others Producer: Fred Coe
Director: Delbert Mann
Writer: David Karp
90 Mins.; Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
AMERICAN GAS, KIMBERLY-CLARK, ALLSTATE INSURANCE
CBS-TV, from Hollywood
(Lennen & Newell, FC&B, Leo Burnett)

As live tv programming goes, "Playhouse 90," the hour and a half CBS-TV Thursday night entry, is still endowed with that creme de la creme look, which spells class. It doesn't necessarily follow (although it helps) that the opening attraction will be of smash proportions. Last Thursday's "The Plot to Kill Stalin," for example, was hardly that. But like "Requiem for a Heavyweight" of two years ago, it could be the second time out, or even the third. Sooner or later and spread out intermittently over the season, the real thing comes along to vest the medium with stature.

This is the third season round for "Playhouse 90" and, based on past performance plus this season's production revamping, new refinements and property-talent acquisitions, there is every reason to assume that the 90-minute showcase will again do the medium proud. A Herbert Brodkin-Fred Coe-John Houseman-Arthur Penn-Gordon Duff production marquee (not to mention a directorial swing shift comprising such stalwarts as Vincent J. Donohue, John Frankenheimer, George Roy Hill, Delbert Mann, Robert Mulligan, George Schaefer) by any law of averages must invite some 10 feet tall product. One miss doesn't erase such lofty intent and ambition. Such are the painstaking auspices under which "Playhouse 90" returns for the new season.

If David Karp's "Plot to Kill Stalin" wasn't precisely a masterpiece, the Fred Coe-Delbert Mann teamup and its casting of Melvyn Douglas, Eli Wallach, Oscar Homolka, E. G. Marshall, Thomas Gomez and Luther Adler alone merited a tune in. That kind of dramatis personnae, on or off tv, is hard to come by these days.

Based on hindsight and supposedly authenticated documentation (the N.Y. Times' Harrison Salisbury was brought in as technical adviser), Karp's play of the conspiracy and counter-conspiracy behind the Kremlin walls from the Nov. '52 hatching of the plot to kill Stalin until his death in March '53 was not without interest. But if the play as a whole failed to create mounting tensions it was due to the johnny-one-note plateau on which it was performed. Here and there, in the unfolding of the fears, suspicions, hatred and talks of violence that permeated the plot, there was a need for some climactic touches to stir the viewer and heighten the tensions. Instead it played itself out obediently, on cue, with seldom if ever a slipup. Douglas more often than not met the physical exactitudes and requirements of the pipe-smoking Stalin; Oscar Homolka very often approximated the vodka-imbibing Khrushchev with what we've been led to accept as a strange admixture of buffoonery and sinister cunning (in one scene Stalin holds him up to ridicule in forcing him to do a dance), then suddenly reverted back to being Homolka; Luther Adler gave a realistic portrayal of the fear-ridden Molotov; Thomas Gomez fitted snugly into the Malenkov part; Eli Wallach made a believable Poskrebyshev, Stalin's ever faithful hatchet man, doomed to oblivion after Stalin's death. It was a field day for the makeup artist, who probably rates equal billing with the others, for there's no doubt that the "how did they look" aspect of the production vied with the script itself (and sometimes overshadowed it) in commanding the attention of the viewer.

In Karp's book (from his five years later vantage point) everybody without exception comes out a villain and a potential murderer. He follows Stalin from his initial apprehensions and fears ("I'm surrounded by wolves"); his decision to wipe out the old Politburo, with (Molotov, Beria, Malenkov, Khrushchev, etc.) as marked men. He dictates the purge of Jewish doctors on a trumped up charge to pave the way for the liquidation of Beria. Then the sinister whisperings and plottings of Malenkev, Beria, Molotov and Khrushchev, one played against the other, and finally Stalin confronting the plotters with the culminating heart attack. Khrushchev is portrayed as the arch villain of them all

As a footnote to history, it was worth the try. But as tv dramaturgy it lacked an excitement.

Writers: Bridget Boland, Philip Guard, Michael Ashe, Michael Meyer, Robert Rietty, Charles Terrot
120 Mins., Wed., 8 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

To celebrate its third anniversary and to inaugurate the fourth year of commercial tv, Associated-Rediffusion stepped up its budget to present six playlets with a common theme over a two-hour period. What was undoubtedly intended to be a spectacular birthday program turned out to be nothing more than a long drawn-out and rather trivial collection of indifferent stories.

The program had had an exceptional and expensive buildup. A-R scouted the continent for six girls to star in each of the plays and to bring them to London for rehearsals and production the company chartered an aircraft and took out a party of newsmen to meet them in Paris. The publicity was more impressive than the finished product.

Although his name would probably appeal to the majority of British viewers, George Sanders made a negative contribution in his role as introducer of the plays. His "worldly-wise" comments on the subjects of women and love included almost every cliche in the book. He was a little too suave in manner and at no time has anything of importance or interest to add to the subjects he was introducing.

The six plays were set in different parts of Europe, but, surprisingly, Great Britain itself was excluded. The first, "After So Long," introduced Scilla Gabel from Italy and had Rome as its background. Terence Morgan appeared as a businessman who returned to the capital after a five year absence to resume his association with a married woman. In the interim she had a couple of children, but had omitted to mention this fact in her regular letters to him. Bridget Boland, a highly competent writer, has done much better than this novelettish stuff.

"Willi," by Philip Guard, had the Austrian Tyrol as its setting and told a rather pointless story about a British tourist who got trapped in the mountains by a wily, but attractive, girl. Frances Martin, imported from Austria, played the lead in rather coy fashion.

Of the six subjects "The Return" was the only one with a theme bearing on reality. Annette Grau, from Germany, murdered the man who had been her wartime lover, after bribing a key witness to get his acquittal in a war crimes trial. The man she killed had been responsible for her father's death in a concentration camp.

The oddest entry was "Song Without Words," aimed to prove, presumably, that love can triumph over the language barrier. The principal characters were played by John Fraser, as a British tourist, and Ann-Marie Gyllenspetz, a local girl, who met on a pleasure boat in Stockholm. She didn't speak a word of English and they had to rely on natural means of communication. Anyway, it didn't place much of a strain on the dialog writer.

"A Candle For the Madonna" was a typical paper-back type story in which a slut of a girl was helped by a blind guitarist. They go off together but the girl was never able to get away from her past. Maria Jesus Cuadra was the import from Spain.

Finally, "The Stowaway," which featured Yvonne Monlaur from France with Daniel Massey, was a rather tame effort about a shipboard romance. The girl showed a good provocative personality.

George Melachrino's concert orchestra backed the entire two-hour bill. At times, particularly in the earlier stages, the background music was overpowering and almost drowned some of the dialog. Norman Hartnell did quite a job with some of his creations. Myro.

LIFE WITH THE LYONS
With Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon, Barbara Lyon, Richard Lyon, others
Writers: Bebe Daniels, Bob Ross and Bob Lock Director: John Phillips
30 mins., Fri., 6:10 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

The Lyon family is back in another domestic comedy series which will be aired every other week by Associated-Rediffusion. The first series, screened a few months back as a followup of a radio show featuring the Lyons, maintained a favorable audience reaction throughout its run and there's little reason why the current skein should not repeat the previous success. It is neatly produced, and the action suits the zany antics of the family.

On its first outing the show earned yocks with a script about a crazy livestock mixup. Ben Lyon had a yen to keep chickens but at a cattle market Bebe Daniels unwittingly bid for a prize cow. Ensuing action had the family keeping the steer a secret from Ben by hiding it around the house. Bary.

CHELSEA AT NINE
With Maria Meneghini Callas, Don Adams, Jacques Chazot and Rene Bon, Digby Wolfe, Chris Barber's Jazz Band with Ottilie Patterson, Lionel Murton, Peter Knight's orch, the Granadiers
Producer: Wendy Toye
Director: Silvio Narizzano
60 mins., Tues., 9 p.m.
Granada-TV from London

Granada-TV led into a new series of "Chelsea At Nine," its high-class variety show, with a strong and well balanced lineup that got the offering off to a worthy start. Show regularly boasted an out-of-the-rut bill when it was last in the schedules, though was seldom listed in the network ratings, but on its first showing in the latest skein, it certainly merits a placing.

Heading the bill was top opera star Maria Callas, who was in magnificent form singing in two arias, "Casta Diva," from "Norma," and "One Fine Day," from "Madam Butterfly." Miss Callas demonstrated her sparkling personality and was a fine show topper.

Making his British tv debut, Yank comic Don Adams scored a big hit for himself with a good delivery, warm approach and nice material. His throwaway gags brought some hefty yocks and his observation humor earned him a stout sendoff. Another comedy act, this time based on ballet, came via Jacques Chazot and Rene Bon, who were in fine form with a Black Swan routine. Chazot, as the ballerina, aided by Bon, provided a lot of fun and some fine dancing. The third comedy entry was supplied by British comic Digby Wolfe, who had some scathing material based on a take-off of a BBC-TV program "Does Class Really Matter?" He made the most of his spot.

The Chris Barber Jazz in Britain, made a rousing act with a couple of renderings—"Muskat Ramble," and "Maryland," while the band's songstress Ottilie Patterson vocalized strongly on "Salty Dog." Show was emceed fluently and capably by Lionel Murton, while the resident song and dance line, the Granadiers were good in a couple of spots. Musical accompaniments from the Peter Knight orch were first class. Bary.

TAKE YOUR PICK
With Michael Miles, others
Director: Audrey Starrett
Producer: Arlington Television and Radio Ltd.
30 mins., Fri., 8 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London.

"Take Your Pick," back again in a peak Friday night viewing slot, was the most popular quiz show aired by British commercial tv before it was rested during the summer months, and on several occasions headed the network Top 10 ratings. It is by no means a show for the eggheads but sets out and succeeds to attract the average family audience with broad humor, simple questions and a wide variety of useful prizes. Resident question master Michael Miles is a fast talker and has established a slick style for conducting the offering. Program is prefilmed.

Contestants go through a series of obstacles before getting a stab at the prizes. There are forfeits to pay, a 60-seconds spot where the player must answer questions without the use of the words "yes" or "no," and finally three questions which lead up to the prizes. Then Miles turns on the heat with some snappy cash bidding for the keys to the boxes selected by the players—seven of which have genuine prizes and three duds. Bary.

DOUBLE YOUR MONEY
With Hughie Green, others
Producer: Eric J. Croall
Director: Bill Turner
30 Mins., Thurs., 8:30 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

One of British commercial tv's most popular quiz games, "Double Your Money" has returned in its fourth series. One of its major attractions is quizmaster Hughie Green who is probably more of a viewer draw than the game itself. He puts the accent on comedy and neatly makes contestants feel at ease. Show is pre-filmed and the offering runs along at a racy pace. Top prize to be won is worth only $90, but there's also a treasure trail worth $2,800 if a competitor wins the $90 and gets a test question right.

In the opening show of the new series prize money won amounted to only $14 shared between two players, one of whom was Ben Lyon and did the spot for laughs. Two other contestants were knocked off when going for the uppper bracket prizes. Bary.

NIGHTCAP
With The Stargazers, Bernie Fenton Quintet
Producer: Peter Glover
20 Mins.: Sun., 11:10 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

A lively yet relaxing 20 minutes of songs from a stylish, popular group (four men and a girl) which is skedded for six weeks and makes ideal late viewing for Sunday nights. Slickly produced by Peter Glover, potpourri of song has warmth and speed and the Stargazers do a standout job.

The combo opened with a brisk medley of 11 songs including "Room With a View," "Love is the Sweetest Thing," "You Are My Lucky Star," "Miss Otis Regrets," "Mountain Greenery," "Who Can Ask for Anything More" and other nostalgic items. This was followed by a new number, "Moon Talk," and then a selection of Judy Garland songs; "Just Wild About Harry," "For Me and My Gal," "Coupla Swells," "Somewhere Over the Rainbow" and "Trolley Song." In this interlude the femme member of the Stargazers gave a swell imitation of Miss Garland. The act was rounded off with "It's Dreamtime."

The singing owes much to the informal setting, with one of the members at the piano and the others drifting around the lounge as if they were simply winding up a cheerful evening at home. Bernie Fenton's Quintet gave polished backing. Rich.

MARY BRITTEN MD
With Brenda Bruce, Ronald Howard, others
Writer: Peter Key
Producer: Hugh Munro
30 Mins., Sat., 6:30 p.m.
Southern Television from Southampton

Southern Television's first regular contribution to the network, "Mary Britten MD," has the makins of a good weekly human domestic series. The two central characters, around whom the plot is built, are amiably played by Brenda Bruce and Ronald Howard, as a professional couple settling in a new town in the South of England. He's taking up the post of head teacher at a new progressive school, and she, although a qualified doctor, is looking forward to becoming a plain housewife. Hugh Munro's production establishes the right atmosphere in which it is easy to accept events, and sets by Reece Pemberton are realistic. There's also the added attraction of location shots of the rolling south of England countryside.

Opening episode dealt with the settling in of the couple at Farrant, their new home town. They encountered some initial frigidity from the locals and were let down by the owner of the house, they were to rent. Finally they got an apartment in a doctor's house and Miss Bruce was sent back to her profession (against her better judgment) when a small boy was injured outside the house. Series looks set to catch a large regular following and become a stout episoder. Bary.

WILLIAM TELL
With Conrad Phillips, Jennifer Jayne, Richard Rogers, Willoughby Goddard, Peter Hammond, Roy Purcell, James Booth, Celia Hewitt, others
Writer: Ralph Smart
Producer: Ralph Smart
Director: Peter Maxwell
TV Adaptation: Doreen Montgomery
30 Mins., Sat., 5:10 p.m.
Associated TeleVision from London

Co-produced by National Telefilm Associates and Incorporated Television Program Co., the vidpix version of "William Tell" has made its bow on British commercial tv. It proves to be a tepid meller skein set in Switzerland with a familiar storyline which should make it suitable as an average entry for the juve trade.

Cast, headed by Conrad Phillips in the title role, makes a moderate job of a script which never reaches any great heights. The writing is often trite and the situations easily predictable, while the players lack enthusiasm. Performances are generally stereotyped, with Phillips cast as a dashing saviour of the Swiss peasants who depends on his dead-eye with a crossbow and superhuman quick thinking to outwit the local arch villain. The tyrant, played by Willoughby Goddard, is an outsize suppressor of the people, who spends his time thinking of ways to capture the hero of the piece. Jennifer Jayne and Richard Rogers figure vaguely in the story as Tell's wife and son. Production, despite the panoramic beauty of the Swiss lakes, is obvious and heavy-handed and lacks color.

Entry caught put the focus on the villain who, in a bid to capture Tell, nabbed six of the hero's villagers as hostages. Tell saved the day by outwitting the entire army. Bary.

IT CAN HAPPEN TOMORROW
With Percy Cudlipp, others
Producer: John Irwin
Director: Jock Watson
15 mins., Sun., 5 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

Designed for an audience between the age group of 13 to 21, this show should also appeal to the older members of the community, especially so since its theme is science. Show, so the programmers state, sets out to bridge the gap between modern scientists and today's young people. It is introduced by w.k. journalist Percy Cudlipp, editor of the New Scientist, who, though he displayed a lack of humor in the show under review, gets straight down to hard facts.

The question posed in Cudlipp was which should be given preference: medical research or more knowledge about the depths of the sea? Though he was assisted by Dr. Robert Dietz of the U. S. Navy, who talked about the unknown deeps and showed some interesting film, Cudlipp did not draw any conclusive arguments but perhaps that will be done in ensuing programs. Nevertheless, the show has a wide field of interest upon which to draw. Bary.

NEW HORIZON
With Dr. J. Bronowki, others
Prod.-Dir.: Geoffrey Hughes
Script Editors: Hugh Pitt, Stanley Craig
30 Mins.; Tues., 10:15 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion from London

One of Britain's top tv star scientists, Dr. J. Bronowski has, in past series for Associated-Rediffusion, probably done more to explain the wonders of science to the layman than anyone else. Back again with a new skein, this likeable man is assured of a sizeable audience. Production is maintained at a high level and good use is made of cameras.

Bronowski opened his new series with a show subtitled "Seeing Is Believing," in which, with the aid of several experiments, including a number of optical illusions, he demonstrated how the brain dictated what the eye saw. Vision, he explained, was a matter of conditioning. The scientist conveyed his explanations in a good intimate style. Bary.

THE ARMY GAME
With Michael Medwin, Alfie Bass, Bill Fraser, Norman Rossington, Ted Lune, C. B. Poultney, others
Director: Milo Lewis
30 mins., Fri. 8:30 p.m.
Granada-TV, from Manchester

The return of this show to the schedules has led to much speculation as to how it would come over minus its star attraction, Bernard Bresslaw. Through his role in past series as a dumb, gangling soldier, Bresslaw played a big part in putting the offering in the Top 10 network ratings and became almost a national figure. The web has, however, replaced him with Ted Lune, a comedian who looks like a hairpin, has an offbeat style of comedy, and looks a fair bet to step in where Bresslaw left off.

The show is based on the exploits of a gang of British soldiers who are constantly thinking up new ways of making a fast buck and outwitting their sergeant. Script makes fun of army life and is essentially British in its humor content. There are a lot of authentic touches of service life and the opening offering introduced the new lineup which comprised an eccentric major; a top sergeant with a mean streak; a scheming corporal, and three privates. Bary.

MUSIC SHOP
With Teddy Johnson, Jill Day, The Polka Dots, Eddie Thompson, Sheila Rose, Jack Parnell's orch.
Producer: Dicky Leeman
25 mins., Sun., 2:50 p.m.
Associated TeleVision from London

As its title implies, "Music Box" concerns itself mainly with music. It's pleasant Sunday afternoon fare which brings a number of guest artists before the cameras to have a word with emcee Teddy Johnson and then do their stuff. Johnson, himself a songster, has a mellow personality and is well suited to the show. Both production and decor are simple but adequate and the program entertains.

This first offering had a well balanced lineup headed by lush songstress Jill Day who gave out with a zippy version of "I Won't Dance." Completing the layout were blind pianist Eddie Thompson who played good jazz with his interpretation of "Can't Get Started,"; The Polka Dots, one of the most progressive male vocal quartets in Britain; 15-years-old songstress Sheila Rose, who showed remarkable range and tonal qualities in "I Could Have Danced All Night"; and a combo supplied by Jack Parnell which made sweet music. Bary.

THE JACK JACKSON SHOW
With Glen Mason, Malcolm Jackson, Bernard Landy, Barbara Windsor, others
Producer: Peter Glover
30 mins., Wed., 11 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

This program was one of commercial tv's strongest weapons in the battle for the teenage audience. It was played against BBV-TV's "6-5 Special" on Saturday evenings and won a large viewership. Now it's back in the schedules with a change in lineup and in an offpeak midweek slot. Basically the show has not changed. It's as zany as ever and slickly produced. Cast still earns large yocks for good comedy miming to top and unusual platters and British recording artists are invited along to plug their latest waxings. Jack Jackson has an effervescent personality and a good sense of fun and has able support from the resident line-up.

In the opening program guest artists were Alma Cogan, Dennis Lotis, Malcolm Vaughan, Lorrae Desmond and the Jazz Couriers, a modern combo fronted by tenormen Tubby Hayes and Ronnie Scott. Bary.

A SONG FOR EVERYONE
With Kenneth McKellar; guest, Max Jaffa
Director. Eddie Fraser
25 Mins.
BBC-TV, from Glasgow

Kenneth McKellar, Scot tenor who has become a top name in his own country within recent years, stars in this informal song program, and scores via sincerity and simplicity, allied to fine set of pipes. He gives out strongly in such tunes as "Garden Where the Praties Grow," "A[illegible] Curd Thee," and "Donkey Serenade." Also regis-

Studio One

A long and often distinguished series came to an end Monday night (29) when the Westinghouse "Studio One" on CBS-TV presented its last show, "Image of Fear." Based on an intriguing idea, the James Cavanaugh script somehow failed to carry it through and the play, despite several exciting moments, had a static quality.

A good cast had been assembled for this final show. Yarn was about a royal family in exile and the upheavals in their lives when, for a brief few hours, it seems as if the monarchy is to be reestablished. Some of the characters were wholly convincing. Others didn't come through. In any case, despite several very good performances, the overall result was disappointing.

Eugenia Leontovich played the empress in exile. She had dignity, but the part was overdrawn and generated no sympathy whatever. Lili Darvas turned in a sock characterization as the dominated sister who takes refuge in drink and finally makes an attempt on the empress' life. Miss Darvas did quite a remarkable job with the role. Rod Taylor was handsome but not very convincing at the Crown Prince; Nina Foch seemed misscast and Donald Harron had a sympathetic part as the one member of the family who wanted to forget about the past. Buz Kulik's direction let the play down.

"Studio One" has been on the air for very close to 10 years. Westinghouse picked it up in May of 1949. For the past season, the show originated in Hollywood, which added nothing to its quality. Monday night's show reemphasized that fact.

As in so many times in the past, Betty Furness delivered the Westinghouse pitch Monday night. She seemed a little less impersonal than usual and her voice was higher pitched. A new hairdo and sack dress completed the impression of a "new personality." Like "Studio One," Miss Furness apparently feels that it's time to change. Hift.

Ed Sullivan Show

Ed Sullivan had a lot of show and nearly all of it out of the vintage stocks on his Sunday (28) edition. There were nearly two of everything, but it seemed to work out excellently because of the prime talents involved.

One of the strong points of this session was the comedy. With the pennant winning N. Y. Yankees on stage, Wayne & Schuster, Sullivan's Canadian caperers prepared an excellent baseball skit in which the Yanks played the Liverpool White Spats. They came equipped with a full team behind them, and they had a jolly good time as did the audience in this scene. These lads are articulate, literate and inventive—also funny.

Another comedian on the bill was Shecky Greene who seems to have been discovered anew in the lounges of Las Vegas. Greene has a lot of funny lines and an expert, hardhitting delivery which he used to excellent advantage in this instance.

The dance department was really loaded. There were two flamenco displays, either one of which would have served the name and entertainment requirements. Trini Reyes led off with a briefie with backing from the talented Los Chavales de Espana. The major flamenco effort was by Roberto Iglesias y Ca., in a dramatic reading of a toreador making a comeback against his will and coming to a fatal conclusion. Iglesias is an interesting and fiery performer as well as an excellent dancer and did well. Also among the dancers was Bobby Van with backing by harpist Robert Maxwell. Both are fine artists, and it seemed unnecessary to have the angel and pearly gates trappings which seemed to detract from their sock work.

Among the singers, Julie Wilson, doubling from the St. Regis' Maisonette, appeared in two spots which divided her effectiveness. Her opening was in the metier of a throwaway, and one tune in her second stint didn't get her off the ground high enough. However, she's quite decorative. The second singer must be quite a man, being engaged to Brigitte Bardot. Sascha Distel is an entertainer, and presumably a good one. He sang "Parlez Moi D'Amour" and although a guitarist by training, he did well in this number. He's a charmer. Jose.

Pro Football

Tape playbacks at intermission of the touchdown plays and other highlights was a Chi Cardinals-N. Y. Giants innovation Sunday afternoon over CBS-TV and a good thing, too, for at least a couple of reasons. One were the intrusive commercials which blacked-out a forward pass and a kickoff and the other was the poor camera work generally; the lenser just didn't seem to know how to follow the ball and the ball-carrier. It was irritating the way he lost both and, in one instance, when he was on the play for some reason he switched cameras and lost the action. At another instance the returned kickoff was only picked up as the ball-carrier was being tackled upfield instead of following him from the catch. The announcer was on the beam but his lenser wasn't. Abel.

Breakfast in Hollywood

A radio standby for many years, "Breakfast in Hollywood" has been revived by KTLA in Los Angeles for the more difficult medium of television, but it passes the initial test of its transformation as a frankly cornball but engaging hour for the busy housewife. The lady of the house, busy with her chores, need not plant herself in front of the set to view these proceedings; only occasional video consultation is necessary, for the audio tells the story as well as radio does.

The show amounts to a daily "romper room" for the less sophisticated middle-aged housewife, but, within its limited appeal to this very widespread group, scores as a well-planned, though seemingly informal, get together spiced by the surprise comic flights of an occasional interviewee. Chatter ranges from the inane "Oh, you're from Inglewood—do you know the Miller's out there?" type to the unconsciously funny "I was a switchboard operator in a Chinese laundry in Honolulu 20 years ago" variety. "Features" and "honors" run rampant, but keep matters rolling along. Show, which must set an alltime high in the matter of honors bestowed, honors everything from "someone in the U.S. celebrating her hundreth birthday" to "someone somewhere having a bit of trouble."

Harry Babbitt, attempting to fill the well-worn shoes of radio's late Tom Brenneman, makes an affable emcee, and lends his still-vibrant voice to a few tunes as an added contribution. He manages to get the most out of a roomful of mostly elderly ladies gathered at the Town and Country Room of Hollywood's Plaza Hotel, from which the station beams a daily remote. Director Russ Randall and producer Emma Helen Bodd have provided a well-paced hour-long entry that may be heavy on gushy sentiment and lowbrow humor, but one that matches the apparent demand of the predominantly femme local morning audience. A Chet Midendorf production, only two blurbs by Flav-R Straws interrupted the initial offering. Tube.

Colgate Theatre

Out of the Four Star stable (into the Tuesday night "Colgate Theatre") came "Macreedy's Woman," a pilot starring Jane Russell as the singing hostess-owner of a nitery. Despite the Russell name, it's painfully obvious why this didn't sell. The story is almost conspicuous by its absence; Miss Russell shows little emotion in her role, lacking warmth and expression; direction is erratic.

Into Miss Russell's fancy saloon comes a wanderer claiming her late husband owed him $500, and he has an IOU to prove it. For reasons never known until the end, she refuses to pay, but offers him a job as an 88'er in her club. He reluctantly takes it, but is playing the ivories with those five C notes in his eyes, even considers a robbery to get the coin. Meanwhile, it develops the late MacReedy was a really nice character, who reformed the bartender who had been a Skid Row bum, etc. Nothing much really happens, except that Miss Russell sings a coupla tunes to display her good set of pipes. Eventually, the guy gets his money, and it develops the boss kept it originally because she knew he needed a job more than the money. This nitery was more a reform school than a club, as the guy remarks.

Don Durant gives better than what he got as the out-of-luck 88'er, and Sean McClory and Jonathan

WPIX Treads Cultural Waters, Makes Going To School Via TV a Romp

New York City's first public-supported educational tv project is an edifying experience. What the Board of Regents of the New York State Education Department has done over the leased facilities of WPIX on a five-hour a day schedule is nothing short of remarkable.

Working under the most difficult circumstances, James Macandrew, executive head of the project, corralled a posse of preceptors who know their stuff and sell it with consummate skill, showmanship and thorough educational validity.

This is glowing daytime tv and in addition to providing effective video classroom teaching within a 100-mile radius of Channel 11's transmitter it could drastically change the daily household pattern by bringing the housewife, young and old, back to the electronic school room for further adventures in cultural waters.

The tv lessons, as now constituted, consist of Spanish, Math, Science, English, Pre-School Education, Music, Physics, Arts and Crafts, Citizenship Education, Science for Elementary School Teachers and Joe Bolton's simplified newscasts. Currently, the state school project calls for 28 hours and 20 minutes of video teaching but starting Monday (6) it'll be stepped up to some 35 hours of daytime weekly instructions.

It is astonishing to watch the teachers as they skillfully impart their wisdom to the moppets in the classroom and to the mothers at home. These teachers are proof positive that the profession is a noble one and decidedly deserving of better recompense from an indifferent, callous population.

Sets are reduced to the minimum, save for the blessed blackboard, a few props and the steady freshlets of knowledge pouring from the lips of, showmanly schoolmarms (pretty as a fine video picture, too) and schoolmasters. Entire school day's output comes from one studio which undoubtedly must present multitudinous production problems but the programs caught during the first week appeared to go off with professional dispatch and decorum.

Miss Vera Villegas, a bright-eyed Spanish teacher, from the Hicksville public school, is a pro from start to finish. She has a delightful manner (humming, winking, finger-snapping) and her allusions to contemporary events make the course a sheer delight. The same can be said for Dorothy Geddes, Hunter College High School teacher, who imparts the fundamentals of math with ease and simplicity. Similarly Barbara Yanowski turns science into play and the Harvard Univ. Graduate School of Education film on French with its graded direct method and stick figures is equally informative and highly absorbing.

Arthur Hutchings, who teaches arts and crafts in the Armonk public schools, is entrancing the youngsters with the story of stage designing, ceramics, mobiles, collages, mosaics, murals and other phases of contemporary art. His first lesson dealt with tempera painting, basic stuff to be sure but the kids couldn't help but enjoy and learn at the same time. Furthermore, there's a splendid pre-school educational feature, "Fun at One" with Jeanni Sparks and Mary Ellen Sulek that will prove a blessing to perplexed mothers of tots.

Edward Schweikardt gives a Citizenship Education lesson that also rates an A from both in-school and out-of-school viewers and his sign-off: "Quiet in the hallways, please" is sufficient to halt any hi-jinks practiced by restless freshmen. This is only a partial list of the rewarding elements on Channel 11.

Macandrew's production staff includes Lee Polk, Edward King and Christopher Christenson. They do heroic work. Marvin Long is the project stage manager and the WPIX project coordinator is Edward Roberts. These men and their video teaching staff are indeed staging a vast cultural upheaval in the New York region.

Maybe this was what men like Nipkow and Zworykin had in mind when they tried to link sight to sound. Going to school these days via Channel 11 should be a perfect romp. Rans.

BILLY GRAHAM'S CHARLOTTE CRUSADE
With Cliff Barrows, George Beverly Shea, others
60 Mins., Sat., 8 p.m.
BILLY GRAHAM EVANGELIST ASSN.
ABC-TV, from Charlotte, N. C.
(Walter F. Bennett)

The words "old fashioned revival meeting" are being put out of fashion by the Billy Graham crusades, the latest—from Charlotte, N. C. fed to the ABC-TV hookup—is an ideal case in point. The sincere and lively Dr. Graham was surrounded on the first of these annual telecasts last Saturday (27) by a popular baritone, a vast chorus and a musical director resembling a chubby Jack Smith with a penchant for production numbers on a grand scale.

Cliff Barrow is the straight pitchman and in charge of the show's panoramic chorus. Since each man has the right to go about religion in his own manner, it wouldn't be fair to quibble with Barrow's ultra-modernization of the appointments surrounding Dr. Graham's forcefulness, but it certainly was unusual. Barrow introduced early in the hourlong live program a pitch for "The Christian Life Guide," a pamphlet which he said was a worthy distillation of many important religious precepts and which, he pointed out with accompanying demonstrative gestures, "slips very easily" (into your coat pocket); "you can take it with you wherever you go."

The smiling exuberance of Barrows was complemented by the singing charms of George Beverly Shea, who rendered his liturgical solos with the inflections of a suave crooner, and by the amassed Graham "Choirs." The massive, modern Charlotte Coliseum—filled for the tv opening — resounded with their spirited songs. The production appeared to be under Barrows direction, although the unnamed technical director deserves recognition for his fancy montages and overlaps.

Rather than warm up the audience for the meat of the evening, this glitter and grandness seemed only to detract from Dr. Graham's initial remarks. Yet shortly after the Evangelist concluded his appeal for donations to pay for the telecast, his appeal for people and nations to right themselves through religion began to have the proper effect.

Lawrence Welk, who starts his own ABC-TV program at 9 p.m. can only benefit from the lead-in provided by this unusual performance from Charlotte. Art.

DRAGNET
With Jack Webb, Ben Alexander, Georgia Ellis, Steve Mitchell, Louise Lorimer, Paul Maxwell, others Producer-director: Webb
Writer: Ken Kolb
30 Mins., Tues., 7:30 p.m.
BULOVA
NBC-TV (film)
(McCann-Erickson)

All the signs point to this season being "Dragnet's" last. And more's the pity, since the Jack Webb stanza still shows every sign of the vigor and preciseness that has characterized it through the years. It's still topflight production, and if Webb's staccato dialog and direction technique has outgrown the tv audience, fact remains that "Dragnet" still boasts some of the solidest story material and most flawless production in the business.

Opener is a hardhitting script by Ken Kolb, dealing with a child beater. Webb, as producer, director and lead, gives it a punch and driving pace that doesn't let up until the last couple of minutes, when Webb permits himself the indulgence of some needless moralizing. Indeed, that's the one weak link in this otherwise standout episode: the story speaks for itself without Webb having to spell it out.

Webb and Ben Alexander, answering a call of a neighbor who's heard a child being beaten, discover a youngster with a back full of cuts and bruises inflicted by a coathanger. They book the mother, get her to admit it was her husband who inflicted the beating and finally track him down. Story's as simple as that, but Webb contributes a lot more fire to his role than is customary, and the entire tenor of the yarn is maintained at a piledriving pace.

Add to Webb's extra-good performance in this outing Ben Alexander's fine counterplaying, an excellent characterization by Georgia Ellis of an unfeeling mother, and a good, snarling performance by Steve Mitchell as the brutal father, and it adds up to one of

THE GEORGE GOBEL SHOW
With Keely Smith, Jim Backus, guests; Fred Albeck, The Kids Next Door, Frank Devol orch, others Producer: Bill Burch
Director: Norman Abbott
Writers: Norman Lear, Tom Koch, Phil Green, Leo Solomon, Dan Beaumont
60 Mins., alt. Tues., 8 p.m.
RCA, L&M FILTERS
NBC-TV, from Hollywood (color)
(K&E, D-F-S)

Lonesome George Gobel shouldn't be lonesome for long this season, if his premiere show is an accurate sampling of what's to come every other Tuesday on NBC-TV. Gobel, like nearly every other comic in the business, has had his ups and downs in the past couple of years, but it looks as if this year the direction is up.

With a great writing assist from his scripting quintet, Gobel maintained a consistently funny course over most of the 60 minutes. And with some bright guest turns, along with an attractive brand new singing quintet and a comedy assist in the person of Fred Albeck as permanent cast members, he turned out a thoroughly enjoyable show.

Highlight of the stanza was that portion of the storyline that spoofed NBC's executive-level protocol, with v.p. John West as the principal target of the satire. It was an old bit, the business of getting to the top through channels, but with Jim Backus as one of the lower-rung execs turning in one of his inimitable stuffed-shirt characterizations, it remained fresh.

Topper, though, was a thoroughly original and ingenious piece of nonsense, wherein Gobel and Albeck, in an effort to get West to come to them, sit down in the NBC cafeteria and begin playing a hilarious "game" they call "Shtuck," with each of them making up moves and terms as they go along and deadpanning it while the kibitzers take it seriously. It was inspired comedy that came off perfectly. Gobel also got in some good closing licks with an end transportation credit to Schlock Airlines.

Show opened somewhat slowly, with a Gobel monolog on summer vacations and kids failing to get much reaction. But the pace picked up quickly with guest star Keely Smith, working this one as a single, with a fine rendition of "I'll Get By," followed by some banter with Gobel and a funny duetting on "Everybody Loves a Lover." Gobel, incidentally, appeared to have succeeded with Miss Smith where hubby Louis Prima has failed, at least onstage, these many years—he broke her up completely. Miss Smith closed out her turn later with some solid chirping on "Don't Take Your Love from Me."

Albeck, who's billed as "The Great Dane" and plays Gobel's butler, shapes up a perfect straightman for Gobel. He's tall, spare and speaks with a precise British accent, a perfect contrast to Gobel. And as a foil, he turned in a topflight job of deadpanning it throughout. Singing quintet, The Kids Next Door, comprise four young sisters and a brother, and they demonstrated plenty of talent in a medley of "Moonlight Bay" and "Heart of My Heart" and then a pairing with Gobel on "Sugartime." They'll be around for awhile. Gobel himself turned in a fine vocal stint on "Soon I'll Wed My Love."

Perhaps Gobel was hampered last season by being tied down to a cross-guesting arrangement with Eddie Fisher, who holds down the skip-week with Gobel on Tuesdays. That's not the situation this year, however, and the week off will probably help Gobel with his material, while freedom from having to work Fisher into each show will probably prvoide more flexibility of format and writing.

As for the writers, team of Norman Lear, Tom Koch, Phil Green, Leo Solomon and Dan Beaumont turned in a fine opening show. Norman Abbott's direction kept things zippy, and Frank Devol's musical direction was right on the dot. Looks like Gomalco and producer Bill Burch have a compatible color winner on their hands. The tint, incidentally, was handled with discretion and taste on the opener. Chan.

Viceroy Buys Bouts As Mennen Replacement

Viceroy is stepping into ABC-TV's Wednesday night fights with Mennen reportedly quitting the stanza. New sales puts Viceroy into a co-sponsorship arrangement with Miles.

Date of the cig bankroller's movein has not been established, but it is expected it'll take over the Mennen spot within a month.

VARIETY-TELEPULSE CITY-BY-CITY PROGRAM CHART. VARIETY's weekly chart is based on the 22 major markets regularly reported by Telepulse each month, in addition to 133 other Telepulse tabulated U.S. markets, covered over the course of a year. Cities will be rotated weekly. The VARIETY chart is a compilation of data on syndicated films, as well as network and live programs, in each market. Under the top 10 multi-weekly heading, the (†) stands for local programming and the () for network shows.*

VARIETY-PULSE FEATURE CHART

VARIETY's weekly chart, based on ratings furnished by Pulse's latest reports on feature films and their competition covers 155 markets. Each week, two different markets will be listed, with the 10 top-rated features tabulated.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained. Under Time Slot, S. O. stands for Sign-Off.

Radio Reviews

WITNESS
(The Child Nobody Knows)
With Robert Lee Dodd, W. R. Center, James F. Moore, Dr. William Kiser; Dick McMichael, Ross Hancock
Producer: Tommy Thompson
Director: Elmo Ellis
30 Mins. Sun. (21) 10:30 p.m.
WSB, Atlanta

This is the fourth in a dramatic series that has attracted nationwide attention and has won for WSB two outstanding awards.

Employing the courtroom technique of interrogation, the program gets over the story with the testimony of witnesses.

A double-barreled objective was achieved with this stanza, drawing attention to the work being done among retarded children and giving the Georgia chairman of the annual fund drive, Robert Lee Dodd, head football coach and athletic director of Georgia Institute of Technology, opportunity to voice his plea for funds to carry on the important work among the handicapped children, some of whom were heard on the program.

Among "witnesses" heard were W. R. Center, director of Fair Haven School of retarded children; Dr. William Kiser, pediatric psychiatrist and member of Fairhaven School Screening Board, parents, teachers and children themselves.

Topic of first program in "Witness" was "Why the South Lost the Civil War" and won Westinghouse Award at Baltimore for Best Historical program for Radio or Television. Second program, subtitled "Ministers' Manifesto," dealt with action of Atlanta pastors acknowledging Supreme Court decision as law of the land, and won Ohio State U. award as best public affairs program. Third segment explored Juvenile Delinquency in Atlanta.

This is the type of program that makes friends for a radio station that is alert to public needs and seeks to serve its community. WSB's personnel did a first class job of presentation. Lucc.

Radio Followup

Johnny Johnston

Johnny Johnston, originating from Jack Silverman's International Casino (nee the Old Roumania), via WMGM, is another in the post-midnight deejay sweepstakes in New York, Leone's is now an origination point and others are in the making. The juvenile has a literate, suave style, interlards his chitchat and interviews with occasional vocals to guitar accomp, and looms as a pleasant contrast on the Gotham airwaves to the nocturnal pundits, flying saucers-detectors, cacaphonous and longhair deejays, and the bleeding heart charity pitches.

Incidentally, "Big Joe" Rosenfield Jr., prime exponent of the Happiness Exchange over WABC—after a longtime stint for WMGM, N.Y.—has a 3-6 a.m. stand-in in the person of Jim Gordon. He's a patient gent with the proper knack of pacing the weltschmerz that is paraded over the WABC mike. He's good contrast also to the sometimes overly saccharine "Big Joe," which is probably a camouflage many a time for the screwballs-in-the-night who get on the Ameche with ribald calls. Even an insomniac, listening with half-an-ear, detects that Rosenfield's welcome-stranger telephonitis isn't all sweetness-and-light. Abel.

The Mr. & Mrs. Teams

Dorothy Kilgallen, sans Dick Kollmar, and Tex McCrary, sans Jinx Falkenburg, have been carrying on over WOR-Radio in the absence of their respective vis-a-vis. Bennett Cerf and Earl Blackwell were good guests for Dorothy & Dick's a.m. frolic the first two of the three days Kollmar was in London attendant to the prospective importation of "La Plume de Ma Tante," and McCrary's literate guests, both afternoon and pre-midnight, while his wife has been ill, likewise accounted for themselves well. Cerf's literati inside stuff was good and some of it startlingly informative (the slick mag which okayed earthy language, and a book which went to press with its last chapter omitted, because it was lost in transit); and Blackwell's party talk was a harkback to the glamour aura.

Wisely the Mr. & Mrs. teams play down the cafe society stuff—they have taken too much ribbing on that score in the past—because they cater too much to the workaday hausfrau set, although a little of the glam chatter is obviously good copy; however, Blackwell's Celebrity Service tie made it a plausible and a natural. WOR seems to have the corner on the Mr. & Mrs. teams—besides the Kollmars and McCrarys, the Fitzgeralds and the McCanns are regulars. Abel.

stamp sales have doubled, according to unofficial estimates.

With "The Lone Ranger" a firmly ensconced British tv character for several years, via its showing on BBC-TV, the English want to adopt the same promotion campaign in an effort to spurt their sales of Government savings certificates in similar fashion. Though Moore himself may not be able to make personal appearances, the way is clear for the British to use the campaign.

"Peace Patrol" involves heavy Treasury Dept. participation. Some 3,000,000 TD brochures and an equivalent number of "Peace Patrol" membership cards, along with 750,000 posters, have gone to 50,000 U.S. schools and 20,000 post offices. Treasury Dept. has made 500 prints of two promotional films to be shown in schools, one a 10-minute color film of the kickoff ceremony in July at the Washington Monument, the other a regular "Long Ranger" episode with the savings stamp promotional inserts supplied by Wrather. General Mills and American Bakeries, "Lone Ranger" sponsors, are backing the campaign with "Peace Patrol" promotional spots on the CBS-TV telecasts of the show itself.

Apart from spurting sales, the "Peace Patrol" has racked up some hefty press for both "The Lone Ranger" and the Treasury, with plenty of wire service coverage and Wall St. Journal and New York Times editorials.

Dailies Vs. TV

vested interests by saying that 54% of the Buick shoppers said that television did the most to interest them in looking at the new models of the car as opposed to 18% for newspapers and 28% for magazines.

McCann-Erickson made its own cost comparison study which favored television. In the McCann study it was found that 1,000 tv viewers could be reached for $4.28 while the cost of reaching the same number of newspaper readers was almost double.

The McCann-Erickson report concluded by saying that as a consequence of the "effectiveness of television with Buick and its low relative cost of reaching people, you can see why television will play a big part in advertising 'THE CAR.'"

The Newspapers Advertising Executive Assn. struck a blow at both McCann-Erickson and television in general by calling on members of the association to call on local Buick dealers. In a message to members of the MAEA, Charles Lord, president of the association asked them to call on local Buick dealers for a "grassroots" approach. Lord charged in his message that the facts used in comparing television and newspaper costs were inadequate and that the association could prove that newspapers deliver more audience than television. Lord implied that newspapers were being shown in an unfair light as far as cost, audiences and impact was concerned.

At McCann, it was learned that Marion Harper Jr., president of the agency, was set to meet today (Wed.) with executives of both the Bureau of Advertising and NAEA. The prevailing opinion at the agency was that Buick could spend their money as they saw fit regardless of any organization.

Even with the studies, Buick this year spent a record amount in newspaper space in introducing the new model.

While the newspaper reps were hollering "foul," the Television Bureau of Advertising stated Monday morning that they had conducted a survey of their own which they hoped to present to McCann-Erickson. The Bureau, which is not opposed to taking a swing at newspaper interests, found that before the Bob Hope show which introduced the new models on television, 18% of the people interviewed liked the new cars while 62% had no opinion. After the Hope special, 53% of the people who saw the show liked the models while only 16% had no opinion.

A spokesman for the TvB further charged that the newspaper approach was "typical and only after something has happened does the NAEA act."

nick and Universal International and part of the M-G-M and RKO pictures released to tv.

WTCN-TV calls its pictures "firstruns" because they've never been seen on video hereabouts before being shown by it.

Under Don Swartz's management, KMSP-TV is going in heavily on locally produced shows to supplement its 9 p.m. feature pictures. On Oct. 10, too, it becomes a part of the NTA "network" and its programming will include the latter's "This Is Alice" (the new Desi-Lu series), "Man Without a Gun" and "How to Marry a Millionaire." This is expected to speed up still further the four Twin Cities commercial tv station hectic competition and fight for nighttime viewers.

At this stage the KSTP-TV (NBC) 10 p.m. local half-hour news, weather and sports program continues to have a championship rating, well ahead of other competing news shows, and the half-hour syndicated films and hour Jack Paar show that follow prior to a brief midnight news program winding up the evening also boast high ratings.

fice and take the responsibility if we're wrong.

"If a script's not right, the producer has to rewrite it. If a director runs short, as has happened, we've got to write additional scenes and have them filmed. If an actor is miscast, we've got to see to it that he's handled right. The writer doesn't give a damn about the series, and I've never seen a director turn down a bad script. He'll say it's great knowing that it's lousy, because he doesn't care. I've never seen a director make a cut, even though he has a right to. He's too busy with his next assignment.

"The producer is the one who has to care and who has to make sure it's right. He's the one with all the responsibility, all the work; a director spends two days on the show and then he's doing another show somewhere else. The producer is the man who stays with all the problems day after day and night after night.

"Yet, of them all—writers, directors, actors — the producer is the only one who doesn't get any residuals. He's overworked, unrecognized and unrewarded. Yet, he's the one person who deserves a cut of the residuals, and some day he's going to get it. If the others didn't get residuals, I wouldn't have any beef, but as long as writers and directors are getting them, I think the producer is entitled to as much or more."

Breslow recognizes the fact that some producers who bring in an idea sometimes get a piece of the property, either in the form of a percentage of the profits or of the gross. Yet these cases are few and far between, he states, and the staff producer nonetheless has the same responsibilities and strains without the rewards.

Californians," Zane Grey Theatre, $64,000 Question, "Treasure Hunt."

Those curious enough to want to know how much all this represents in dollars will have to do their own figuring. At Morris they don't like to throw around millions, willy-nilly. In their conservative way they'd prefer not to hoist a figure for a 39-week deal until it's firm. Said one of them, "what if we gave you a figure for 39 weeks and the show was cancelled after 13? It would be a false set of values."

The Morrismen are proud of their record, more so because it represents an increase of three sales over last year, which was the banner season in all its history. And, privately, it is well out front of its rival, MCA. Many of the other packager-sellers may vie for contention behind Morris but they are also concerned with production or ownership in the properties. Morris has no ownership or participating interest, other than its commissionable fee, in any of the shows it sold.

But, the point is made by Abe Lastfogel, reigning head of the House of Morris, that package sales are but one facet of the agency operation. The company was built on talent representation and it is still a primary function. By talent it could mean Garry Moore, an emcee; Fred Coe, a producer; Peter Lawford, an actor; Martin Manulis, tv head of 20th-Fox production, or writers by the score.

The point may be raised by competitors that many of the shows claimed by Morris were salesabetted by the producing companies. This is not minimized at Morris but none can quarrel with the indisputable fact that they were called in to make the sale and are being paid for that service. In many instances they conceived the show idea, integrated the creative elements and made it ready for piloting.

GENERAL MOTORS PRESENTS
(Power to Destroy)
With Douglas Raine, John Drainie, Jill Foster, William Bell, James Doohan, Ivor Berry, others
Executive Producer: Esse Ljungh
Director: Paul Almond Writer: Douglas Jackson
60 Mins., Sun. 9:30 p.m.
GENERAL MOTORS
CBC-TV, from Toronto
(MacLaren)

In teeoff of third season on Canadian tv, General Motors is in for 39 weeks over 40 stations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., with four of the series in October to be carried live by the American Broadcasting network from Toronto. Under the taut direction of Paul Almond, the opening "Power to Destroy" was a suspenseful action-thriller by Douglas Jackson, Montreal insurance agent, this the latter's first tv play to be produced.

Based on a news episode in which a crazed bank bandit has sticks of dynamite strapped against his body and threatens the locked-in bank manager and assembled customers to blow all sky-high unless his wishes are accepted, the disguised holdup man was expertly played by Douglas Raine who "is not afraid to die." (Seems that, after wife's confession to police, the man has mentally collapsed after his two children have been burned to death). It's powerful writing and direction, enhanced by the bandit's planting of three time bombs about the city, including one in the locker room of Toronto's Union Station, set to go off at the five o'clock commuting rush hour.

From tightly-plotted exigencies of a bank interior's holdup to the summoning of fire-fighters and ambulances, plus the desertion of a railway station and the clearing out of hotels, bus and airport terminals, "Power to Destroy" was a vivid documentary, with tribute paid at the finish to the cooperation of Toronto's metropolitan police force. (Action, of course, could be laid in any city).

As the crazed bank bandit and the police inspector who dismantles the time bomb from his Second World War experience, the co-starred Douglas Raine and John Drainie were excellent in their respective roles, this also going for Jill Foster as the hysterical wife of the psychopathic holdup man. McSmy.

CARROLL RIGHTER
Producer: Raymond Keene
Director: Larry Pierce
30 Mins., Sun., 10:30 p.m.
JIM CLINTON
KTLA, Hollywood

The very fact that Carroll Righter's syndicated column runs in 200 papers and that horoscopes sell in the millions would clearly indicate there's a vast audience for this excursion into star gazing. In Carroll Righter, KTLA couldn't have chosen a more reputable authority on the subject. Otherwise, it's wholly unlikely that Bob Cummings would have been his first guest and confessed that Righter converted him from a doubter of astrology to a believer.

That la femme is a sucker for fortune-telling by the 12 signs of the zodiac is no revelation. They're the ones who buy those little charts, keep gypsies in garish gear and poke around in tea leaves. This, then, should give Righter a built-in audience and a growing one in the weeks to come. That it's purely femme bait is not to be disputed and the sponsor, Jim Clinton, used his time to sell apparel to the distaffers. If a male should happen to be trapped, his discomfort won't be acute.

As astrologian to the Hollywood stars, his repute is not disputed. That he knows his subject fore and aft is at once evident when he took off on a long dissertation of what the stars can do for both the happy and troubled. The stars, celluloid type, he calls by their signs. Name a luminary and he immediately answers the date of their birth and their zodiac symbol.

Righter is not a showman and makes no attempt at coloring his material. He's forthright and unsmiling, takes his subject seriously. The only line he punched was, "stars impel, they do not compel." He also pointedly objected to "Cancer" and those born under this sign he prefers to call "moon children." Toward the close there was a pitch for Forecast horoscopes at 50c a copy. The gal who did the selling for Jim Clinton must've been born under a new star called Fluff.

FASHION HERALD OF 1958
With Phyllis Hanes, Jim Britt, Ray Dorey, Jess Cain, Bob Cottle, Juli Dane Producer: Sidney Pike
Director: Bob Kinkead
60 Mins., Sat. (13) 8 p.m.
BOSTON HERALD
WHDH-TV, Boston (color)

Tint tv nabbed its biggest Boston boost since all color WHDH-TV went on the air last Nov., when same station beamed Hub video's first hour long fashion show in fall hue on Saturday (13). Telecast was triumph in every sense. Fashion show format proved made to order for tintcasting, as spectacular collection of colorful fall fashions gave the video spectrum a thorough workout.

Color values of gowns and production showed excellent contrast in black and white and were dramatically eye filling on color sets. That's where local color tv got its big boost, thanks to sponsoring Boston Herald, which put on show to plug its annual Fashion Herald supplement distributed with Sunday (14) editions. Herald rented posh Sidney Hill Country Club in suburban Newton for the night and installed 24 RCA color receivers for top echelon supper party of 200 leading Hub retailing execs. The colorcast won smash reception and raves from trade reviewers at club. Telecast was well paced blend of gorgeous clothes, beautiful models, entertainment and fashion news, knitted smoothly together by expert commentary of Phyllis Hanes, fashion editor of Herald and fashion director of tv show. WHDH-TV's personalities like newscaster Jim Britt (formerly of ABC-TV's All Star Golf), gagsters Ray Dorey and Jess Cain, moppet fave Bob Cottle and fashion caster Juli Dane were worked neatly into script for bits of business that introduced various fashion segments and also gave show needed change of pace and variety. All scored effectively despite brevity of parts, but real stars of show were, by design, the fashions themselves.

Thanks to color and slick production, fashions never were showcased better in Boston. Guy.

YOU AND YOUR HEALTH
With Ray Moore, Drs. Listen Bishop, Willis J. Hurst, J. G. Barrow
Producer-Director: John Cone
30 Mins.; Tues., 10:30 p.m.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK, ATLANTA
WSB-TV, Atlanta

Devoid of dramatics, but never dull, this kickoff segment is a series of 13 stanzas proved to be an effective exploration of ills that attack the heart. Ray Moore, versatile spieler for WSB-TV equally at home as a medical science moderator as he is at a sporting event or as a newscaster, kept the show's pace lively, while eliciting the informative answers from the participating medicos, all ticker specialists, of course.

Bank sponsoring program gets in commercial licks prior to and at closing of show, keeping mum otherwise. Ditto credits for cooperating Emory Univ. School of Medicine and the Fulton County Health Society.

Featured was a simplified film from Georgia Heart Assn., plus brief use of a blackboard and electrocardiogram machine. These supplemented discussion of angina pectoris and the more serious coronary thrombosis.

Under adroit verbal leading by Moore, medics stressed value of rest, oxygen and other medication. Doctors also warned that self-diagnosis of chest pains is virtually impossible and made it clear that we've still got a lot to learn about heart disease.

Next show Tuesday (23) will deal The whole medical gamut will be covered. Using the first program as a yardstick these shows should garner plenty of audience. Luce.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Upcoming installments of "The Open Mind" series dealing with "TV—Its Impact on American Life" on WRCA-TV will include on Oct. 5 "TV and Politics" with Lloyd Whitebrook, Jock Elliott and Princeton prof Eric Goldman as the guests.

The Oct. 12 program, when "The Open Mind" moves to 2 p.m., will be "TV and the Courtroom" with Robert D. Swezey, of WDSU, New Orleans, and possibly Morris Ernst at the mike.

"TV and the Moulding of Public Opinion" is slated for Oct. 19 with Nick Samstag of Time magazine and John Cunningham of Cunningham & Walsh on the panel.

Richard D. Heffner, moderator of the series, is also trying to get Elmo Roper as third member of the panel.

"Hemo the Magnificent," special 60-minute program about blood, circulation and the heart, seen over CBS-TV in March, 1957, as one of the Bell Telephone Science Series programs, will be a recipient of one of the four 1958 Howard W. Blakeslee Awards of the American Heart Assn. Presentation will be made at luncheon at N.Y. Athletic Club Saturday (4). Program was produced, written and directed by Frank Capra and featured Richard Carlson and Dr. Frank Baxter. Awards will be bestowed by Dr. Robert W. Wilkins, prexy of AHA. Charles Van Doren, NBC commentator and Columbia Univ. English instructor, will be guest speaker.

Harris are okay in support. Allen H. Miner's direction, like the story by Glotia Saunders and Dick Carr, is undistinguished. Production values are lavish; a lot of coin went into this pilot. What it lacked was heart. Daku.

Turning Point

A performance of exceptional merit was turned in by Harry Townes as a schizophrenic in "Conflict" on the anthology series "Turning Point" over NBC-TV Saturday (27). Produced by Jack Barry and Dan Enright several years ago in conjunction with the National Assn. for Mental Health and written by Reginald Rose with deep feeling and skill as the pilot film for a proposed series, it apparently never got off the ground.

Agencies reportedly resisted buying it because of its stark realism and intricate aspects of psychiatry. Sidney Lumet, in total sympathy with the objectives of the program, also contributed a senitive job in the direction of "Conflict."

Action of "Conflict" was set in New York City and both indoor and outdoor shots were particularly effective. Story dealt with a married 35-year-old bookkeeper who underwent a mental breakdown and with the aid of a sympathetic psychiatrist was put back on the road to recovery. There were moving scenes of the patient's mute withdrawal from society and of his piteous struggles to be released from unbearable tensions. How the psychiatrist with assistance from the patient's wife, aided in the victim's recovery was a brilliant testimonial to the progress taking place in mental health.

Nor was Rose's script sprinkled with too many psychiatric terms and it consequently made for more effective mass editorializing in behalf of the mental patient's plight. It was highly telling propaganda that made the viewer sit up and ponder long after the credits had faded from the video screen.

Townes, in particular, scored heavily in the principal role. Gerald Herschfeld, who did the photography on "Conflict," also contributed immeasurably to the film's impact. All told, the film undoubtedly gave an important assist to the understanding of contemporary psychiatric healing.

More such video efforts would go a long way toward lifting the veil of psychiatric ignorance in the country. Rans.

TV Stations Vie For Herald-Trib Services On Election Coverage

Seems the N.Y. Herald-Tribune's video services are in great demand. The ayem paper's headquarters and political staff are being sought by three separate Gotham tv'ers as backstop for Election Night (Nov. 4) coverage.

WOR-TV, WNEW-TV and WNTA-TV are each reported vying for the Trib's support, but no answer has been forthcoming from the newspaper's top command. The offers were made through Tex McCrary, who handles the paper's public relations. Paper is evidently still evaluating the various offers.

Two years ago, WNEW-TV—then called WABD—aired major election night coverage in conjunction with the Trib. Arrangement was made through Ted Cott, who has since become bossman of WNTA. WOR is in the running through its connection with McCrary, who recently underfook performing for the WOR setup.

'The Hot Half Hour'

rigging clients revelling in the tv lanes.

"The Hot Half Hour," briefly, is the uncorseted tale of a respected ad agency's veep in charge of tv who put "Put 'n' Take," a big-money giveaway quiz on the air for the House of Karess and what subsequently happened to all concerned during its sensational rise and fall. The novel is as uptodate as the N.Y. County Grand Jury's probe of quiz shows and there's even a reference to sharp practices on quiz shows such as when the mother of a hot-shot, nine-year old girl quiz expert on atomic science tries to pull a fast one by also trying to get her son on the same program. "There go the ratings," the package producer sighed. And the author continues in this jugular vein: "And the stink the papers would raise would be something. But what could he do? He agreed to put the boy on the following week, and then had to get rid of the little girl though we'd been planning on her for weeks more. A real curve of a question, specially prepared, and it was goodbye to the kid." This was only one of many minor headaches confronting Roger Norden, hero of "The Hot Half-Hour."

Like most hucksters in the advertising agency dodge, the hero is a pro in his racket and can pitch for a new account with the smoothness of vaseline and make love with the patter of an ivy-league prince. It doesn't require too much for Norden to knock off the "high-cheekboned" love interest in the book with fancy-schmancy art talk about Laurencin, Roualt and Marin and comfy carriage rides through Central Park underneath a starshot sky.

Lotsa Realism

There is also a vast amount of gutsy realism in the studio scenes, agency conference rooms, sponsors' offices, inner sanctum of package producers, talent agencies but, best of all, is Foreman's carbolic portrait of the inhabitants of the House of Karess. Nor can the reader neglect to mitt Foreman for his breakdown of the five basic types of agency account executives, namely the "Good," the "Crew Cuts" or "Princetons," the "Cretins," the "Legacies" and the "Eagle Scouts."

Foreman's description of the "Princeton" type is one "who didn't necessarily attend Princeton, though most of them actually did. If he didn't his father did and the boy tried to. Or if neither of these cases applies, he looks like he did. For example, he gets his clothes cut too narrow at the ankles and frowns on padding and has a sort of nauseating clean-cut appearance surrounding a brain of birdlike dimensions. He is very social and quite often has his picture taken behind a Stork Club ashtray for Charlie Ventura's column. Also his name is invariably confused—his first name sounding more like a last—for instance, Landis Robert or Harrison John. A good man to have alongside on the squash court but a dubious entity in the market place, as the research boys out it."

Film makers have evinced interest in "The Hot Half Hour" and it should indeed make a biting film about the unbuttoned goings-on among the quizzers. There's peak hour entertainment value and much clinical hi-jinks in the Foreman tome. "The Hot Half Hour" is nearly always hot reading.

censee in operating his station in the public interest."

The Storer company told FCC it had no direct knowledge of who paid for the preparation and distribution of the kines and did not regard the program as "sponsored."

Westinghouse said the kine excerpts were presented only "incidentally," as supplementary material in regular newscasts connected with information about the hearings from the station's regular news service, which would have been presented whether any supplemental visual material of this kind was available or not.

FCC called the explanations "immaterial." The commission called for "the highest degree of diligence" on the part of tv-radio licensees in political programs or programs involving discussion of public issues." They should, FCC said, ascertain in advance "the actual source" of material used—and identify it correctly on the air.

"This situation (is) . . . a serious matter," FCC declared.

gin airing the shows early in December at 4:30 p.m. on Saturdays. Stanza is reportedly to be sponsored regionally in the midwest by American Tobacco but the understanding at the moment is that WNEW will seek another sponsor for N. Y. end.

On the telefilm front, WNEW inked "Night Court," a film edition of the KTLA, Los Angeles, stanza. Deal was made via Banner Films. Recently, the station added "Divorce Hearing," an Interstate package, to its nighttime schedule, but "Night" is targetted for a start in late fall.

WNEW intends keeping flexible some of its present nighttime film commitments, in the event the live programming it hopes to get comes through. Station emphasizes that sometime this fall it intends to return with "Night Beat." It has been dickering with Mike Wallace to return to the show which gave him his national fame, but the station says that deal is highly complicated and is far from settled as the result. (Whether ABC will release Wallace from the contract he has there before next May is part of the complication.)

Until they're set, station is not yakking about its other live nighttime plans, except to say that if all goes well there'll be 12 new hours of live nighttime shortly.

Coach Warmouth Being 'Punished' By Mpls. TV Where It Hurts Most

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.

A losing season last year when a Western Conference championship was thought to be in the cards finds U. of Minnesota football coach Murray Warmouth also losing out on a 10-week television show that netted him $8,000 each for his first three years here. The $8,000 supplemented his $16,500 coaching salary.

It's the first time in local tv history that there's no such one-hour Sunday night show, Warmouth's predecessors also having had it. And in this football hotbed the development is creating a lot of talk.

WTCN-TV has dropped the show and none of the other three local tv stations has picked it up.

Reason assigned by WTCN-TV for its action is that "the show, was too expensive," but never before has there been any difficulty in obtaining a sponsor to foot the bill and there's gossip anent Warmouth being "punished" for the team's failure to land in the Rose Bowl and, instead, suffering a number of crushing, one-sided defeats.

On the show Warmouth and his predecessors narrated movies of the preceding day's game, introduced players and was interviewed regarding the contest just played, the next week's game and football happenings in general.

After last season's disasters on the heels of his failure to win any championship his first two years here, Warmouth took much heat from some of the alumni and downtown quarterbacks. But his contract had two more years to run and he didn't resign, although there were newspaper stories to the effect that he was considering other offers.

The fact that this season's Gopher football prospects are regarded as exceedingly poor also might have been a bankroller deterrent, although in past years this never held back sponsorship. And, it's pointed out that football interest still remains high, with the sale of season tickets over 22,000 close to the record, and capacity attendance of 60,000 a $4 per ducat indicated for every one of the five home games.

WTCN-TV officials say that programming changes also were a factor in the decision to drop the show, but in tv circles the talk is that if it could have been sold—it always was sold so easily before—it surely would have landed on one of the four stations. Warmouth's foes feel that the potential sponsors have desisted in the hope that the coach would be influenced to step out because of the blow to his pocketbook.

Some of the tv stations have put out feelers regarding getting the games' movies without Warmouth, but Minnesota athletic director Ike Armstrong says "nothing doing." He's said to be considering turning them over without cost to the Twin Cities' educational station, KTCA-TV, in the operation of which the university itself plays a prominent part.

TORRE CONVICTION UPHELD BY COURT

U. S. Court of Appeals yesterday (Tues.) upheld unanimously the criminal contempt conviction of Marie Torre, N. Y. Herald Tribune's tv columnist, for refusing to reveal a news source. She was sentenced to serve 10 days in jail last November by Federal Judge Sylvester J. Ryan.

The case is an outgrowth of Miss Torre's remarks in one of her columns regarding Judy Garland's behaviour in connection with a scheduled appearance on CBS and the reporter's refusal to name the source of her information.

RUSH HOUR
With John Hewer, Eira Heath, Raymond Parks, Sandra Alfred, Maris Tant, Jimmy Phillips, Lennie Mayne, Denys Palmer, Steve Race orch Writer: Hazel Adair
Director: Joan Kemp-Welch
30 Mins., Mon., 6:10 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion from London

"Rush Hour" is a new series of weekly potted musicals made up of established pop songs with a thin story line linking the music. It is aired in an off-peak slot—at a time in fact, as its title implies, when commuters are fighting their way homewards—and consequently cannot make a bid for an outsize audience. Show, which mainly features comparatively unknown talent, is pleasant but unimaginative and production tends to get dull at times.

The first story concerned a mix up of identities resulting from letters sent by a teenage girl to a soldier in Cyprus. Returning home the soldier is introduced to her elder sister, whom he believed had been writing the letters, and love blossomed. The two central characters were played by Eira Heath and Raymond Parks, who warbled nicely. Actor John Hewer, in his role as story teller, played several small parts and presided as a kind of fairy godfather. Bary.

THIS WONDERFUL WORLD
With John Grierson
Director: James Sutherland
Producer: Rai Purdy
30 Mins., Mon., 10:15 p.m.
Scottish Television, from Glasgow

One of the few programs fed into the commercial tv web from its Scottish outlet, "This Wonderful World" is 30 minutes of good adult programming. Show is compiled entirely from filmed material from all sources and sets out purely to provide interest over a wide variety of subjects. It is introduced authoritatively by James Sutherland who keeps his observations concise.

The program reviewed included a short filmed tribute to Big Bill Broonzy, a clip from a Rumanian cartoon on the creation of art, and a remarkable Canadian film about the Klondike and Dawson City. Bary.

Foreign TV Followup

Sunday Night at the London Palladium

Though the Met opera warbler, Jan Peerce, was topper of the "Sunday Night at the London Palladium" bill (21) it was a pretty, blonde U.S. ventro, Shari Lewis, who grabbed major honors. Miss Lewis used two glove puppets, Larry Lambchop and Charlie the Horse, and with a slick line of patter and considerable dexterity in tossing her volce she was ideal tv material.

Peerce gave with three songs, "Granada", "The Stars Were Shining Brightly", from "Tosca", which he sang in Italian, and "You'll Never Walk Alone", a hit number from "Carousel." It was an agreeable, well-balanced act. The rest of the bill also helped this show to a higher standard than last week's opener. Roy Castle, a new British discovery, sang, played trumpet, danced and did a neat impersonation of Jerry Lewis, and looks like an act worth encouraging, especially for his eccentric hoofing.

Other acts were the Marino Marini Quartet, singing smoothly in Italian, with the apparently inevitable "Volare" cropping up, and a British singing combo, the Mudlarks, who offered "I Need You", "I Didn't Know the Gun Was Loaded" and "There's Never Been a Night Like This," their latest disk hit. The Mudlarks offer nothing new but theirs is a polished, happy performance. Bruce Forsyth handled the second of his emceeing chores with more assurance and the Tiller Girls, Reg Cole's Palladium orchestra and Byran Tesler's production all helped towards a pleasant hour's entertainment. Rich.

TV Probes

merger, Hearst newspapers and a local group called Television City, Inc.

As far as the Democrats were concerned, the latest Capitol Hill name calling involved Sen. George A. Smathers (D-Fla.), chairman of the Senate Democratic Campaign Committee, and Pittsburgh Mayor David Lawrence, the Democrats' candidate for the Pennsylvania state house in the Nov. 4 balloting.

Smathers, Investigator Eastland reported, arranged a meeting between a Hearst executive, Richard Berlin, and Richard A. Mack, then a FCC Commissioner, now resigned and under indictment in connection with another FCC case, Miami channel 10. Eastland said this meeting took place just after FCC had heard oral arguments in the Pittsburgh case and well before Commissioners disclosed any decision on it.

Harris explained later he had learned from Smathers that it was Smathers' office staff who set up the conference and that the Senator was unaware that the case was awaiting a decision.

Mayor Lawrence was fingered by Eastland as having been the "mayor of a large city" (as Eastland had referred to him earlier in a political teaser with no name mentioned) who wrote two FCC Commissioners, Mack and Robert T. Bartley, both Democrats, in behalf of one of the applicants.

Harris heard from Lawrence without undue delay. And Harris explained that Lawrence had written Bartley, saving kind words about the Pittsburgh people in Television City—but not Mack. It was, Harris said, the city solicitor of Pittsburgh who had sent a telegram to Mack.

The end result of two days of hearings on the Pittsburgh channel 4 case was that little new in factual information had been added to that already publicly known. But some political nerves had been struck in the process.

The subcommittee definitely plans further tv probing, but decided that in fairness to all concerned it would be wise to add no more confusion—or new issues—to the November balloting.

Coast 'Lives' It Up

moved in where "Love and Marriage" was originally pencilled.

But for the live fraternity, there are now 17 nighttime stanzas slated for Coast origination, as compared with only nine scheduled as of July. They are Dinah Shore, Eddie Fisher, George Gobel, Milton Berle, Tennessee Ernie Ford shows plus "This Is Your Life" and "Ellery Queen" for NBC; "You Asked for It," "Anybody Can Play," "Traffic Court," "Stars of Jazz" and the two Lawrence Welk shows on ABC; and Jack Benny, Red Skelton, "Playhouse 90" and "Pursuit," CBS.

Daytime, too, has picked up, via ABC's two half-hour strips, "Liberace Show" and "Your Day in Court." NBC has three strips originating here, "It Could Be You," "Truth or Consequences" (which has been reinstated) and "Queen for a Day," while CBS is stet with Art Linkletter's "House Party."

Decision by the webs to originate from here, rather than New York, when scheduling the live entries as replacements for the sponsorless vidpix, stemmed largely from studio considerations. Webs' large Coast plants were running at considerably less than capacity, and economically, they're less of a strain than the Gotham studio setups.

for contiguous programs and establish each of the daily shows under fees which are somewhat like those for once-weekly offerings.

AFTRA has asked that all taped shows on the network bear the AFTRA label. For all intents and purposes that can only be accomplished if the shows are produced under AFTRA jurisdiction and that is the issue of the AFTRA-SAG running dispute. As seen by the webs, the label demand is a precise repetition of the one made many months ago by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers against CBS. At the time, CBS held that it had absolutely no right to allocate union jurisdiction to program material produced outside its production aegis. Unquestionably the grouped networks will pursue the same line of reasoning against AFTRA.

WNEW-TV 'Group' Plan

WNEW-TV is seeking to involve New York's three other television station indies in collective contract dickers with American Federation of Television & Radio Artists. WNEW has already rejected a proposal that the Metropolitan Broadcasting station become part of the network-producer contract talks that are now in progress.

WNEW's present contract ends in January. Those of WOR-TV, WPIX and WNTA-TV, the latter located in Newark, end at other times, but WNEW is willing to alter its own contract termination in an effort to insure that the next contracts for the four stations end simultaneously, so that mutual negotiations can become a bi-annual affair. A spokesman for WNEW said he has had preliminary discussions of the plan with the other stations and also with AFTRA representatives. He said that AFTRA was willing to accept the concept of mutual talks with all but WOR. At deadline yesterday (Tues.) no AFTRA official was available to comment on the WOR rejection.

conception necessitates some imperfect camerawork, Yorkin declares, he's balanced the value of the dance itself against the disadvantage of the bad picture, and favored the dance. Hence, Astaire in the opening number and in one other segment, will have no less than 16 girls on-camera with him. Although the "crowding" necessitates long shots and imperfect centering, the dance itself is so good as to minimize the bad camera angles, Yorkin feels.

First Astaire outing will be virtual all-dance, but for the second special, sometime in February or March, Yorkin hopes to do a book show he originally wrote for Pat Weaver just about the time Weaver left NBC and which he has since kept on the shelf. Following the first special, Astaire goes to Australia for his first straight-dramatic role in the filmization of "On the Beach," then returns to start working on the second NBC-TV'er.

'Yoder's Raiders'

sprung from the fact that the localers were oldtimers, and Chi gazettes frontpaged the news as if it were shocking.

Actually, Yoder yanked all the shows because they were low-low-rated. With "Commander 5" and "Bingo," WNBQ ranked fourth in the noon hour among four stations. Ditto with the nighttime service entries, which were struck to pave place for the opening 15 minutes of "Jack Paar Show," a tall-rater in this town.

The extermination of five live programs decimates the station's live output to slightly over an hour a day, with only the half hour "National Bingo," two 15 minute news-weather strips, and a handful of brief local news inserts in "Today" remaining.

Yoder's choice of film to replace the deleted daytimers gives weight to the early prognostications that he would eventually convert WNBQ to an all film station, much as he did WRCV-TV, his previous base in Philadelphia.

Best Laid Plans

midseason bows last January, the "Richard Diamond" series and a reactivated "Suspense," both skeins not faring well rating-wise. The other property slated for this fall fell through before it got off the planning table, a proposed Walter Slezak comedy series.

Failure of the "look-ahead plan" plus the scarcity of network advertisers for this season gives rise to the wisdoms shelling out capital for projection series a year in advance without a sponsor commitment. It so happens, though, CBS has just hit it lucky with "Pursuit" on some fancy sponsor coin.

been David Susskind, producer of the Du Pont series. CBS, which carries the Du Pont shows, hasn't taken a position on the matter one way or the other (although it's the network that has taken the brunt of the beefs from the out-of-town reviewers). However, Gould's request to the network that he be allowed to preview the upcoming "Playhouse 90" presentation of "Time of Your Life," with Jackie Gleason (since it's already been pre-taped), may bring the issue out into the open and force the network into a stand one way or the other. Thus far CBS hasn't given him an answer. Decision will probably rest with Lou Cowan, president of the CBS-TV, and Hubbell Robinson, exec veepee in charge of programming. If the network consents, it will have to take into consideration the complaints of the out-of-town reviewers which would necessitate setting up a coast-to-coast closed circuit of the taped show. Since "Time of Your Life" goes on next week, CBS will have to do some fast thinking on the matter.

Halsey Barrett Exits TvB; Sheehan Named

Television Bureau of Advertising, which has had no major executive alterations since the then-prexy Oliver Treyz switched to ABC and was soon followed by his aide Gene Accas, lost Halsey V. Barrett last week. Barrett, who served as the promotion bureau's director of national sales almost since the outfit was formed in 1955, gave way as top national man to John R. Sheehan.

Other than for his indicating a desire to return to the "profit-making end of tv," no reason was given for the Barrett departure. However, the general understanding in the industry is that Barrett and the TvB board (composed of execs from both the network and station level) hadn't seen eye to eye for some months on drumming up new biz. Barrett has not announced future plans.

Sheehan, appointed by TvB prexy Norman (Pete) Cash, joined the company in 1957 as a sales executive. At one time, he was the Cunningham & Walsh radio-tv chief.

bility of developing wholly owned SG properties, as well as those created by indie producers. A heavy accent in the selection of properties will be on the exploitation possibilities of the particular series.

Gries has been a director or writer or both on such tv programs as "Cheyenne," "Tombstone Territory," "Bat Masterson," "Court of Last Resort" and "Man Without A Gun." In 1952, he was producer of one of the first dramatic series produced for first-run syndication, "The Unexpected."

MacDonald has been a producer for Columbia for the past 20 years, during which time he made 111 exploitation features. His last film for Col is the soon-to-be-released "Gunmen from Laredo."

Associated with Katzman on "Stakeout" will be two SG execs, Benedict Berenberg, eastern production exec, and Steve Krantz, eastern director of program development, who created the format for "Stakeout."

Syndicators Whoop It Up

The hoopla season is on for syndicated shows.

Jackie Cooper made a personal appearance in Atlanta yesterday (Tues.) in connection with the debut of "The Peoples Choice" on WSB-TV and with the celebration of the 10th anni of the station. Accompanying Cooper to Atlanta was George Shupert, ABC Films' prez, now handling the off-network distribution of Cooper's "Choice."

A tie-up with the military has been used extensively for the separate premieres of "Citizen Soldier" in Chicago and "Col. MacKenzie's Raiders" in San Francisco.

In 'Frisco, the entire Army installation at the city's Presidio has been invited to celebrate the bow of the skein on station KPIX. In Chicago, a special preview showing of "Citizen Soldier" was screened for Army personnel and their friends at the Museum of Science and Industry. Preview was sponsored by the Commanding General and Staff of the Fifth Army. Skein is being telecast by WNBQ, with Schlitz Brewing and Oklahoma City Co. co-sponsoring.

The Atlanta WSB fete also was attended by Richard Carlson of Ziv's "MacKenzie's Raiders" and Keith Larsen of "Northwest Passage."

well running dry. It's got at least seven years of firstrun product ahead of it. Moreover, in those seven years, the major studios may decide, if economic conditions force them to, to unload their post-'48's, precipitating a station feature scramble all over again. Meanwhile, KNXT can sit back and watch the trend in programming among stations without such a feature reservoir so that it won't be caught napping of a major new source of programming results.

Naturally, out of its 1,400-pic backlog (for which it paid out $12,000,000), there are some rejects. Station has eliminated films which don't meet the requirements of the Television Code and CBS Continuity Acceptance. In other cases, it's tagged some films for nighttime use only, where the effect of the pix on children would be deleterious. But beyond this, there are other rejects; virtually all films originating prior to the establishment of the Hays office are dropped, and a good majority of the films made before 1935 are also shelved because they're dated. One group is the Park Ave.-sophisticated drama or comedy made for escapism during Depression days—it brings snickers now. Another is the early gangster pic, which while revolutionary for its time is now somewhat laughable. Alcine can't estimate the number of films dropped for these reasons, but it comes to a considerable part of any major studio package.

Nonetheless, the stations equipped with large backlogs—and that will include every outlet picking up the Par backlog—have it made for some time to come.

FPA's 'Showcase'

A total of 30 films will be reeled off during the weeklong "Showcase & Conference on Sponsored Films" being presented by the Film Producers Assn., N.Y., in connection with the 2d annual Industrial Film & Audio-Visual Exhibition, beginning in New York Oct. 6.

FPA aim is to highlight the uses of "special purpose films for specialized audiences." Screenings and accompanying lectures are being lined up by John Campbell of Bransby Productions.

Tors Dickers Own Setup

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Producer Ivan Tors, under an exclusive pact for tv at Ziv TV, is negotiating with the company regarding his setting up his own indie, Ivan Tors Films, to make vidpix pilots.

Under deal in negotiation, Ziv would have first refusal on Tors' projects. Producer plans to shoot a trio of pilots in the next 12 months.

Tors is now producing the "Sea Hunt" series for Ziv.

"Flight," the new California National Productions syndication entry, should give a lift to WPIX's "Adventure Night."

Opening outing had a good basic theme, man pitted against the forces of nature. When it stuck to that theme, with shots of men aloft flying into the needle of a typhoon, with footage of the typhoon striking Guam, it had a telling excitement. Unfortunately, there were script weakness on the ground, with stock dialog and coincidental plot twists. But despite those weaknesses, the entry remained aloft with the better first-runners now unreeling locally.

As host, General George C. Kenney, U.S. Air Force, retired, lent a stamp of authenticity to the proceedings. John Archer, as the pilot of the B-29 on a dangerous weather mission during the Korean War, sweated properly in his role. He was given okay support by Gary Vinson, Don Hatterity, Morgan Jones and others. Characterizations called for by the script hardly gave room for much range in acting.

Director Jean Yarbrough did an effective job of knitting the footage of the turbulent elements with the unfolding drama. The climax, which had the grounded B-29s heading into the wind with their propellers whirling in order to buck the typhoon was a good, exciting finale.

WPIX, which has themed each night for a variety of block programming, has teamed "Flight" with off-network "Navy Log," "Silent Service," et al. The CNP entry is an excellent match. Horo.

WRCA-TV, N.Y. (film)
(D'Arcy)

Another syndication entry trading on blood and violence made its N.Y. debut on NBC-TV's Gotham flagship Monday (29).

Skein, judging from the opener, is not without its grim interest, though. But that interest was built on the death toll. Before the 30 minutes were up, there were at least three corpses lying around. It may have been more, if the tally were given on the results of murderous blows.

Outing concerned the attempted escape of a maniacal killer, played with menacing sadism by Jack Lord. John Bromfield, the star of the series, had to transport this killer, sentenced to the electric chair, to the Arizona State Jail. From the opening sentencing scene to killer Lord's abortive attempt to escape, fisticuffs, shooting and general mayhem prevailed.

The teleplay was taut, concentrating on the action, and delineating black and white characterizations. The method of the jailhouse break was ingenious and carried out suspensefully by Lord. Supporting cast, including John Harmon, Herman Rudin, Art Batanides, and Robert Brubaker, was competent.

Filmed by Desilu, in association with National Telefilm Associates, the production values were good. Budweiser, via D'Arcy, picked up the series for a large regional. Star Bromfield retired from NTA's "Sheriff of Cochise" to do "U.S. Marshal." He's in for a bangup time in a modern, horseless setting. Horo.

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Dinah Shore (RCA Victor): "SCENE OF THE CRIME" (Korwin*) is a clever catching number which has excellent chances to put Dinah Shore back into the hit lists again. "I'M SITTING ON TOP OF THE WORLD" (Feist*) is a good reworking of the oldie.

Jimmy Bowen (Roulette): "BLUE MOON" (Robbins*), the oldie, turns up in a typical rocking format for good juve impact via Jimmy Bowen's pleasant vocal. "MY KIND OF WOMAN" (Big Tee†) is a country-styled ballad with a wordy lyric.

Doris Day (Columbia): "RUN AWAY, SKIDADDLE, SKIDOO" (Artists*), a catching tune with a good lyric, gets a pretty vocal by Doris Day who appeals to the youngsters with this one. "TUNNEL OF LOVE" (Daywin†) is a bright rhythm entry also due for spins.

Trav's Trio (Warner Bros.): "OO-WAH-OO" (Leeds*) is a bright rhythm slice delivered in fresh, brittle style by this young femme trio. "OOM-PAH PAPA" (Leeds*) is similarly slyly material with a slightly trickier approacch.

Ferrante & Teicher (ABC-Paramount): "CHE SI DICE" (Malin*), a swinging instrumental with a Latin touch, is superbly rendered by this keyboard duo. Excellent change-of-pace material. "HOW HIGH THE MOON" (Chappell*) also is dished up in a standout arrangement on rigged pianos.

THE CHAMPS (Challenge): "TURNPIKE" (Golden West†) is a rocking instrumental that moves along with a firm, steady beat. "ROCKIN' MARY" (Jett) is a fair rhythmic variation of "MARY HAD A LITTLE LAMB."

Betty Johnson (Atlantic): "THERE'S NEVER BEEN A NIGHT" (Trinity†) is a fast-moving ballad with a good lyric which this songstress sells in effective style. "MR. BROWN IS OUT OF TOWN" (Trinity†) has an offbeat storytelling angle to draw attention.

Johnny Andrews (Pinky): "IT'S A WONDERFUL WONDERFUL FEELIN'" (Manor*) is a nice romantic ballad with an oldfashioned flavor: It's done in straightforward style by this singer. "HAVIN' A WONDERFUL TIME" (Manor*) is an easy-to-take tune with a pick-me-up message.

Al Alberts (Coral): "THINGS I DIDN'T SAY" (Shapiro - Bernstein*), an attractve ballad with a Latin beat, makes a neat bow as a single for Al Alberts, formerly the lead voice of the Four Aces. "GOD'S GREATEST GIFT" (Springton*) is a big-scaled religioso with doubtful chances.

Tony Roberts (MGM): "SHE" (Marks†), a nice straightforward ballad, is crooned in arresting style by this singer. The performance could grab considerable spins. "I SURRENDER, DEAR" (Mills*), the oldie, gets a strong vocal with a big beat backing up.

Mike Kelly (Modern Sound): "GIGGLE AND WIGGLE" (Sidney†), a cute, frantic-type rocker, gets an uninhibited workover that will earn it lotsa juve play. "HEART BREAKER & A LEAVER" (Sidney†) is precisely in the same groove.

Helen Carroll (Remsen): "BLACK CAT ON THE RAILROAD TRACK" (Remsen*) is an okay piece of special material colorfully belted by this songstress and male chorus. "IT'S A BEAUTIFUL DAY" (Remsen*) is a lilting ballad with a fair lyric.

Frankie Avalon (Chancellor): "I'LL WAIT FOR YOU" (Debmar*) is another strictly teenage-slanted entry crooned in appropriate adolescent style. "WHAT LITTLE GIRL" (Rambed†) is a bright uptempo side, also for the kids.

The Diamonds (Mercury): "ETERNAL LOVERS" (Marks†) is a quality rocking ballad savvily delivered by this combo. Could pay off big. "WALKING ALONG" (Maureen†) is a catching slice with a nifty rhythm idea slickly handled.

Mell Stevens (Brunswick): "MORE AND MORE" (Cornell*) is a solid slow rocking ballad gets an all-out vocal by this singer. "WHAT COULD BE BETTER" (Chappell*) is an okay uptempo item.

The Robins (Knight): "QUARTER TO 12" (Alan-Edwards-Pioneer†), a rocking entry with a good lyric peg, gets a standardized slice by this combo. "PRETTY LITTLE DOLLY" (A-E-P†) is a routine rocker.

Donnie Elbert (De Luxe): "WHEN YOU'RE NEAR ME" (Loist), a lowdown rhythm entry, gets an authentic bluesy vocal by this songstress. "JUST A LITTLE BIT OF LOVIN'" (Jay & Cee†) is more of the same.

The Schooners (Ember): "VIDDLY BIDDLY BABY" (Wildcat-Angel†) is a way-out rhythm number, is sold driving vocal-instrumental by this combo. "SCHOONER BLUES" (Angel†) is an okay bluesy instrumental.

Bubber Johnson (King): "I CAN'T SEE WHY" (Mills*) is an above-par slow rocking entry which Bubber Johnson and combo project in flavorsome blues style. "AS LONG AS I LIVE" (Loist) is a commonplace lyric.

Johnny Stark (Crystalette): "LITTLE BO BLUES" (Hilder†) registers as a toe-tapping rhythm number which this singer handles restfully. "I WANNA SEE YOU" (Hilder†) is familiar rocking stuff.

PERRY COMO...LOVE MAKES THE WORLD GO 'ROUND (RCA Victor).....Mandolins In the Moonlight

Perry Como's "Love Makes The World Go 'Round" (Winnetont) is the type of sparkling rhythm ballad which this singer regularly turns up with click impact. "Mandolins In The Moonlight" (Roncom), an Italo-styled entry, has less direct commercial impact.*

JOHNNY BURNETT.....I'M RESTLESS (Freedom).....Kiss Me

Johnny Burnett's "I'm Restless" (American†) is a standout piece of rockabilly material aimed right on the juve target, "Kiss Me" (Metric†) reverts back to a routine groove.

DON CHERRY.....I LOOK FOR A LOVE (Columbia).....Big Bad Wolf

Don Cherry's "I Look For A Love" (Weiss & Barry†) is a good ballad with a beat which could repeat this singer's impact on "Band of Gold" a couple of years ago. "Big Bad Wolf" (Melody Trails†) is a playful rocking item also with chances.

NAT KING COLE.....NON DIMENTICAR (Capitol).....Bend a Little My Way

Nat Cole's "Non Dimenticar" (Hollis†), the latest version of this much waxed Italo tune, is a slick commercial job which could ride all the way home on the current song trends. "Bend A Little My Way" (Sweco†) is a pleasant ballad sold in Cole's smoothest manner.

PAT SUZUKI.....ROAR, LION, ROAR (Vik).....The Whiffenpoof Song

Pat Suzuki's ultra-sultry workover of "Roar, Lion, Roar" (Broadcast†) may not be exactly the way Columbia U.'s alumni remember it, but it's due to give this college song a push in non-academic circles. It's the best of four alma mater tunes done by this diminutive stylist. "The Whiffenpoof Song" (Miller) is given a less offbeat treatment.*

Album Reviews

Gordon Jenkins: "Tropicana Holiday" (Capitol). Culled from his tunes for the musical revues at Las Vegas' Tropicana Hotel, this collection of Gordon Jenkins' numbers shows the composer-conductor at the top of his cleffing form. Jenkins has produced a series of smart tunes and some good romantic ballads which give this set a sharp edge. There's a couple of saucy items in "I Know What Let's Do," delivered by Elaine Dunn and Dante D'Paulo, and "Sex," excellently done by Nelle Adams; a lilting item, "In The Summertime," by Carol Jarvis, who also scores on "I Live Alone." Additional good numbers are "I Can't Sleep," "Live Alone," and "I Can't Make Up My Mind." Others from the Tropicana casts featured in this set are Bob Stevens, Sally Sweetland, Don Williams, Bill Lee and George Chakiris.

"Steve Allen Plays Neal Hefti" (Coral). A slick modern-sounding big band, with Steve Allen featured on piano, generates a swinging mood in this workover of pieces written and arranged by Neal Hefti, one of the better craftsmen in the field. This is a fresh repertory of numbers, ranging from bright uptempo items, like "Why Not" and "Sure Thing," to bluesy entries like "Cherry Point" to "Chug-A-Lug," a "train" song that moves.

Xavier Cugat: "The King Plays Some Aces." (RCA Victor). Latin-American instrumentals, which never go out of fashion, are dished up here in their most commercial style by Xavier Cugat's organization. Cugat's crew, much like Guy Lombardo's orch in another idiom, plays with a clear beat and a lucid melodic line which is a definite asset to amateur hoofers. In this set are included numbers like "Carioca," "Cuban Mambo," "Green Eyes," "Mambo No. 5" and a nifty arrangement of a piece from "The Nutcracker Suite."

The Peanut Vendors: "Swinging Latin Nights" (United Artists). More Latin melodies, in a jazzier groove, are presented by this studio combo. It's a swinging session of cha chas, merengues, mambos, and tangos played with color, drive and occasionally, some noisy dissonance to lend an "authentic" feeling. Among the numbers in south-of-the-border garb are "That Old Feeling," "Chicago," "St. Louis Blues," "Swing Low" and "The Peanut Vendor," in mambo tempo.

"The King and I" For Orchestra" (Warner Bros.). Richard Rodgers' score for "The King and I," Hammerstein's wordage, gets a lush spotlighting in this package. A symphony-sized orch, under Warren Barker's baton, has fashioned a richly-textured instrumental sound for the showtunes, including "Hello, Young Lovers," "The March of the Siamese Children," "Getting To Know You," "Whistle A Happy Tune" and "We Kiss In a Shadow," among others. The score for the same show also turns up with a modern jazz treatment by the Gerald Wiggins Trio for the Challenge label. Wiggins, on piano, takes off on the various melodies with some attractive inventions that'll please the hip showtune buffs.

Roy Acuff: "Favorite Hymns" (MGM). Religioso music, which has developed into a staple item in the packaged market, is given a straightforward country accent in this LP. Roy Acuff and the Smoky Mountain Boys, singing with simplicity and sincerity in the familiar backwoods musical style, delivers numbers like "Were You There When They Crucified My Lord," "Take My Hand, Precious Lord," "The Unclouded Day," "Lord Build Me A Cabin" and some latter-day hymns.

"On Campus With The Dukes of Dixieland" (Audio Fidelity). At this rate, the Dukes of Dixieland, a relatively young combo from New Orleans, are going to amass a tremendous pile of LP's in their catalog before long. This is Vol. 8 for this click combo which, having virtually exhausted the standard dixieland repertory, is now laying into the welter of college songs. Once again, this group generates considerable excitement with their spirited, hardhitting performances. Dixie versions of songs associated with Tulane, Notre Dame, Wisconsin, Illinois, Yale, Ohio and other schools are included along with numbers like "Varsity Drag," "Buckle Down, Winsocki" and "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi."

"Mother Goose For The Swing Set" (RCA Victor). Swinging and updating the nursery rhymes is not particularly original, but this set accomplishes the unusual in doing it with taste. The arrangements are slanted to set the diaper set jitterbugging while making some clever extension of the original poetry. Don Elliott and Dottie Evans, on vocal, handle the lyrics easily with Buddy Weed's combo laying down a swinging beat.

"This Is Dean Martin" (Capitol). This is a random potpourri of recent tunes cut by Dean Martin. The smooth, relaxed approach is heard on a flock of Italo numbers, including "Volare," "Write To Me From Naples" and "Return To Me," mixed with entries like "Angel Baby" and "Makin Love Ukelele Style," among others. It's a pleasant folio.

Julie London: "Julie Is Her Name—Vol. 2" (Liberty). Three years ago Julie London cracked into the disk picture with an LP tagged "Julie Is Her Name," from which came a clicko single, "Cry Me A River." Since then she's continued to make noise in LP market and should sustain the decibels with the second edition of the "Julie Is Her Name" idea. The style remains simple and sultry and the tunes are out of ASCAP's topdrawer so the set should be a crowd-pleaser and her color photo on the cover will win it the proper display exposure.

Henry Mancini Orch: "Terribly Sophisticated Songs—A Collection of Unpopular Songs For Popular People" (Warner Bros.). Despite its lengthy title, the album should have added something like "Inside Irving Taylor," for it shows off the cleffer as probably only his friends and house-guests know him. And they know him as a guy who pokes fun at established cleffers and popular song patterns. He takes after the hillbillies, the showtunes, popular orch and singing styles, etc. It's all an inside joke with limited appeal but music whites will have a lot of fun with it. Herm.

ness details to its chief competitor. BMI insists that it needs the ASCAP cards to fight the ASCAP cleffers' charges of a conspiracy against their music.

ASCAP has come up with an alternative plan under which BMI would be permitted to examine large quantities of performance cards on which the title of the song was blotted out. BMI has declared this proposal unsatisfactory and its position was upheld by former Federal Judge Harold M. Kennedy, who is sitting as special master in the extensive pre-trial examinations in the ASCAP songwriters' suit against BMI.

N.Y. PUBS FACE GRIM FUTURE

ASCAP Eyeing Change in Logging Of Radio-TV to Pinpoint Payoffs

The American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers is now reportedly studying a general overhauling of its logging procedure. It's understood that some statistical experts have been approached to undertake the job of coming up with a system for an extensive and foolproof checking of actual performances played on the radio-tv lanes.

ASCAP's logging, which is now based on a 100% check of the networks and a rotating spot check of several thousand indie stations, has been one of the chief targets of criticism by dissidents in the ranks. The recent Congressional probe in ASCAP's setup by the House Subcommittee on Small Business, under the chairmanship of Rep. James Roosevelt (D., Cal.), focussed in large part on ASCAP's checking of performances.

Since ASCAP collects the overwhelming bulk of its $24,000,000 annually from radio and tv, it now pays off exclusively on performances in the broadcast media. Because there is no 100% logging of the indie stations, due to the large cost of collecting and analyzing such data, there have been recurrent squawks from publishers and songwriters that many songs that are plugged on indie stations do not figure in the final tally.

At the present time, Dr. John G. Peatman, of the City College of N. Y. Psychology Dept., is handling the logging of the indie stations for ASCAP. Under the current setup, stations that are selected for logging are not known to any member of ASCAP, in order to avoid special plugging drives by the publishers.

Urania's Own Off-Track Betting; Pick the Right Groove & Be a Winner

While New York City politicos are toying with legalization of off-track betting, Urania has come up with a package that may bring pari-mutuel windows into the livingroom.

The Urania LP, tagged "Henny Youngman's Horse and Auto Race," simulates an actual running with different winners reaching the finish line, depending on the groove where the disk has been started. Youngman narrates a horse race on one side and the auto race on the other with appropriate background sounds. An intermingling of the five grooves makes a new winner possible each time the record is played.

A regular edition at $3.98 has its liner arranged so that chips may be placed on it. A deluxe package at $4.98 is boxed and contains a felt pad for bets.

Col's 'Kiss Me Kate' LP Gets Video Show Hypo

Columbia Records is dusting off its original cast album of "Kiss Me, Kate," (originally released in early 1949) for a tiein with the tv production of the Cole Porter musical scheduled for Nov. 20 over NBC-TV.

The teleproduction will star Alfred Drake and Patricia Morison who also appear on Col's original Broadway cast package. Diskery is joining with the Hallmark Greeting Card Co., NBC-TV, the Carl Byoir public relations firm, and the Foote, Cone & Belding ad agency to promote the "Kate" spec and album.

The telecaast tiein will be accented by specially designed new album jackets and provisions will be made for dealers to adapt existing inventory to capitalize on the new packaging and display materials.

Decca-Urania 4-City Tie

Decca Records' distribution division which began handling outside labels earlier this year, is now taking the Urania line in four territories, Boston, Albany, Hartford and Buffalo. Decca will handle both tapes and disks for Urania, which is planning 45 stereo releases in the next three months.

Decca's distrib company also handles the Warner Bros. label, Everest Records and London Records, also in some key areas.

The Colpix label is being introduced in the market today (Wed.) with four LPs and one single. According to the diskery execs, only 11 albums are planned for release in the remaining three months of the year.

'UPSTARTS' WITH HITS TAKE OVER

These are brutal days for most of the New York publishers. They are helplessly watching the music business slip out of their hands into the control of a vast horde of newcomers literally scattered all over the U.S. map.

Many of the smaller publishers are worried over the disappearance of their last solid underpinning—performance money. Since these firms have to depend chiefly on current hits, rather than substantial catalogs, of standards, they are facing the prospect of getting very little coin both from the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers and Broadcast Music Inc. While ASCAP has never been an important revenue source for these smaller publishers, the probability that BMI is going to cut back drastically on its guarantees is the new, and scarifying, factor in the current situation.

Divvying a Set Melon

The economics of the new music biz is seen forcing the hand of BMI in its relations with the New York publishers, many of whom get substantial guarantees. With the hits now coming from the hinterlands and controlled by publishers who are mainly BMI affiliates, BMI must pay these firms according to their performance ratings. Such payments must cut into the guarantees paid to the firms which are not producing, since the annual BMI distribution fund is fixed.

The handwriting has been on the wall for the small publishers ever since the advent of rock 'n' roll three or four years ago. That idiom broke the dikes for the so-called amateurs, both on the performing and publishing end. Since that time, the music biz has become strictly hit-or-miss; with no control over the destiny of any particular song by either the publisher or the disk company. The old ideas of song exploitation and promotion have had to be scrapped.

The New York publishers also frankly don't know where to look for material. In the old days, a songwriter who produced a hit could reasonably be expected to write another good song. Nowadays, the hit songsters are chiefly one-shotters, much like the performing talent. Few have shown the ability to repeat with a hit, and hence their followup numbers are just as much of a gamble as anyone else's.

Stereo Starring at N.Y. Hi-Fi Show In Mfrs.' Bid for $260,000,000 Pot

Riding with the prevailing winds in the disk industry, the New York High Fidelity Music Show opened yesterday (Tues.) at the N.Y. Trade Show Bldg. with stereo sound blasting from virtually every room.

Sponsored by the Institute of High Fidelity Manufacturers, the show is expected to furnish a big hypo for hi-fi equipment sales which, it's estimated, will hit the $260,000,000 mark for component manufacturers and about an equal gross for the packaged home music system makers.

While stereo has been demonstrated at past audio shows in tape form, this is the first year that the equipment manufacturers have a ready supply of stereo disks with which to showcase their product. Every brand name in the amplifier, speaker, cartridge and turntable field at the fair was accenting its stereo lines. The major disk companies are also on hand to push their stereo packages during the five-day fair. Over 50,000 are expected to pay the 99c admission to get into the exhibit.

Simultaneous with the hi-fi show, the Audio Engineering Society opened its 10th annual convention at the nearby Hotel New Yorker Monday (29). The engineers have scheduled a five-day meet to discuss the latest advances in stereo and new applications of transistors.

Meyer Davis, veteran society band maestro and contractor, has joined the RCA Victor talent stable. His first LP, due in October, will be titled "Dancing With The Smart Set."

Victor inked Davis, who has cut some LPs for other labels, in line with the steady upbeat in society band LP sales in the past couple of years.

Baker Exits Big 3 in Dec.; Plans Own Biz

After 26 years with Robbins Music Corp., Murray Baker is resigning by the end of this year to go into the music publishing business on his own. Robbins, along with Feist and Miller Music, constitute the Big 3 Music Corp., a Loew's Inc. subsidiary, and in line with the general economies attendant to the Loew-Metro reorganization, certain curtailments have taken place within the music publishing affiliations.

Mickey Scopp, v.p. and g.m. of the three pubberies, will probably designate Hy Ross, No. 2 man to Baker, to assume the responsibilities of general professional manager. Norman Foley, prof. mgr. at Feist, likewise has Roy Kohn as No. 2 man, and Ted Black, head of Miller's professional department, has Al Kohn the No. 2 man. Both Kohns, incidentally are brothers.

52 Dates Lined Up For Williams 1st Tour With Own Group; Dayton Teeoff

Roger Williams, Kapp's keyboard disker, has been set for a 52-date tour beginning Oct. 10 in Dayton, Ohio. It will be the first time that Williams will be travelling with his own accomp combo, two guitars and a bass.

Most of the dates, which are being booked by Music Corp of America, are being set at a guarantee against 60% of the gate. Some of the flat fee dates are going at a straight $5,000.

Williams, who has clocked more than 2,000,000 album sales in his 12 LP entries for Kapp, is now mulling a foray into the publishing field. The venture, which will be in the ASCAP fold in collaboration with his manager Stan Greeson, will be primarily to hold his own material.

Greeson currently is working on plans to take Williams on a tour of Latin America, South Africa and Europe. It will be William's first in-person try in these areas. His U.S. tour is expected to get an added push via a "Person to Person" telecast over CBS-TV Oct. 24. The U.S. tour winds in Stoneham, Mass., Dec. 19.

Rock 'n' Roll Espresso Style

Modugno Hot in U.S. While Paul Anka Clicks With Italo Juves

By JO RANSON

Rock 'n' roll at the raucous hour of 8 a.m. at the corner espresso bar appears to be the current diversion of most youngsters in Italian cities.

TV is growing rapidly in the major Italian cities and the dinner hour finds crowds at all tv appliance store windows gandering the latest Italo version of "Have Spaghetti—Will Eat."

Last winter Elvis Presley didn't rate space in any music show window in Italy. Today he gets top billing along with Frank Sinatra and Perry Como. But curiously few, if any, female vocalists of American origin get the nod from the younger set in Italy.

These are some of the impressions Jim Fasset, music commentator on CBS Radio's "World Music Festivals" and currently in his 11th year as music commentator for broadcasts of the New York Philharmonic, returned with after a more than four-month worktrip through Italy.

On this side of the Atlantic jukeboxes are ringing out with Domenico Modugno's version of "Nel Blu Dipinto Di Blu" while in Italy, Fassett reports hearing Paul Anka's version of "Diana" belted out in English. The kids don't understand a word of it, Fassett observed upon his return to the states last week, but it doesn't prevent them from dancing to the music.

"Any morning at eight you can see the kids putting 50 lire (approximately 8c.) into a jukebox at the corner espresso bar and the resultant sound resembles a main street drug store in 1956 or '57," Fassett said.

From this and other music patterns, one can't help but observe that Italy's pop music is imported from the haven of the hot dog and the knish rather than that of the

Ballroom Ops Toy With Bally Plan To Hypo Hoofing

Chicago, Sept. 30.

The nation's ballroom owners again are studying an industry public relations plan in hopes of stimulating more public dancing. They adopted a p.r. proposal at their Chi convention last week, but its details remain under wraps, nor does it have a kickoff date.

Whether the scheme will ever get off the ground is speculative. It's recalled that other promotion plans have been up before the ops over the past five years, and none ever reached fruition. One stumbling block is money; as trade organizations go, the National Ballroom Operators Assn. is a smallie with a limited exchequer. Any nationwide publicity scheme would require much more of a bankroll than the outfit has now, which probably would mean a special membership assessment. What with the generally downbeat ballroom biz picture, it's moot just how the ops—especially small and medium ones—would take to this.

What the NBOA is hoping for, however, is a hookup that would make the promotion effort a cooperative one, and at this point the talk is of an alliance with the American Federation of Musicians. Tooters union, it's understood, is currently mulling some such program, one that might tie up with deejays. A NBOA committee has been in contact with AFM prexy Herman Kenin, but any unity plan is nebulous at the moment, chiefly because the musicians are currently weighted with a load of other matters deemed of higher importance.

At any rate, the ballroomers did vote for a p.r. program—if only in principle for the nonce.

Prexy Carl Braun Jr. (Commodore Ballroom, Lowell, Mass.) was reelected for another year's term, and Las Vegas was chosen as site for the 1959 meeting.

EDITOR, VARIETY:

Would appreciate very much if VARIETY could kindly tell its readers that I was misquoted in a statement that was carried on your front page the issue of Sept. 17, concerning the musical "My Fair Lady." When I arrived in San Francisco the press agent on board the SS Orcades, while interviewing me, asked me if I had seen the London production of "My Fair Lady." I said I had and thought the original New York company was played much better.

I have had nothing but the fullest respect and admiration for the collaborating talents of Alan Lerner and Frederick Loewe. They were great when they did "Brigadoon" and "Paint Your Wagon" and now became even greater with "My Fair Lady."

Ralph Stein Heads A&R For Pickwick's Labels

Ralph Stein has been set by Sy Leslie, Pickwick Sales Corp. prexy, to head the artists & repertoire departments for the lowprice Design label and for the kidisk line, Cricket Records. Warren Vincent will remain as musical director.

In the past few years, Stein has been a freelance disk producer.

Inside Stuff—Music

"Non Dimenticar," an Italian tune which was originally heard in the pic import, "Anna," four years ago, has come up with its 15th disk version recently even though it never has broken through as a hit. Tune was originally the back side of the MGM click soundtrack slice of the "Anna" tune under the title of "Tho Voluto Bene." It was picked up by the smart supper club songstresses as a good performance song, which cued publisher Howie Richmond to come up with an English-language version. The first try was under the title "If You Said Goodbye." The current version was written by Shelly Dobbins, of the NBC programming department. In the last few months, tune has been cut by Joni James, Vic Damone, Lou Monte and, most recently, Nat Cole.

Franco-American music men are laughing at a Broadway music publisher who was "living it up" so luxuriously at a posh Riviera hostelry that nothing would do but that his New York lawyer-friend and wife come to the south of France from Paris and "be my guests." The American music man told the hotel concierge to see that "all arrangements were made" and that he would meet his friends when he got back from the casino. Upon his return that night he found himself locked out the concierge blandly explained, "But, monsieur, you told us to give your friend the very best we had, so we did—we gave him your suite! We now have three rooms for you, your secretary, and your other friend—unfortunately without baths and also, unfortunately, not facing the Croisette!" (Mediterranean view). Both parties agree this was a new kind of "fractured French" deal.

RCA Victor pactee Johnny O'Neill has indirectly climbed on the "Wagon" and it could pay off in big returns for the youthful singer. O'Neill has been chosen to record the theme song for NBC-TV's "Wagon Train" vidpix series, both for the background music of the show, which will be played over the titles, and for an RCA disk. Shorty Rogers, under pact to the same label, will backstop the session of the "Wagon" song, which was penned by Sammy Fain and Jack Brooks. Singer is currently playing a two-week engagement at King's Supper Club in Santa Barbara.

Sammy Cahn's 25th anni as a songwriter was cited before Congress by Representative Gordon McDonough of Southern California and reported in the Sept. 12 edition of the Congressional Record. Rep. McDonough called attention to the 50,000,000 disks which have been made of Cahn's songs and the more than 10,000,000 sheet music copies that have been sold over the world.

Tiomkin Three-Sheets H'wood's Canned Music Vs. Heindorf's Rap

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Hollywood musical recording has received a staunch supporter in veteran composer-conductor Dimitri Tiomkin. Latter has taken it on his own to answer Ray Heindorf's recent blast on the quality of music recorded in Hollywood. Heindorf last week stated that motion picture music recorded abroad was superior to music recorded here.

Tiomkin says that's nonsense and that Hollywood sound departments are unequalled in the world—and are also responsible for the development of stereophonic sound and most other major developments in sound reproduction.

"If foreign soundtracks appear to be superior to ours by Heindorf, perhaps it is due to the fact that recording time and musicians come cheaper in Europe than here." "There," he added, "they can use 100 musicians and keep them as long as needed to obtain top quality."

Tiomkin concluded by saying that Heindorf's statement was unfair and uncalled for because the men of Hollywood do great work in spite of such handicaps as time allowed, and budgets allocated, for recording sessions.

Holland Label Adds Pair

The indie Holland label has added two new roups to its roster. They are the Four B's and a G, and the Russo Bros.

Already signed to the label are Roger LaRue and the Lollypops.

Glasgow Savoy Cinema To Become a Ballroom

Glasgow, Sept. 30.

The New Savoy Cinema, long-time vaude and picture house, shuttered Sat. (27) for conversion into a luxury dancery. House will be renamed the Majestic, and will continue under the banner of Circuits Management Assn., a Rank outfit.

Proscenium arches, gallery and part of the balcony will be removed to leave an empty shell for the construction of the ballroom.

Another Dozen Sets From The Warner Bros. Label

The new Warner Bros. label goes into the second month of operation with 12 new packages. This will bring the WB total so far up to 24 sets, 22 of them in stereo.

Highlighting the October release are packages by Tab Hunter, the Mary Kaye Trio, John Scott Trotter and Warren Barker's orch.

Although the diskery isn't releasing and sales figures on its first month's [illegible]out, Hal Cook, sales veepee, [illegible]ts that the first 12 sets went above the first month's quota with reorders coming right across the board.

WQXR'S 34 HOURS OF STEREO IN OCTOBER

WQXR, N.Y. longhair outlet owned by the N. Y. Times, is plunging into the stereo waters in October with a total of 34 hours of such broadcasting during the month. The outlet has been regularly using at least six hours a week for stereo programs for some time and has been active in this area of hi-fi sound for the past six years.

WQXR uses its AM and FM channels to get the stereo effect in homes that have suitable receivers to tune in. This system is distinct from the multiplex broadcasting starting on WFUV-FM, N.Y., today (Wed.). Multiplex system employs multi-channel transmission which requires an adapter by home receivers.

Clifford Moves From Reno to Frisco's Bimbo

Reno, Sept. 30.

Bandleader Bill Clifford, with the Riverside Hotel's theatre-restaurant shows since the early '50s, is moving next to Bimbo's 365 Club in San Francisco.

He will form a new band in the Bay City. Freddy Martin is booked for a double frame beginning at the Riverside Oct. 8

Clifford's contract with Bimbo's club calls for him to manage the entertainment and emcee the shows.

Major television shows, which occasionally switch origination points between New York and Los Angeles, are landing right in the middle of the hassle between the American Federation of Musicians and its arch foe, the Musicians Guild of America. Latter union, which recently won jurisdiction over filmed music in Los Angeles, has many members on its roster who also play on Coast tv shows.

In recent Coast originations of the Steve Allen and Ed Sullivan video stanzas, members of both unions were playing side by side. It's understood that AFM officials, who are prevented by the labor laws from stopping their members from working under such conditions, put pressure on the tv producers not to employ the MGA tooters in order to avoid any trouble on the New York end where the AFM's Local 802 has complete jurisdiction. The tv producers reportedly informed the AFM that the matter was out of their hands since the music contractor had the responsibility of providing the musicians for the show.

Read Stumping in N.Y.

Meantime, Cecil Read, MGA topper, is due in New York this week to spark support for his movement among Local 802 members. It's understood that many Read supporters in N.Y. have soured on him since he signed his deal with the pic studios on the Coast in which the staff quotas were given up. Read will present his side of the negotiations. It's likely, too, that Read will discuss the matter of jurisdiction over film music recorded in New York. Local 802 still controls this phase of pic music but Read may challenge this in talks with the N.Y. pic producers.

Local 802 is mapping a special membership meeting Oct. 20 for prexy Herman D. Kenin to give a report on the state of the union. Local 802 prexy Al Manuti will also speak. It's expected that there'll be some discussion of the crucial contract negotiations upcoming with the disk and radio-tv industries within the next few months.

MGM's 50 Albums And Stereo Debut In Oct.-Nov. Fest

MGM Records has scheduled 50 albums for release within the next two months. The LP program will be promoted under the overall banner of "MGM's Fall Album Festival."

Breakdown of the October-November schedule includes 13 pop packages, 10 classical, 10 stereos, seven jazz sets (with two in the new MetroJazz line), and 10 low-priced Lion label entries.

The fall program marks MGM's entry into the stereo field. Diskery will use the same disk label on its stereo platters to retain diskery identity with a "stereo" marking on the label to denote the new recording technique.

Highlighting the stereo packages are the "Gigi" soundtrack and the "Yesterday" and "Today" sets by Maurice Chevalier. In the pop monaural releases are albums by David Rose, Jane Russell, Sallie Blair and Toni Carroll, among others. These have also been cut in stereo but will only be issued for the monaural market for the time being.

The jazz releases marks the introduction of the MetroJazz line with two packages produced by Leonard Feather. The sets are Toshiko's "United Notions" and Sonny Rollins' "The Big Brass."

Leading the low-price Lion line will be the soundtrack set of "tom thumb." Diskery execs have put this package in the $1.98 category figuring that it can catch on with the juve market at which the George Pal pic is pegged.

In the longhair field are sets by the Arthur Winograd orch, Maro and Anahid Ajemian, Richard Pittsasser and the Little Orchestra of London conducted by Leslie Jones.

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

'Big 3' Latches on to Pix Scores for Xmas 'Sheet'

The Big Three (Robbins, Feist & Miller) is gearing for the Christmas season with three sheet music packages.

A promotional campaign on sheet music and music folios is being worked out for the scores from "Mardi Gras" and "tom thumb" as well as a "Raggedy Ann" juvenile package.

"Mardi Gras" is the 20th-Fox pic with a score by Paul Francis Webster and Sammy Fain and contains eight songs. "Thumb" is the Metro release of the George Pal puppetoon and includes five songs to be published by the Big Three. A special music folio on the "thumb" score is being prepared featuring simplified arrangements with cartoon-illustrated pages for coloring to tie in with the juve market. Firm also is preparing a test on a special package containing two "Raggedy Ann" song folios plus a free "Raggedy Ann" storybook. The "Raggedy Ann" merchandise is wrapped in transparent plastic containers topped with a special display card.

Cathy Carr to Roulette

Cathy Carr, who clicked a couple of years back on the Fraternity label with "Ivory Tower," has been added to the Roulette roster. Her first Roulette release is a coupling of "To Know Him Is To Love Him" and "Put Away The Invitations."

Diskery has set up a deejay tour for the thrush.

Rank Label's Bow By End of Year

London, Sept. 30.

Rank Records, the disk company recently formed by the Rank Organization, will almost certainly be on the market before the end of the year. Malcolm McGrady, general manager of the new disk outlet, has just returned from a hush-hush trip to the States where he's been gandering the record field with a view to setting deals with a number of companies.

On his return to London, McGrady told VARIETY there were several pacts in the offing with Yank diskeries, and after consultations with board members he would return to the U.S.—probably within the next two weeks—to set several deals.

The latest development is understood to be the purchase of a major distribution firm to handle its waxings on the retail market. McGrady would neither confirm nor deny this report, but it is considered a most likely step in the plan for the new label, and he admitted there had been confabs in the past about such a buy.

It had originally been planned that Rank Records should operate as a disk club, marketing through its picture theatres and ballrooms, but this plan was scrapped, reportedly because there were too many obstacles and limitations to the idea. The Pye diskery, which had pressed a considerable number of platters for the club label under a "gentlemen's agreement," still has the disks in its stores. The records are mainly of American material and McGrady said they would be among the first releases when the label begins to operate. He added that the pressing pact with Pye was likely to continue but was not emphatic.

'BLUES IN THE SUBWAY' MISSES AS 'JAZZ OPERA'

Billed as "the world premiere of the first Jazz Opera," "Blues in the Subway" at Loew's Progressive (nee Sheridan, in the Village) turned out to be a 21-minute ride to nowhere. Opus was the cherry on an otherwise pickup but okay jazz concert after midnight Saturday (27).

The Alonzo Levister piece for three voices and four instruments isn't a bad rough sketch from which to start, but needs major work before it can be considered presentable. There was complete lack of action, the three principals being seated on stools before a "Harlem Express" flat in one and hardly communicated with each other during the stanza. Robert Battle was a melodious drunk transporting a cat in a valise; Eva La O sang of the movie she's just seen with Rolf Kristian, who was absorbed in the Daily News. The singers stuck to the scores before them and any of the advertised improvisation must have been among the four musicians, Shafi Hadi (tenor) Dannie Richmond (drums), Ali Mohammed Jackson (bass) and the composer at the 88. The short overture set an interesting subway rhythm, but the A train wouldn't move from there on.

Anita O'Day opened the gig and scatted what amounted to a solid LP of authentic jazz singing. Tony Scott, heading his Quintet, did everything but show his scar to explain he was just out of the hospital—and saxist Ben Webster subbing for Scott, would carry the ball, which latter did most agreeably. After the opera attempt, Art Blakey and Jazz Messengers wound the evening.

Event pulled about 1,400 (house capacity 2,400) and at $2.80 admission, event grossed slightly better than an even break. Al Meyerson produced for the Village Voice, which sponsored and may put on three more this winter.

You might say that the "Rock 'n Roll Olapa" is sort of a musical hula hoop.

Actually, the tune and the new dance that goes with it are the natural outgrowth of similar modes in music, the rockabilly waltz and the grass - waving hula movement.

Tom Powers and his Bonaires originated the "Olapa," and currently are spreading the word and the steps all over the country. There's every chance in the world the dance will catch on. It can be accomplished by anyone with workable legs and a minor sense of rhythm, and little sense of decorum.

The dance is an eyeful to observe. If the craze catches on, as it deserves, you'll be watching all sorts of gyrations on dance floors. There is a bit of hip-swaying, hand-clapping, feet-shuffling and something from the burlesque line in it.

Luckily, Powers and the Bonaires shan't have to traipse about the country giving individual lessons. It just happens that the "Rock 'n Roll Olapa" is on record, under the Cam label, both as a straight piece of danceable music and in an instruction album, Cam number BR-100-8, which details all the movements. Fascinating.

Eddie Fisher's latest bouncy, happy plea titled "Take Me," backed by "The Best Thing for You." It's normal stuff for the ... singer . . .

VARIETY Scoreboard OF TOP TALENT AND TUNES

Compiled from Statistical Reports of Distribution Encompassing the Three Major Outlets

Coin Machines Retail Disks Retail Sheet Music

as Published in the Current Issue

NOTE: The current comparative sales strength of the Artists and Tunes listed hereunder is arrived at under a statistical system comprising each of the three major sales outlets enumerated above. These findings are correlated with data from wider sources, which are exclusive with VARIETY. The positions resulting from these findings denote the OVERALL IMPACT developed from the ratio of points scored, two ways in the case of talent (coin machines, retail disks) and three ways in the case of tunes (coin machines, retail disks and retail sheet music).

authentic pizza, Fassett said, and Italy's "top forty" appears to be a group of songs comprised 95% of American hit tunes—all aged a year.

"When I arrived in New York last week, the first thing I heard was "Volare," sung by Dean Martin—or 'Nel Blu Dipinto Di Blu' warbled by Modugno—which was the No. 1 ditty in Italy a year ago. Today they are all singing 'Come Prima' in Italy. It'll probably become a hit here next year. There seems to be a musical lag, in which a year is required for a tune to cross the ocean and catch on."

Fassett noted that the business of musical interchange between nations has received great impetus from the success of the Modugno disk, but continues to be a risky business nevertheless. In Salzburg, for example, the critics blasted a performance of "Vanessa" which was done in English. It is customary in Mozart's birthplace to perform all operas in German, Fassett declared, and consequently the English version offended Austria's sense of propriety.

With his trusty Magna Mite recorder, Fassett taped nearly 200,000 feet of music and interviews for his CBS Radio programs. He's currently editing some 10 of these musical features to be broadcast during the intermissions of the New York Philharmonic this winter. A few of the sound-pictures to be heard on the orchestra's upcoming season starting Oct. 4 follow:

An interview with Senora Genia Sadero who wrote songs for Rosa Ponselle. He will integrate the Ponselle vocalizing of one of these songs with the interview of this visit to the home for old musicians in Milan.

A tape recording backstage at La Scala in Milan featuring a rehearsal of Verdi's "Nabucco" with Anita Cerquetti, the gal who took Callas' place at the fateful Rome performance last winter, and other name Italian singers.

The Vivaldi Festival in Venice with a montage from the sounds of the music on the canals at night and the symphonic brass band concert on the Piazza San Marco and the music from an ancient violin that Antonio Vivaldi once played.

The Pied di Grotta—a song contest in Naples and a sound montage of the Palio, at the horse race held each year on the big square at Siena. Also a visit to Puccini's home at Torre del Lago near Viareggio. The visit to Puccini's home includes an interview with the housekeeper who worked for Puccini. Fassett also captured on tape the sounds of the Fountains of Tivoli.

But the sound of Anka's rendering on "Diana" on a juke box record at the corner espresso bar in Roma is still ringing in Fassett's ear. It t'aint easy to remove such a sound, Fassett insisted.

North Pole. The package, tagged "The Nautilus," contains the voices of Commander William Anderson and the officers and crew of the sub. The LP will come with a special 12-page commemorative booklet.

Also in the preem release will be "Benny Fields and His Minstrel Men," starring Jack Benny, George Burns, Milton Berle and Phil Silvers. For the juve market, diskery will have "Rudd and Reddy," (Adventures In Space), based upon the Screen Gems tv cartoon. Fourth album in the package will be "The Great T.D.," featuring 12 selections by the late Tommy Dorsey.

Colpix's push in the pop singles field will be made with James Darren. He's also pacted to Columbia Pictures for a screen buildup.

Diskery already has 30 distributors lined up to handle the line. Wexler states that the firm will have no permanent artists & repertoire setup but will go to outside producers for its disk output.

Label's eastern distribs met Monday (29) at the Columbia homeoffice in New York. Midwestern distribs are meeting in Chicago today (Wed.).

ecutive assistant to Scopp and in charge of copyrights, recently exited the firm also.

Baker is one of the music biz vets who has spanned the professional operations (fancy-talk for songplugging and exploitation) from the pre-radio, tv and electronic days to date. He was with Shapiro-Bernstein for six years and for three years learned the music business with the late Maurice Abrahams (Inc.) firm, headed by his brother-in-law, married to vaude headliner, the late Belle Baker, sister of Murray Baker.

Latter's contract terminates mid-December, at which time he will announce his future activities.

Mercury, Ex-Pye, In Pact With EMI

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Having severed its licensing deal with Britain's Pye Records, the Chi-based Mercury diskery last week set a new agreement with London's EMI Records to cover distribution in the United Kingdom, Near East and Far East and other widely scattered territories, effective tomorrow (Wed.) Up to now, Merc and EMI have been allied in Chile and Uruguay.

Deal was set for Mercury by prexy Irving B. Green and international division topper Brice Sommers, while chairman J. F. Lockwood and disk division manager C. H. Thomas negotiated for the English film.

First EMI releases from Merc masters will be "Chantilly Lace," "Fibbing," "It's Raining Outside" and "One Summer Night." Retailers are due to get the foursome early in October. Additionally, EMI plans for mid-October release an LP stereo of David Carroll's "Let's Dance," "Havana in Hi-Fi" by Richard Hayman, and the Ravel "Bolero" with Paul Paray and the Detroit Symphony.

Mercury also said it had repacted Disco-Press of Belgium, which plans to speed release of a flock of new stereos.

Dean Sheldon to RCA

Dean Sheldon, singer-composer, has joined the RCA Victor talent stable. He's currently in his 14th week at In Boboli, nitery in the Yorkville, N. Y. area.

Pitt and New Orleans Nitery-Happy; Steeltown's 7 New Ones, N.O.'s Names

By HAROLD V. COHEN

Pittsburgh, Sept. 30.

This city is the talk of the nitery circuit these days, with probably more clubs going than in any other key in the country with the possible exception of Las Vegas.

Right now there are at least seven big ones in operation, New Arena and Copa downtown, and the Holiday House, Ankara, Twin Coaches, Horizon Room and Vogue Terrace on the outskirts. In addition, Penn-Sheraton Hotel has just opened its new Harp and Crown, which peddles entertainment, too, but it's regarded more as a tavern than a cafe.

What's more, they're being peopled by some of the biggest names in the business. With the beginning of the new season, the lineup here included Red Buttons at Ankara, Tony Bennett at Holiday House, Dorothy Collins at New Arena, Nelson Eddy at Horizon Room, George Liberace at Twin Coaches and Tommy Dorsey orch, Buddy Rich Quintet and the Treniers splitting a week at the Copa.

The parade is continuing, too, with Jean Carroll currently at the Holiday House, Jackie Miles at New Arena and Domenico Modugno opening Friday (3) at the Coaches, followed by Johnny Mathis on the 10th.

Flock of Fringe Spots

Besides the top spots, there are at least 25 small rooms on the fringe area, nine or 10 of them playing from two to four acts on a week-long basis and the others presenting floorshows Fridays and Saturdays. The name-less rooms have long been a big source of revenue to the smalltime acts, and one team is known to have grossed $20,000 last year just working the spots within a radius of 50 miles of here.

Keys everywhere else can't figure it since most metropolitan areas the size of Pittsburgh and even larger are lucky to have one or two bona fide night clubs. And these aren't intimate, lounge-size places either. The capacities run from 300 to 1,200.

Whether all of them are making money is something else. Holiday House, which opened a little over two years ago, has been a blockbuster since the kickoff; Ankara and Copa have been profitable; Twin Coaches alternates between the so-so and the sensational, depending on the attraction, since it's 25 miles from the Golden Triangle; Vogue Terrace has been having its troubles and New Arena is still an unknown quantity since it has just remodeled and reopened under new management after a two-month shutdown.

Acts which have been working all over get bug-eyed upon arriving here and seeing how many spots are operating and what calibre of entertainment is being offered. It's incredible, unbelievable and altogether wonderful, they say.

Louisiana Haymakers

By TED LIUZZA

New Orleans, Sept. 30.

This fun-loving town on Mississippi's levees is girding itself for the biggest fall and winter season in years of night club acts, legitimate plays, concerts, operas and miscellaneous fare.

Top spots like the Swan Room of the Monteleone Hotel and the Blue Room of the Roosevelt are going all-out with name entertainers to lure in the customers.

The Swan Room, dark all summer, reopens Oct. 7 with Edgar Bergen teeing off its parade of stars. Nick Stuart, former film actor turned entertainment director and bandleader-emcee of the room, also has booked Don Cornell, Marie McDonald with Ted Fio Rito, Herb Shriner, Olsen & Johnson, Ninno Nani, George Liberace, Nelson Eddy & Gale Sherwood, Hildegarde, Liberace and Carmen Cavallaro. He is also negotiating for other names for the open dates on his schedule.

In the past, the Swan Room has presented a smattering of top-drawer names intermingled with promising new acts, but this season hotel president William A. Montcleone decided to embark on a policy of headliners only.

The Blue Room lineup will include Frankie Laine, Joe E. Lewis, Sophie Tucker, Johnnie Ray and others to be annuonced, starting Oct. 16.

Bourbon St., in the historic French Quarter, in the doldrums all summer, is already showing new life with opening of the football season and operators have embellished their shows with new strippers and other talent, plus dixieland combos. Weekends find the street jammed with fans who flock here for the college football games.

Then there's the opening of the racing season on Thanksgiving Day at the Fairgrounds and the upcoming Mardi Gras season and Spring Fiesta to add to the city's many attractions.

The New Orleans Hotel Assn. sees a big winter season of tourists and conventions to help the cash registers.

Industrial Show

Everybody's Viewin' It
(MOSQUE, NEWARK)

Newark, Sept. 29.

Detroit's chariots face a rough year, according to all economic calculations, but the front that's being put up is fancier than the grillwork and the chrome moldings on the side. It's a year of push and hard-selling, and seemingly there's nothing like a show to get the dealers into the frame of mind to go out and make a fortune on the new product.

Plymouth's show, "Everybody's Viewin' It," shown Monday (29) at the Mosque Theatre, Newark, takes a different point of attack. It's a show with no stars, little dialog, a sufficient amount of song and dance work, all building up to the appearance of the assistant general manager of Chrysler's Plymouth Division. Jack W. Minor is a personable and handsome performer who is convinced of the superiority of his product, and able to transmit that enthusiasm to audiences. Minor, coming in the midst of handsome production and lively song and dance, blends well with the surroundings, indulging in some badinage with several of the performers and answering questions put to him by some of the cast.

The surrounding production contributes to the effectiveness of Minor's dissertation on the new Plymouth: Music Corp. of America has, within the small framework of this event, given the show a lush and lively setting. The cast comprises 11 people, including a dance team, the Archers, and a chorus of six girls and four boys. The costuming is in good taste, the choreography is lively and the tunes, although having an imitative air, sell the cars and the performers pleasingly.

This show has two companies on the road, one in the east and the other in the west. They are duplicate shows and the cast of one can step into the other group. With two companies, Plymouth can have a shorter pre-selling season so that dealer enthusiasm doesn't wane.

This season is distinguished by the fact that each of the automobile companies has put on shows of different styles. The season includes adaptation of Broadway musicals as well as originals and intimate revues. Each, in its own way, has been effective, and all have been able to generate enthusiasm.

In the Plymouth show, the Archers are a lively pair whose dances focus around the lad who does some fancy eccentric legwork. The vocal strength of the group is contained in Louise Pearl and Joy Ann Sica, and the surrounding cast includes Marilyn D'Honnau, Dorothy Jean Mathis, Sybil Scotford, Nannette Rosen, Stuart Damon, Jay MacKenzie and Robert Trevis. Ervin Brabec of MCA is the show's producer; Arnold Spector, as director, endowed the layout with a fast gait; Oscar Kosaran gave firm musical backing, and the music and lyrics, by Eva Franklin and Ray Jaimes, seemed to be based around tunes heard long ago. Jose.

USO's 1st Lebanon Show

Nurenberg, Germany, Sept. 30.

American troops from Germany who are currently stationed in Lebanon saw their first live American entertainment when a group of USO performers brought their show to about 500 soldiers at an outpost in Beirut, according to a report received in Germany from military officials.

The first USO show to be sent to the American base since the military arrived in Beirut in mid-July consisted by emcee Leslie Gaines, singer Joanne Norris and musicians Curley Bridges, Bill Jackson, King Terbert, Ed Powell and Frank Motley in a revue called "Swingin' Along."

Ray Saturating S. Amer. in Bow; Theatres, AM-TV

Johnnie Ray has gone off again, this time to South America to start probing the theatre, television and radio market for record names. Ray is the first solo record singer to go off on a tour that will take him to virtually every country in S. A.

The market has been explored previously by Louis Armstrong and the Platters. However, this is the first time that a solo singer of his stripe has gone off on an extensive tour there. His dates have been booked by Cosudel, a talent agency in Buenos Aires. Otto Garcia, of that firm, made the arrangements in New York, and deposited a substantial part of Ray's guarantees in N.Y. banks.

Ray's dates start tomorrow (Thurs.) at the Broadway Theatre, Buenos Aires, for two weeks. He will double on Radio El Mundo, and several television dates. He follows with Santiago, where in addition to playing the Rex Theatre, he will work the Waldorf, a nitery, as well as radio and video dates. He has also been signed for Montevideo and Rio de Janeiro, plus other cities.

Ray was among the first of the solo names to determine that Australia was a profitable market for disk names, and hopes to prove the merit of the S. A. market on this trip.

O'SHEA READYING 4TH USAF TOUR FOR NOV.

The fourth annual tour of U.S. Air Force bases is being prepared by Michael Shawn O'Shea, of the American Theatre Wing, to take place around the Thanksgiving holidays. Itinerary hasn't yet been determined, pending a request from the State Dept. or the Air Force for the volunteer performers to play military installations in North Africa. Otherwise the entertainers are most likely to play bases in Greenland, Labrador and Newfoundland. An alternate route through Alaska is also a prospect.

Unit will comprise newscaster-columnist Drew Pearson, Joey Adams, Cindy Heller (Mrs. Adams), Barney Ross, Siri, pianist Burt Bacharach, and six Hartford Agency models.

'Jewel Box' Flop in D.C. With 2½G; Cancel Tour

Washington, Sept. 30.

Four performances in Washington of "Jewel Box Revue," comprising a group of femme impersonators, caused a reconsideration of the touring plans. The show called off its tour of six cities prior to a Broadway opening, and will now attempt to set up shop in an off-Broadway house.

In its abbreviated Washington stand at the Shubert it grossed a meagre $2,500 in a house with a potential $20,000 for four shows, and decided to toss in the towel. The show collected unanimous pans from the four local critics.

Included in the show are Lynne Carter, Jan Britton, Bill Daye, Tytanic, Robbi Ross, Storm de Larverie, Dale Roberts and Gigi Allen. Cancelled were stands in Montreal, Detroit, Cincinnati, Columbus and Pittsburgh.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

Lou Walters, who has been in Florida recuperating since he relinquished control of the Cafe de Paris, N. Y., which subsequently folded, denies that permission by the American Guild of Variety Artists to open without bond was the result of his offer to run the opening night of his cafe as a benefit for the union's sick and relief fund.

In a letter to VARIETY Walters stated that he had envisioned the cafe's opening as a benefit, originally, for the Damon Runyon Fund, but because of delay in acceptance, tendered the offer to AGVA with the amount to be donated to be decided by him.

At another time, Walters stated, he told the union that he would be unable to open if he had to post a bond. Permission was granted, said Walters, so that 40 performers could obtain work in his spot. He did not disclose the amount the union received as a result of the benefit.

AGVA's full support of the benefit was reflected in the fact that the union authorized the purchase of 10 tickets at $20 each for the Cafe de Paris preem, and the sick and relief fund was authorized to buy an additional $200 worth of ducats for this affair. Most of the union's hierarchy, based in New York, plus some wives, attended.

Recent death of the widow of Sam Thall recalls the exploits of that head of the RKO transportation department during the heyday of vaudeville. Thall, who handled all the details, was able to get complete units off for long arduous stands without a hitch. He was also regarded as a compendium of railroad schedules, rates and baggage charges throughout the country, operating out of Chicago.

Cy Reeves, a board member who presided at the executive committee of the American Guild of Variety Artists which tried Paul Valentine last week, states that the board did not vote on the disqualification of exec committee members Joe Smith (& Dale) and Al Tucker, who made statements indicating prejudice against the defendant. Reeves said that it was rulings from the chair which resulted in barring them from passing judgment on Valentine. Other members at the meeting say that Reeves leaned over backward in an effort to be fair, and was impartial in all rulings.

The annual Builders Show in Minneapolis is having its customers—exhibitors and prospective ones—and friends choose the headliner for the 60-minute stage end of its presentation. In an effort to learn whom these exhibitors, etc., would prefer to top the show's 60-minute four-act offering, 1,000 questionnaires have been mailed out. Recipients are asked to check off their first five preferences from a list of 30 headliners who, it's hoped, may be available.

A promise is made that there'll be every effort to obtain the act receiving the most votes. Headliners or, in lieu of them, prominent bands, for which the recipients are asked to specify their choices, include Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo, Nat King Cole, Eartha Kitt and Burl Ives.

Texas State Fair Betting on Strong Name Lineup to Beat 2,540,000 Mark

Dallas, Sept. 30.

State Fair of Texas, opening its 73d annual 16-day run Saturday (4), has a bigger entertainment lineup than ever before. Pull of name shows should better last year's 2,540,967 attendance, which was a drop from 1956's gate pull of 2,672,253.

In the 187-acre showplace the top show lure for the Oct. 4-19 run is the touring company of "Music Man," with Forrest Tucker and Joan Weldon, in the 4,120-seat State Fair Music Hall. Author Meredith Willson will be here for the opening. Advance ducat sale has topped $100,000, and expo officials expect about a $275,000 gross from the 24 performances, scaled at $4.95-$1.65.

"Ice Capades," the 18th edition, one of John H. Harris' touring icers, gets 23 showings in the Ice Arena during the expo's run. Frozen water show annually draws more than 100,000, and again is scaled from $3.30-$1.50.

One-nighter attractions include Tennessee Ernie Ford, Molly Bee and other acts in the Cotton Bowl, Oct. 5 (at a fee); Tito Guizar heading a "Mexico Salute" Oct. 6; Eydie Gorme and soldier-boy Steve Lawrence (a maybe on him), Oct. 9; Kirby Grant and Gloria Winters, Oct. 10; George Gobel toplining a show on East Texas Day, Oct. 14; and Red Foley stars in a rustic rhythm show Oct. 15. All these layouts are in the Cotton Bowl. On Oct. 13 singer LaVern Baker and Buddy Johnson's band give a free show on the Magnolia Stage, center of the fairgrounds, celebrating the fair's annual Negro Achievement Day ceremonies.

Cotton Bowl's grid games include Southern Methodist U.-Notre Dame, Oct. 4; Texas U.-Oklahoma U., Oct. 11, and Southern Methodist U.-Rice, Oct. 18.

Unit Review

Jewel Box Revue
Washington, Sept. 25.

Danny Brown and Doc Bonner production of two-act revue of famous impersonators. Staging and choreography by William Jamis; assistant choreographer, Chunga Ochoa; scenery, costumes and lighting, Richard H. Bunin; sketches, Robert Kade; additional music and lyrics, Eva Franklin; musical direction, Max Meth; musical arrangements, Fred Ventre; general manager, Ben Boyer. At Sam S. Shubert Theatre, Sept. 23, '58; $4.80 top. Cast: Lynne Carter, Gigi Allen, Jan Britton, Bill Daye, Storme de Larverie, Robbi Ross, Chunga Ochoa, Dale Roberts, Gene GeBauer, Mr. Tytanic.

Dearie, "The Jewel Box Revue" is strictly rhinestone. But not cheap, like in budget; just cheap, like in taste. Needing nothing but a complete rewrite of the lyrics to make them leer and a complete replanning to make it a show for $4.95, this busload of 25 female impersonators opened a "road tour" at the Shubert and dragged to the alley in four performances net.

But don't get us wrong, dearie, the costumes are spectacular and imaginative. Swooners. And Lynne Carter is a talented turn, a comedian (or spell it comedienne) of authority. His Pearl Bailey is tres chic. Actually the humor, what they remembered to include, is quite discreet though Carter in the finale costume is inspired to hang a bunch of bananas you-know-where on the costume.

One song goes, "It's a long way from home to Paris and lucky Pierre." Then again, dearie, "You can fly without wings; don't be a woman if you can."

Original music has been mostly omitted. Everybody just decided, why not burst out with such proven items as "76 Trombones," "I Could Have Danced All Night" (at Cherry Grove?) and—get this, postively — "My Old Kentucky Home."

'Borscht' 11½G in 6, S.F.

"Borscht Capades" grossed $11,500 in six performances last week at the 1,550-seat Geary Theatre, San Francisco. Mickey Katz tops the cast.

Yiddish-slanted musical had a $42,000 potential in that house at a $5 top.

Betty Johnson 'At Home'

Charlotte, N.C., Sept. 30.

The thrush from Possum Walk Road—Charlotte's Betty Johnson—will serve as "Honor Princess" of the Carolinas Carrousel at Charlotte this year. The tv performer and disker will ride in the parade Nov. 11 and entertain at the Royal Society of the Knights of Carrousel Ball and dinner.

The former gospel singer who appears regularly on the Jack Paar show got her singing start as the soprano in Charlotte's Johnson Family singing group.

X-RAYING THE HAYSEED LOOPS

Those Vegas Salaries Held to Be Killing Off Names for Other Cafes

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Las Vegas, through skyrocketing performer salaries to unheard-of heights, has killed off the regular nitery circuit for rest of the country, according to Dave Siegel, co-owner of the Cal-Neva Lodge at Lake Tahoe and former entertainment director of Vegas' Flamingo Hotel.

Only way operators elsewhere can survive, he says, is on a personal friendship basis with top talent, and even then the going is rough.

There are only 20 or so "true" night club stars," Siegel points out, and these are paid so much—$20,000 to $30,000 a week—by Vegas posh joints that they simply aren't interested in bothering with many of the clubs across the country and will appear only as a personal favor to a club owner.

Gambling city alone needs some 50 top attractions each year, assuming each makes a double go-around every 12 months, and "there just aren't that many top acts," Siegel notes. As a result, he says, hotels are paying lesser acts far more than they're entitled to, thus making it difficult for other night spots, without gambling, to match the figure, even proportionately.

Siegel predicts no new night clubs will be able to make the nut, no matter where they open, and advises, "Don't try to start one unless you hate money."

Cal-Neva Lodge, open from June 1 through Labor Day, this season booked Milton Berle, Tony Martin, Betty Grable, George Gobel, Gordon MacRae, Ray Bolger and Pearl Bailey. Gambling, friendship with top talent and the fact Lake Tahoe is a vacation resort contribute to success of enterprise, Siegel declares. He pays about-one-third of what his stars receive in Vegas and explains that, before the Vegas competition set in, salaries were less than that.

7G-String Robbery

Detroit, Sept. 30.

A safe containing $7,000 was taken from the Gayety burlesque, manager Charles Robinson reported to police. Investigation showed a small safe had been taken from a larger wall safe.

The money represented salaries for the performers as well as a night's receipts.

Cafe Paree Quits After D.C. Quickie

Washington, Sept. 30.

The Cafe Paree, Washington's prettiest and newest night club, didn't last long. It opened May 15 with Zsa Zsa Gabor and Joey Adams and closed Sept. 20 with Cab Calloway.

Owner Harry Snyder, who said he had been ill and couldn't look after the nitery as he would have liked, blamed the financial failure on the fact that Washington will not support a third night club booking expensive name acts.

Lee Zeiger's Casino Royal and Allan Bralove's Blue Room of the Shoreham Hotel are going into the new season with names, but both the Mayflower and Statler Hotels have discontinued the practice.

Snyder spent $35,000 to redecorate the former Coral Room to make the Cafe Paree the best-looking club in town. There was no cover charge, but there was a $5 minimum. It lost money from the start.

The club will soon be auctioned by the landlord, Congress Development Inc., described by Snyder as a large New York construction firm also owning several apartment projects in the same southeast section of Washington as the Cafe Paree.

Snyder owns the downtown Blue Mirror which makes a go with pretty girls, leaving name acts to others.

P.R. MAN SUES FOR 10G IN WILD WEST FIASCO

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Publicist Hank Fine is demanding $10,497 assertedly due him for services rendered in a breach-of-contract suit in L.A. Supreme Court filed against Gene Autry, the Wild West Show & Rodeo and other defendants. He said he'd been hired to handle publicity for the ill-fated Wild West show at the Brussels World Fair from May through October of this year at $300 weekly plus expenses.

Show ended as fiasco when coin ran out and the performers and others were left stranded in the Belgian capital.

Mac Willie Exec Mgr. Of Havana's Tropicana

Memphis, Sept. 30.

J. L. (Jim) Mac Willie, Dallas and Memphis sportsman and night club owner, has been named executive manager of the swank Tropicana in Havana. Mac Willie who has fronted some of Dallas' and Memphis' top spots for the past 10 years, will skipper the Cuba casino and handle entertainment and excursions for Americans shuttling over from Miami.

Mac Willie is lining up several U.S. names for the coming season and will make several trips to New York and Hollywood for talent, he said here before planing to Havana.

'Holiday' Big 56G, Peoria

Peoria, Ill., Sept. 30.

"Holiday on Ice" mopped up here last week with a $56,000 gross for five days at the Bradley field house, topping previous record for the 7,700-seater by some $20,000.

Stand had a $3.50 top and was promoted by Sid Page.

DeWOLFE-GOGI GRANT PALMER HOUSE'S PEAK

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Just-departed Bill DeWolfe-Gogi Grant bill collared the year's best biz so far at the Palmer House's Empire Room. Plushery played the pair three weeks. It's pointed out, however, that season's high probably would have been notched by George Gobel, here in August, but the Chi-spawned comic only played a week.

Jose Greco, popular multi-repeater in the room, is current, with Marguerite Piazza set for Oct. 23.

Eydie Adams Revue On Tex Casa Manana Slate

Fort Worth, Sept. 30.

The Eydie Adams Revue has replaced Don Cornell on the schedule of fall attractions for Casa Manana here on Oct. 30 and Nov. 1. With Miss Adams will be Pete Pederson, Landre & Verna and the Casa Manana Voices.

Other attractions on the schedule are George Liberace for Nov. 13-15, an ice show produced by Ed Leary for Nov. 25-29 and Roger Williams for Dec. 11-13.

Casa Mana plans a series of winter productions to begin Jan. 19, but details and names of attractions have not been announced.

"Shoestring Revue" yesterday (Mon.) for a two-week stand. In the cast are Dorothy Greener, Jori Remus, G. Wood, Mildred Cook, Bill McCutcheon, Faye DeWitt, Paul Sanchez Marlene Dell and Todd Jackson, Ben Bagley and Breck Wall are producers.

MIXED VIEWS ON NAMES AT FAIRS

The current agricultural fair season is causing a reappraisal of the value of names on the rural show circuits. The losses sustained by the Ohio State Fair at Columbus, which wound $70,000 in the red, is one of the reasons for the renewed research into the feasibility of using high-priced names on the rural routes.

At the same time, presence of Bob Hope and Arthur Godfrey boosted the Indiana State Fair to a record $118,698. The grosses throughout the country have been somewhat uneven this year, despite the fact that recession hasn't hit the farmers, which as a class have had an exceedingly profitable year because of zooming food prices.

Fact that fair grosses can be uneven in this year indicates to showmen that some renewed thought must be given the subject. Opinions have been expressed that the majority of the fair shows play to captive audiences. At many fairs, the gross doesn't vary too much no matter what the grandstand attractions are. It's also been suggested that the physical layouts of most fairs are such that the bulk of the people hanker only for a palce to sit down and rest following the foot-wearying job of looking at all the exhibits.

Some fairmen have taken the view that a good playable show is all that's needed, and names should be used only when the gate shows signs of cracking.

There are several non-name shows that have toured fairs which are being offered to arenas and auditoriums on the basis that they did turnaway biz in the hinterlands. Bulk of these are being turned down inasmuch as the arena men take the view that virtually anything can sell at country showshops, and selling this kind of show in the city is an entirely different proposition. The arena men have been saying that these shows have little appeal on their own, but did business merely because of its location.

It's expected that fairmen in many situations are likely to attempt some degree of measuring basic boxoffice and attendance before names hit their circuits. On this basis they may be able to determine the additional value of headliners, if any, and are most likely to buy accordingly next year.

Skelton Bowing 'Live' In L.A. Topping Show At Ritz With David Rose

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Red Skelton will top a show at the newly renovated Ritz Theatre here for producer Harry Zevin, Oct. 30. It's titled "The Clown and The Baton," with David Rose and his orch supporting. It'll be Skelton's first live appearance in Los Angeles apart from benefits.

Comic is committed for two and a half weeks on a guarantee and percentage basis, but may hold over. He'll be preceded by several opening acts, not yet chosen. Skelton also is doing his weekly CBS teleseries but under a sked of part live and part film. The filmed shows are expected to be used during his Ritz appearance.

Zevin hopes to follow Skelton with another one-man turn by Liberace but deal is still in talking stage. Ken Murray's new "blackouts" opens Christmas Day.

Sheraton Veeps Moore

Robert L. Moore, who has been head of the Sheraton Hotel chain's public relations division for the past three years, has been named vice president of the Sheraton Central Credit Club.

Moore, a former television show packager, is author of "The Pitchman," a novel about the video packaging business.

AGVA Throws Curb at Bright With Reactivation of Grievance Committee

One of the first efforts to curb the power of the present administration of the American Guild of Variety Artists was completed at the two-day executive committee meeting held last week in New York. A motion was passed unanimously to revive a grievance committee to hear complaints of union employees and of discharged AGVA employees desiring to make a final pitch for retention of their jobs. This committee was disbanded some years ago.

The move was introduced by newly elected first veepee Rajah Raboid. This motion precludes any possibility of national administrative secretary Jackie Bright asking the forthcoming national board meeting to extend the unlimited firing power granted him at the June convention in Mexico City.

Spurring passage of the motion was the serving of a complaint and summons on Bright by Barry Houston, former organizer in Detroit. At Bright's recommendation, no hearing was given him. He's asking $25,000.

At the time of Houston's dismissal, the move was protested by Penny Singleton, now president-elect of the union, who saw in this instance a repeat of the Dick Jones incident. Jones was also fired without a hearing and sued in court, obtaining a judgment of $110,000 against Bright and Jack Irving, Bright's predecessor. Although, the jury assessed Bright and not the union, AGVA picked up the $20,000 settlement tab for Bright only. At that time, Miss Singleton wrote some scathing letters to Bright on the subject expressing fear that a suit would result.

Guy's Wham 77G, S.D.

Mitchell, S. D., Sept. 30.

Guy Lombardo, with $77,000, set the highest gross in 67 years of festival shows at the Corn Palace here, Sept. 21-27.

Lombardo played only 12 shows and new record tops that of Lawrence Welk for 15 shows in 1954. Supporting acts included the Modernaires, Johnny Haymer and Bobby Winters.

Big Stars Do Too Much Biz for GIs

London, Sept. 30.

The successful military club in European military posts have a problem of keeping down the attendance because of limited capacity. Maj. George Perry, manager of the Gen Von Steuben Hotel, Wiesbaden, which runs a club under Air Force control explains that he has to turn down some excellent buys inasmuch as the membership rolls exceed the capacity of the cafe.

For example, says Perry, there was a chance of buying Sarah Vaughan for $1,700, but since the club accommodates only 350, the entire roster of 1,000 members and wives could have converged to at one time. Best practice, he concludes is to book solid British and American acts. This nitery and the Landstuhl, a club for non-commissioned officers, are the only niteries offering entertainment every evening.

The Von Steuben's entertainment bill runs around $100,000 annually with orchestras taking the major slice of the budget. The ballroom band gets $1,800 to $2,500 monthly; cocktail lounge orch, from $1,000 to $1,250 monthly; and the string quartet in the dining room about $600 a month. He buys the orchestras from the German agencies and also buys a few acts from reputable Deutsche per-

USO IN N.Y. STARTING DRIVE FOR $1,600,000

The USO in New York City begins its appeal for funds today (Wed.) in a pitch for $1,600,000. Monies derived from this campaign will be used to support the USO's 267 clubs and finance the entertainment troupes playing overseas installations.

USO shows this year will play an estimated 2,350 bases throughout the world to an audience of more than 1,000,000 GIs. As part of the USO drive, a preview theatre benefit for "The Girls in 509" will be held Oct. 14 at the Belasco Theatre.

Scots Guards $11,000 At Troy Field House

Troy, N. Y., Sept. 30.

The Grenadier Guards and Massed Pipers and Dancers of the Scots Guards drew an audience of almost 5,000 to the R.P.I. Field House here last week for a gross of $11,000 at $3.50 top. While a very substantial figure, it was $3,200 below the Black Watch Guards take in the college arena a year ago. H. L. (Jack) Garren, Field House managing director, attributed the difference to the fact the 1957 performance was on Sunday afternoon, a more ideal time.

It was the second big gross registered at the Field House this fall, the first being a $59,000 week (nine performances) of the 17th edition of John H. Harris' "Ice Capades," in early September.

CHEZ PAREE VETOES COLE'S CHI CONCERT

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Nat Cole's Orchestra Hall charity concert, slated for Oct. 5, has been cancelled at the insistence of the Chez Paree, where singer is currently starring. A move to reschedule the concert to follow the Chez date was also kiboshed by Dave Halper, the nitery's co-owner.

Cole said he was willing to do the concert for the benefit of a Negro medical college in Nashville, although earlier it had been touch-and-go whether he would because of uncertainty as to how much the school would realize from the affair.

When he finally consented to topline the program, it was understood Cole wanted $7,000 and assurances the medical institution would realize at least 40% of the gross. Concert was a promotion of Harry Zelzer's Allied Arts, and original deal set by Chez Artists (unconnected with the cafe, and headed by Phil Consolo of the former adagio team of Consolo & Melba) called for a $5,000 "fee." But one point at issue was a report that although such a sum was involved, Cole was to appear gratis.

Zelzer, in New York at week's end, was to reset the benefit with another headliner.

Vegas Riviera Wooing 'Haggis' Quiz for Xmas

The Riviera Hotel, Las Vegas, aside from looking to video as a source of attractions, feels that ratings and scandal notwithstanding, it wants a giveaway show during the Christmas season. Sammy Lewis, inn's booker, is negotiating for the presentation of "Haggis Baggis" at the hotel around the Christmas season.

Current plan is to pitch the show as a possible source of getting a supply of Christmas gifts. Ella Fitzgerald will be co-headliner on this display.

The Riviera has also signed Phil Silvers to come in with the cast of his video show, starting Oct. 21.

Rodeo, Toplining Roy Rogers, Gallops With Big Roundup of Vaude Turns

By LEONARD TRAUBE

The rodeo at New York's Madison Square Garden seems to be fielding more acts as counterpoints to the competitive events than has obtained in recent years. There is also more time given to these performers.

Last year's chute & corral classique had the Lone Ranger and Lassie topping the bill. Obviously this didn't work out either at the wickets or in the arena, because Roy Rogers has been called back for his umpteenth appearance with the cowboy cavalcade which opened last week (25) for a ride to Oct. 13.

Rogers still has the name, the dazzling trappings and the type of folksy showmanship and chatter to score at the b.o. The Garden needs him on the marquee to square that $6 top. And since he is one film and television cowboy who also has an act and has long been associated with the roundups, it's just been a question of whether to go with him or his predecessor, Gene Autry. Rogers and Autry have just about dominated the rodeo for the last couple of decades.

Frank Moore, longtime resident manager of the cowpoke extravaganza, has provided an array of acts, in addition to Rogers' contributions, that's appropriate and plays well between the orthodox contests of man against the beasts. And all of them have that solid kid appeal. Sid & Barbara Moore offer a laugh-raising session with a quintet of pooches sliding down a chute to a leaping tick. The county fair level is further represented by the "Beeswax" Taximeter Mule with a couple of clowns working the stubborn animal for yocks.

The major spread comes toward the show's end when Rogers and his troupe, including his nag Trigger, Pat Brady and the Sons of the Pioneers, head a longish session that takes in Homer Garrett's Hollywood Square Dancers (8) and Baudy's Greyhounds and Monkeys. The mixed group of terpers are fine examples in that idiom and the Baudy turn is a solid novelty in which the greyhounds serve as mounts for the capers of funny chimps.

At the pre-intermission, Rogers has a couple of numbers in segue; first with his haute ecole Trigger Jr. and then with a beautifully broken octet of Liberty palominos. He rates rounds of salvos from the audience. In the later display Rogers pours on the country & western stuff vocally, aided by Pat Brady's spotlighted community sing and the sagebrush songs of the Sons of the Pioneers. Since Rogers' wife and co-performer Dale Evans is not with the show this year, he called on her from a box and she came into the arena to do "Somewhere Over the Rainbow." Rogers might be faulted on some of that religioso stuff pitched at a thrill-happy rodeo audience, but the crowd appeared to go for it.

Exhibition Section

In the exhibition section are the Lightning "C" Ranch's well synchronized horseback quadrille, again led by Everett E. Colborn, for many years the show's managing director; and a barrel race by the Eastern Guest Ranch Girls, a tame affair that's strictly a filler. (Trick riding and roping have long since been shelved, along with the razzle-dazzle basketball on horseback). Rogers takes a turn around the arena to shake hands with the kids and give them opportunity to pat his nag. It's his characteristic way of "mixing" with the customers.

Through the show and especially in the steer riding event, clowns D. J. (Kajun Kid) Gaudin and Buck LeGrand raise the roof with their antics versus the Brahma bulls. Some of their escapades come pretty close to disaster stemming from the angry steers.

The contests consisting as usual of bareback bronc riding, calf roping, saddle bronc riding, steer wrestling, bull riding and the end-up wild horse race whammo, totals up to a $78,000 purse, which with entries added goes into a higher boodle for the cowpokes to shoot at. There are fewer contestants coming out of the chutes for each event. This makes for a snappier, streamlined, and no-nonsense show. In other years the succession of competing stalwarts was almost endless.

As per tradition, the music is by James Cimmeron's Cowboy Band which works with its characteristic authority, and this year the announcer is Pete Logan, who's liberal with explanatory palaver. The arena secretary is Cecil Jones; judges, Todd Whatley, Bill George and John Pogue.

The early curtain on some days seems to be working out well for family groups. On Sunday night the start is at 6 o'clock, and on Tuesday-Wednesday-Thursday it's 7:30, with the regular 8:30 time on Friday-Saturday. There are no Monday performances except on Oct. 13, holiday holdover from Columbus Day, in the 6 p.m. slot. Kid prices are halved for the matinees (Wednesday, Friday) and Tuesday-through-Thursday nights.

'Free Shows'

if all the hostels are running at capacity.

Lansburgh thus comes full circle in his inauguration locally of a borscht belt type of operation. He was first to offer rooms-with-meals, plus hotel divertissment round-the-clock package plan some years ago at the Versailles and Sherry Frontenac. That is now the basis of operations for all but three of the top luxury establishments.

10G Salaries—Maybe More

Fees for the one-night, one-show deals (with suites on the house for a longer stay), range from $4,000 to $10,000. The latter figure will probably go higher; dickerings with Jerry Lewis have him at an asking price of $15,000. Tentative lineup has Tommy Sands, as a Christmas entry, Frankie Laine, Georgia Gibbs, Victor Borge, Phil Silvers, Patti Page, Mischa Elman, Jose Iturbi (dependent on his return from Spain), Anna Maria Alberghetti and Ricky Nelson. In the pitched-for group are Lewis, Bob Hope, Red Skelton, Danny Kaye, Nat King Cole, Johnny Mathis, Polly Bergen, Eddie Fisher and Judy Garland. Harry Belafonte has been signed for two days.

It's expected that a good many of the final bookings will come from those names with video commitments, who thus can make a jaunt south for a one-shot, linger for a couple of days in the sun and return in time for their weekly show rehearsals. This vista of vital attractions tends to create opinion among some operators that, in the end, standard cafe acts will be excluded to allow for the "new to the area" performers with reputations.

Oddly enough, Lansburgh has made a deal with Lou Walters to run the Casanova Room for lavish production setup identified with the vet impresario. It is evident that the young hotelman feels there is room for everyone and that his "for guests only" entertainment will not affect the regular run of business around the Beach cafe circuit.

Rivals' Views

Reaction among the town's hoteliers is mixed on that point. One boniface points to several names on the list as acts he had been negotiating for; another says he already has several of them set for season dates, but does not feel the Lansburgh use of their talents can affect their draw values if the dates do not run too closely together. No matter, all are proceeding according to annual plan.

With Frank Sinatra set for a two-weeker in the LaRonde in midseason, the Fontainebleau's Ben Novack is on the verge of expanding the room to a 750-800 capacity. He has bids out for Jack Benny, Sammy Davis, Red Skelton, Dean Martin, Polly Bergen, among others. And he is building a 5,000-seat auditorium to be ready in the spring, in which he can spot, if he so decides, the big names next year, at a guarantee against percentage. That's in the future, however.

Harry Mufson of the Eden Roc has his money-in-the-bank returnee Joe E. Lewis set, plus with Eydie Gorme. As with Novack, this is the one firm commitment, but there are others pending that will, if confirmed, wind him with a strong lineup to engage the competition; with an 800-seat capacity, his Cafe Pompeii can be a heavy grosser, as attested in former "big" seasons.

Tisch Snubs Names

Larry Tisch, the Americana's top man, has switched from "star" thinking. He's commited Sid Kuller to write a topical revue for the Bal Masque, with Selma Marlowe Harris producing. It is set for a four-week run, beginning in mid-December, at a budget that allows for strengthening of draw values with a name, if business so demands. Tisch, however, is keeping fingers crossed that such a move will not be necessary. He took a bath last season, when even the $25,000 toppers couldn't bring the room into the black side of the ledger.

The most successful hotel-cafe has been the Lucerne's Club Chalet. Owner Oscar Markovich, some 88 weeks ago, installed another, Selma Marlowe Harris idea—"Havana Mardi Gras." With Diosa Costello in the top slot, it has kept running, in-season and off-season. A new edition will take up the winter run.

The new Diplomat Country Club in Hollywood opens with Tony Martin. There are others on its set list for the winter, who appear also on the Lansburgh lineup, but managing director George E. Fox does not feel this will hurt his newery's nitery. The patronage to be drawn will come from the Hollywood-Ft. Lauderdale-Palm Beach sector with Miami Beach trade expected to be based on a "let's see this year's hotel."

Saxony's Roof Nitery

The Saxony has its expansion in final stages. Undergoing a complete rebuild, with addition of 150 rooms and a rooftop cafe—first of its kind in the Beach—to be called the Ivory Tower, entertainment policy is still to be firmed up; a name band idea has been mulled. Return of the Geisha Girl Revue is a dim prospect, of last season. What is being looked for is something novel, in keeping with the layout, arrived at by a glass-enclosed elevator that runs up the front of the building and provides an intriguing look at the Miamis.

Only big indie club will be the Latin Quarter. E. M. Loew and Eddie Risman are setting up as heavy a name lineup as possible. Signed are Betty Grable and Sophie Tucker with the Ritz Bros. on the possibility list. With Lou Walters now at the Deauville, Lou Chesler, landlord of the Cafe de Paris (ne Copa City) has shown no signs of planning a relighting this winter with a new producer-operator. The neighboring Cotton Club, formerly the Beachcomber, will definitely be turned into a bowling centre. City council has okayed the license for this first-of-its-kind on the Beach.

'Plenty for Everybody'

Wiser and calmer heads among the cafe contingent feel the draw-off of 4,000 prospects three times a week is not going to hurt those hotels that have a prime attraction. They figure that with over 100,000 tourists around during a season-height week, there's plenty to draw from; they also point out the possibility that entertainment wants will be whetted among the 4,000 Deauville attendees, who are getting it all for free and will still have the dough budgeted for a night on the town.

The intime all-nitery group stands to benefit most from that latter prospect. A Murray Franklin's with its wacky shows, easy-does-it atmosphere and libations, is illustrative of this type of operation which, even when things are rough, seems to attract enough of a mixture of regulars and visitors to keep going at a profitable pace.

Pearl Bailey's Dates

Pearl Bailey has signed for a pair of dates in Negro theatres. She will play the Apollo, N. Y., Feb. 6 and the Howard, Washington, Feb. 20.

Miss Bailey will precede these stands with an engagement at the Chase Hotel, St. Louis, Jan. 14.

Liquor Nix Folds Moulin Rouge, N.O.

New Orleans, Sept. 30.

The Moulin Rouge, Bourbon St. nitery, closed its doors Wednesday (24) after its beer and liquor permits were suspended by the state alcoholic beverage control board and the state board of tax appeals.

The action of the boards would prevent Elmo Badon from obtaining beer or liquor permits for the operation of a night spot bar at any time in the future.

The permits were in the name of Gaspar Lachute. However, Badon was identified as the operator of the Moulin Rouge during the recent Federal court trial in which he was convicted of smuggling 109 bottles of whiskey.

Ambassador Hotel, L. A.

Los Angeles, Sept. 26.

Sam Levenson, Alice Babs with Ulrick Neumann, Freddy Martin Orch (13); $2-$2.50 cover, $3 minimum.

Current booking of Sam Levenson at the Cocoanut Grove is one of the few times Ambassador Hotel entertainment director Gus Lampe has put a standup comedian into the big room as top attraction. That it is an accurate aim at the taste of the non-celeb audience, which is the bulwark of the Grove's regular clientele, was evidenced opening night and thereafter. It is Levenson's first west coast nitery date and he obviously will be a regular and a welcome one if he wishes. The laughter that greeted his stories was not limited to periodic explosions. It opened high and sustained throughout. Swedish singer Alice Babs makes her American bow as the intro act, with accompanist guitarist Ulrick (eq) Neumann, assisting.

Levenson's family chronicles strike a familiar chord with audiences of any background. Although his family was orbited around Brooklyn and Coney Island, it is pure and delightful Americana, as native to Long Beach, Calif., as Long Beach, N. Y. He has a seemingly artless technique. Far from being deadpan comedian, he laughs heartily, infectiously, at his own stories. And it is not damning with faint praise, but praising for no damns whatsoever, to say that the whole act is remarkably clean and suffers no loss of humor for being so.

Miss Babs is a blonde looker with a long-stemmed figure, and shows a remarkable voice, one of those trick throats that can handle the scale from mezzo to high coloratura with ease and melody. She uses it for pops and standards, including an amusing version of "Sugar Time" in Swedish. Her duets with accompanist Ulrick have a homey and pleasant quality.

Miss Babs could be a top glamor personality. She has the voice and looks. But she would have to come on with more flash, drop some of the folksy material and emphasize her own part of the act so it is less the cozy twosome it now is. Neumann does a clever novelty, color, to spell Miss Babs, and this contribution should be the limit of his foreground activity. The act can go one of two ways for American appearances. At present it is ideal for less sophisticated spots. If Miss Babs, currently under contract to Dot Records, were given more glamor and came on bigger, she could be a top headline act anywhere.

Freddy Martin opens the show with a fine four-minute Gershwin medley. Show is in for two weeks, with Guy Lombardo taking over Oct. 8. Powe.

El Morocco, Montreal

Montreal, Sept. 27.

Jack Carter, Teal Joy, Granada Dancers (6), Wally Aspell, Nick Martin Orch (7), Three Keys with Ann Summers; $1.50 cover.

Nothing does biz in a nitery such as El Morocco as a comic best described as a "talker." And Jack Carter, currently headlining for 10 days, is that kind of comedian. Carter is making his first Montreal appearance in almost a decade but few have forgotten this hep performer. It's a socko offering and boniface Peter van der North should set up new house records.

On night caught, Carter had the patrons from his first song satire "Simple Life" right through a fast series of dialect stories, ringside patter and impresh bits until final begoff. Carter is one of the few comics with material that is adjustable to the room and city where he is playing. His local references are dropped in neatly and seldom forced, giving him both a topical and personal touch that appeals strongly. Enthusiasm to please keeps tempo at top level; even the injection of material an the indigo side gets by because of his smash delivery.

Preceeding Carter is the dancing of the Granada group whose two brief appearances draw salvos. Dancers do both flamenco and folk routines from Spain and both choreography and talent put them well above usual act of this kind. Songstress Teal Joy of Japanese extraction offers a songalog that, with few exceptions, is strictly American in style and selection. Exceptions are her interp, in Japanese, of "Deed I Do," which garners plaudits, and a reprise of that evergreen cornball, "Sorrento." Femme has a pleasant way with a song, is attractive and handsomely gowned.

Emcee Wally Aspell keeps show moving and belts out several songs effectively. Nick Martin's band grages the bandstand of this refurbished 500-seater with ease and is spelled between shows by the Three Keys with Ann Summers on vocals. Newt.

Riverside, Reno

Reno, Sept. 24.

Dunninger, Sandu Scott, Starlets (8), Bill Clifford Orch (10); $2 minimum.

For the current show, the Riverside management brings a master mentalist-magician to the theatre-restaurant stage in the person of Dunninger, billed as the "best since Houdini," and in a fast 25 minutes before the spot he proves the claim.

Balancing the one-hour show is the femme appeal of Sandu Scott, debuting to a better-than-average reception on the Reno nitery circuit.

Dunninger, fast with ad libs and ringside patter, defies detection with such demonstrations as pulling a glass of water from a cloth bag—previously inspected and determined empty—while two patrons from ringside hold his wrists.

Noting he doesn't read minds—"they're too hard to locate"—the skillful mentalist picks dates, numbers, etc., and confirms auditor's thoughts with no delays. His uncanny ability he calls "tuning in." To cap his upstaging, Dunninger has four patrons think of four numbers. He then writes the total on a slate. Patrons verify the numbers, and cerifies the pre-written total—which is correct. With cards used in the mentalist process, he is equally adroit.

Perfect warmer is blonde, shapely and talented Sandu Scott, in a first Reno date. She rates heavy with husky and always-in-command voice. Her belting shows she knows her way around a tune. Most effective is a "Mississippi Melody" with Old South titles such as "Robert E. Lee."

Miss Scott shows good emoting and voice on "Volare" and a calypso offering. Her reception rates a playback.

Bracketing show are the Starlets in a double holdover from last book. Ably backing the show is the Bill Clifford orch. Double frame ends Oct. 8. Long.

Jose Greco & Co. (18), Ben Arden Orch (10); $2 cover, $2.50 Saturdays.

Jose Greco's fourthh Empire Room invasion reaffirms his hold on the cabaret culturists. Finer points of flamenco dance may elude the average tabler, but not the flavor and color stomped out with castanets a-clack and set off by vivid costuming that's customary with this company. Show caught (25) played to capacity for nifty reaction.

Act is well-paced for the 50-minute route and neatly balanced between ensemble and solo footwork. For all the familiar heelclomping, it seemed the most appeal attached to the Ravel "Bolero" danced in classic ballet style, and a series of amusing Spanish folk dances light on the hooves. Troupe is freshly choreographed for the most part, though the popular horse-training number is retained and brings the usual hefty mitting.

Ben Arden orch is augmented by a flamenco singer and four Greco instrumentalists, including Roger Machado, company's musical director, at the piano. Backing from all hands is first-rate. Pit.

Amato's Supper Club

Portland, Ore., Sept. 23.

Ella Mae Morse, Harry Gillum Orch (4), The Dualtones (2); no minimum or cover.

Biz has been on the upbeat at this main stem nitery since relighting six weeks ago with a new interior, format and policy. Vaudev setup was junked along with cover charge in favor of one solid act sans gate tab.

Ella Mae Morse is back in town after an absence of three years. Local fave has a nifty 25 minute stint that should bring customers in droves. Lusty voiced gal slammed out some blues, old standards, and her platter stuff for solid returns. Tall, stacked, and nicely gowned Miss Morse is relaxed and works easily throughout. She uses no gimmicks but relies on talent. Slow ballad stuff should be held to a minimum as rhythm and blues get best mitting. She begs off with "The Whole World In His Hands."

Harry Gillum's house crew (4) plays a good show background and gets the customers on their feet for dancing seshes. The Dualtones offer continuous entertainment in the lounge. Prof. Backwards opens Oct. 3. Feve.

Desert Inn, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Sept. 23.

Betty Grable, Bob Williams, Ted & Maria Morca, Art Johnson, Carlton Hayes Orch (14); production numbers staged by Donn Arden; arrangements by Phil Moody; Lyrics by Pony Sherrell; $3 minimum.

Betty Grable brings her nostalgic musical turn back into the Painted Desert Room where it's sure to do healthy business even during this so-called slow season. The act is basically the same as she had here before, but a dandy new burlesque number has been added as a finale (in which Miss Grable is burly queen "Bumpsy Daisy"), making the whole offering a fast-moving, pleasant romp. Star revives songs and dances from her film clicks, and gets solid backing from a quartet of virile lads in the chirp and terp department—Jim Hodge, Bobby Navarro, John Drexel, and Harry Nofel.

Bob Williams, a local fave, brings his uncooperative dogs in for more sustained yocks. It's an unusual and very funny act.

Two new Donn Arden production numbers, "Malumbo," and "Autumn Nocturne," featuring the flashy flamenco dancing of Ted & Maria Morca, and the robust singing of Art Johnson balance the bill with classy flair. Carlton Hayes orch capably provides the notes for the show, skedded for four frames. Duke.

Crescendo, Houston

Houston, Sept. 24.

Carmen D'Oro, Jose Ortiz Orch (5); private club; no cover or minimum.

Tiny Latin Carmen D'Oro, formerly a singer and dancer with the Xavier Cugat troupe, pulls top applause thrushing her seven-number, 22-minute stint at the Club Crescendo.

Apparently paired from the same mold as Abbe Lane, she sings sultry, sweet and sometimes swings for the bleachers. However, the shapely stylist is best when she belts 'em. Miss D'Oro runs through "Let Me Sing Away Your Blues," "Come Closer to Me," "Rock and Rollie," "Leave It to Love," "Ay, Ay, Ay," then encores with "In Other Words" and "Just One of Those Things."

The latter was never done before as Miss D'Oro does it. To a torrid tempo she unsnaps the bottom of her ankle-length sheath dress for better movement, then sings and dances to the Latin beat. The movement is there, only the hula hoop is missing. It's a great number to quit on, as she left both the front and back rows panting. The act is a treat for the eyes as well as the ears.

The Jose Ortiz house orch carries the balance of the 45-minute show in its usual fine manner. Ortiz couldn't be busier if he were training a dog act and a flea circus at the same time. He batons the band, handles the mike, emcees the show, does the booking and manages the club.

Miss D'Oro is at this spot through Oct. 7, and the only average opening house should pick up when the males pass the word around. Skip.

Hotel Muehlebach, K. C.

Kansas City, Sept. 26.

Monique Van Vooren, Larry Green Orch (8); $1-$1.50 cover.

The Terrace Grill is on a one-act policy for this session, and it is for a single week, in contrast to the usual fortnight run. While it is a short run and a single, the room has comparatively a lot in Monique Van Vooren, making her first appearance in these parts.

Casing her lush figure in a chic white satin creation and thrushing her list of songs in deep-throated fashion, she proves every bit as continental as the ads lead the customers to believe and polishes off 40 minutes as if it were naught. The room was steadily appreciative, though scarcely robust in applause.

While Mlle. Van Vooren is certainly tres continental, she is also tres risque, although she handles this segment of material with as much taste as can be managed for that sort of thing. The lyrics are clever, if suggestive, and go as near as possible to borderline without dripping over. They're intermixed with a number of straight songs, and the combo adds up to a pleasant show.

Much is made of her role in "Gigi," which is coming up here shortly, and she naturally leads off with "The Night They Invented Champagne," while waiters pour the stuff for ringsiders. She also has "Autumn Concerto," "That's Only for Americans" and "Thank Heaven for Little Boys," also from "Gigi." The special songs, "Get Him on the Second Time Around," "Maria the Mink" and "I Want More," register as well. She sings naturally in French, well in English, although the French is a doubtful asset in these parts, and an effort to get the customers to sing with her to a Gallic medley goes limp for want of linguistic togetherness. She'll be followed by Rowan & Martin Oct. 3 for two weeks. Quin.

Barclay Motel, Toronto

Toronto, Sept. 23.

The Hi-Lites (3), Bobby Brandt, Jimmy O'Shaunecy, Craig Daye Dancers (5), Jimmy Amaro Orch (8); $1.25 cover.

It's a toss-up on customer kudos between the Hi-Lites, singing male trio, and Bobby Brandt, the meticulous tap dancer, for a 65-minute routine that Al Siegel has assembled since he took over the Barclay Hotel. That ina puts Toronto on the North American map as a city that needed nightlife. It's evident in current two-a-night biz that is resulting in turnaways.

On his first visit to Canada, Brandt is on with swift tap dancing complete with spins and pirouettes, modernized softshoe routine to a terrific "Hot Canary" in slow tempo. For that up-to-date dance styling, Brandt had an audience in vociferous applause when caught.

Ditto were the Hi-Lites, who open with a bouncy "Smile," switch to a slow tempo for "Temptation" and into a terrific finale with "Hands," with enthusiastic audience participation of handclapping. Consisting of a blonde, brunet and redhead, the Hi-Lites end their second set with a medley of songs set in Paris, another medley of Negro spirituals, a rousing "Carolina in the Morning," donning strawhats and doing stick drills, and a great finale in "Darktown Strutters Ball." Earl Parnes has done the song arrangements.

With Jimmy O'Shaunecy held over as emcee, plus the Craig Daye Dangers, the medico-trained, Buffalo-born baritone is excellent in his "Witchcraft" and "Old Black Magic" to the gyrations of the permanent line, plus his solo effects and fine voice control on bouncy "Why Sould I Care" and "My Funny Valentine."

On holdovers and introduction of new acts, Al Siegel has started a needed hypo in this city, plus his current plans to punch out the back wall of the Barclay and eliminate a bar, this to increase his spot's ability to handle 450 dinner-dancers instead of the present 150. McStay.

Mister Kelly's, Chi

Chicago, Sept. 23.

Mort Sahl, Dodo Greene, Marx-Frigo Trio; $1 cover, $2.50 beverage minimum.

Mort Sahl practices the democratic gospel of free expression. The cultists—and lotsa would-be iconoclasts—prove ready disciples, punctuating their rapt attention with beaucoup giggles and yocks—the degree of audible reaction depending on Sahl's pungency and the depth of outfront ken.

Sahl's third reprise at this popular intimery finds him not one whit off his previous form. He is shaking as many rigid institutions and pricking as many sacred cows as ever. At the opener (22), he pointed to the ayem gazettes which bannered the Sherm Adams resignation and needled, "I finally got him out of office!" On another tack, "We're sending over Abe Burrows to rewrite the French government." And so on, over a topical range that gamuts from tv and his new film to Lebanon and the Chevy Impala. The subtleties and esoterica that limit his exposure at the same time cement him with the cerebrals, and thus invest him with one of the strongest identities on the bistro circuit. Sahl is biting without being bitter—he seems to understand he's paid to make 'em laugh as well as think.

Sepia thrush Dodo Greene is a finger-snapping belter who plies lotsa body English and obscure grimacing through a catalog of evergreens. Conspicuous sin of the act it that it's utterly out of the Kelly's character, and unsuited for my offbeat smallery. Her husky pipes and sensuous manner are okay on fragmented carbons of Satchmo and Roberta Sherwood, but they're not concealing enough when Miss Greene has just herself to offer. Restive tablers were indifferent, and then some, when the turn stretched to 30 minutes. Marx & Frigo Trio capably backstop. Show's in for three frames, with June Christy next on Oct. 13. Pit.

Washington, Sept. 26.

Georgia Gibbs, Al Donahue Orch; $2 cover.

Georgia Gibbs was a late choice to open the Shoreham Hotel's Blue Room, favorite nitery of a local society which is not especially keen about night clubbing. But it was obvious on opening night that Allan Bralove had chosen well for the attractive room which is also a hangout for politicians and fat lobbyists with fat expense accounts.

Backed up with a strong orch Miss Gibbs glitters with personality and energy. She proves the point that she can put across a wide variety of songs, sweet, hot, rock 'n' roll and something to swing the hula hoop to.

She winds up her 13-number act with "Rock-a-Bye Your Baby," belted like it should be belted, and her large audience gives her loud acceptance. It is her best number, and it must please Jolson fans to know there is a singer around who can do so much with the great song.

For her one-nightly appearance during her nine days here, she makes no costume change and uses only one prop—the fanciest sparkling hula hoop you ever saw. She rotates it around her middle while singing her latest recording hope, "The Hula Hoop Song."

Otherwise, she employs no stunts. She just sings songs, choosing, among others, "I Love Everybody," "Nel Blu Dipinto Di Blu" (in both English and Italian), "Ballin' the Jack," and some of her familiars, like "Tweedle Dee," "Kiss of Fire," etc.

Miss Gibbs was a substitute for Marguerite Piazza, who cancelled for a two-week opener at the Waldorf-Astoria after Edith Piaf, who had the Starlight Roof booking, was injured in an auto accident in France. The Shoreham's Bralove didn't argue with Miss Piazza (he and her agent had signed a contract), but obtained Miss Gibbs.

Al Donahue and his orch play for her and for dancing, with full brass reed and rhythm sections that are pleasing to hear.

Following Miss Gibbs into the Blue Room will be Vaughn Monroe, the Ziminez-Vargas Ballet Espanol, Lilo and Nelson Eddy with Gale Sherwood, in that order. Carp.

Slate Bros., L. A.

Los Angeles, Sept. 23.

Gene Baylos, Duke Hazlett, Tommy Gumina; $1 cover.

In Gene Baylos, the Slate Bros. have a winner, a swinger, a comic whose words may not be remembered but only because perpetual laughter may prevent all of them from being heard. With double-talk, a few jabs and a barrel of ad-libs, the comedian should keep the La Cienega nitery doing solid business for the next four to six weeks.

Baylos knows what to do with his audience, whether it's a Kansas City conventioneer in the back or cigar-smoking Milton Berle in front. His delivery is fast, well seasoned with takeoffs from life with father and the corner tailor. His second show on opening night—a frenzied 45 minutes long—brought greatest returns with his off-the-cuff introing of Hollywood celebs, not all of whom were familiar to him making, of course, for even more fun.

Duke Hazlett continues to please with unerring style and sound, of Sinatra, with a little Dean Martin thrown in for good measure. The vocalist and accordionist Tommy Gumina—whose technique and feeling are considerable—round out an effective show. Ron.

Ye Little Club, B. H.

Los Angeles, Sept. 24.

Marshall Edson and Michael Garth have a proclivity for giving young talent a chance in their Beverly Hills Nitery, Ye Little Club, and that's to be commended. Not always, however, is the talent completely prepared for the ordeal, and in the case of Joan Blackman, who opened Wednesday (24) night, the personality and looks are there, the voice is more than pleasant; but an individuality to set her apart while onstage would be welcome.

Miss Blackman's innate enthusiasm is obvious, and it peeks through easily when she concentrates on beat rather than blues.

Miss Blackman, who at one time was under contract to Hecht-Hill-Lancaster and just completed a role in "Great Day for a Hanging" at Columbia, is booked for two weeks with options. Joe Felix and Roger Nichols back up nicely on piano and bass. Ron.

Chez Paree, Chi

Chicago, Sept. 25.

Nat Cole (4), Henny Youngman, Chez Adorables (6), George Cook Orch (12); $4 minimum, $1.95 cover at dinner show only.

Whatever the ledger shows when the current layout departs, the Chez bonifaces won't have to dodge any brickbats. This one is clicko showcasing. If Nat Cole isn't quite the draw of previous playdates at the Chi flagship, chalk it up to the general diminuendo of the big cafes, for the stylistic warbler is as smooth, generous and showmanly as ever.

Because of all the values he brings to a lyric, the Cole chemistry is a unique and very moving nitery experience. Grade him A-plus on charm and poise, but inevitably the act predicates on a tasteful catalog sagely stacked, and almost invariably singer and song enhance each other. Star is a down-to-business labor-of-love performer, doing only what comes naturally for 20 or so tunes including lotsa closely identified items such as "Mona Lisa," "Too Young," "I Am in Love" for dandy reaction all the way. Singer's savvy trio supplements George Cook's house band, which backs adequately in spots.

Henny Youngman's don't-disturb-a-good-thing philosophy is still paying off for plenty of rises out front. Comic's rapid one-liner delivery bubbles with vintage gags, but the Youngman flair as he leapfrogs 'em with throwaway lyrics and whimsical fiddling effectively overcomes any auditor resistance.

Chez Adorables (6) are slotted twice for good orb appeal. McGuire Sisters and Dave Barry move in Oct. 12. Pit.

Hotel Roosevelt, N. O.

New Orleans, Sept. 26.

Jack Durant, Shepherd Sisters (3), Bobby Blanque, Leon Kelner Orch (12); $2.50 minimum.

Jack Durant turns in the same click brand of comedy no matter what his place on the bill. This time he heads the show in this swank nocturnal rendezvous. This is the best place for him since even the best of them find it difficult to follow him. From the moment he flipflops to land with a thud on his back, his stuff is just as sudden and reverberating.

Durant has played this spot before and knows how to slant his routine for its clientele. He sets up a continuous obligato of belly laughs. Durant is one of the wiser comics in that he freshens his material for each outing here and it pays off in solid returns.

Comic sings a little, sometimes mimicking other personalities, satirizes such people as Clark Gable. Primarily, he is a storyteller with a glib line of jokes that get a good laugh-per-minute rating. He stayed on for over half an hour opening night and tableholders stayed with him all the way.

Teeing off acts are the Shepherd Sisters, three young blonde lookers who turn in a solid harmony performance. Gals blend voices nicely on ballads set to rock 'n' roll beats and other tunes including "Dream," "By The Light Of The Silvery Moon," "Alone," "Heart And Soul" and "Lullaby Of Broadway."

Bobby Blanque, band vocalist, is also featured in the show. He's got a capable delivery, voice registers nicely and projection is good. Nets nice hand.

Leon Kelner and his crew play it rhythmic and sweet and keep floor crowded during the dance sessions. Their contribution to show, "Jazz Me Blues," won them share of evening's palm pounding. Liuz.

Black Orchid, Chi

Chicago, Sept. 26.

Jonathan Winters, Randy Sparks, Joe Parnello Trio; $1.50 cover.

Jonathan Winters' debut here last February seems to have been a pulse-feeler. He's improvising this stand and has given his stuff more bite, with one result that comic's onstage longer, his teeoff (26) paced to 40 minutes. Turn could be tightened (and probably will), though looseness at outing caught didn't noticeably flaw audience rapport. House was with him all the way for solid reaction.

Uniform yocking went for his staples—the pointer dog, the amateur show and old prison pic takeoffs, and the wagon train party. Laughs obtain as much for Winters' vocal effects and puss mobility as for the penetrating verbiage, and it's the sound-duplicating feats, in fact, that effectively rescue him when he rambles himself into a corner. Impromptu stuff includes item-culling from a news mag, a la the mode for intimery satirists. It's something comic could develop for hefty payoff.

Randy Sparks is a young folksinger with okay piping and guitaring, but in need of some hallmarking to set him apart from the field. His boyishness is an asset, and tablers generally glommed a catalog that included the Belafonte-identified "Man Plaba." Singer is advised not to stray, however. His one quasi-commercial item sent the customers back to their chops.

Stan Kenton Orch (18), Harry Edison Quintet; $2.50 minimum.

Stan Kenton blew into Birdland week before last for a two-week stay that's sure to keep the room jammed. Although his big band (10 brass, five reed, bass, drums and maestro's piano) are bunched up on the postage-stamp podium, there's still enough room for it to whip up a musical storm that turns the kiddies who dig Kenton into a happy lot.

Kenton, one of the foremost of progressive jazz purveyors in the big band idiom seems to have moved "in" since his last gig here. It's not that Kenton has stopped experimenting, it's just that he seems to be working out a musical pattern with a broader appeal.

Opening night set was marred somewhat by the fact that the band was going over on two simultaneous remotes (NBC and Mutual). The intros went to the dialers and not the tablers and some of the mikes were geared for the airwaves instead of the room. Despite this "real drag," as Kenton put it, the crew came across with an exciting musical drive.

Kenton played a large part in the proceedings by taking over the keyboard for some solid licks. His work at the upright was a smoothly polished affair that keyed the rest of the troupe. For the most part it's a youthful crew sparked by a solid brass team.

Things quiet down a bit when the band takes a break to make room for the Harry Edison Quintet. It's a swinging combo that fits easily into the Birdland groove. Gros.

Bradford Roof, Boston

Rudy Vallee, Sammy Eisen Orch (6); $2.50 minimum.

In a nostalgic turn, updated with fresh bits and slick patter, Rudy Vallee opens the refurbished Bradford Roof right across the street from the Metropolitan Theatre where many years back he was almost hit with a grapefruit while rendering "Give Me Something To Remember You By." He nods back at nostalgia in the number to big opening night aud of partyites.

Format of room has changed here with one name to be featured as entire show and Valle figures to be the blockbuster booking in a prodigal's return to the Yankeeland room he has played consistently over the years. He gives convincing demonstration by filling the Bradford's big roofgarden to near capacity. Opening night his more than 75-minute repertoire won big salvos from femme-loaded aud and he came through with appeal in delivery of well-composed act that combos jokes, songs and current events in the right proportion, with accent on comedy.

Vallee, working to a noisy aud in opener, quickly asserts stage authority and repartee shots with ringsiders adds zest. Opening with "Lydia," he segues to "As Time Goes By" straight and with interpolations and does a dramatic "Casey at the Bat" to music. He works in sharp one-liners. His satire is on the ribald side, but in perfect tune for the aud whether it be about aging processes or femme perversities or his crooning days. Switching, he does new "Talk to Me," which he co-authored, with the ever familiar Vallee pipes perking in good style. He makes a production number out of "There's Nothing Like a Dame," wearing sailor hat, and Sammy Eisen's Orch dons the gob tops.

High spot of Vallee's songalog is rendering of "Life Is Just a Bowl of Cherries" as himself, then as Ray Bolger, Eugene Howard and Willie Howard. Femmes of the over-30 group break into spontaneous applause when he gives with "Miss You" and "A Little Kiss Each Morning."

Sammy Eisen and his orch cut the show and smooth dance sets. Al Taxier is boniface at the refurbished room, which is all in pristine white, and with the drapes off the windows affords a neon sky view of Boston environs. This show holds through Oct. 7. Betty Kean & Lew Parker open Oct. 8 for two weeks. Gelt.

Town Casino, Buffalo

Buffalo, Sept. 26.

"Curtain Going Up," with The Vagabonds, Mel Leonard, Lenny Page, Moe Balsom Orch (9); $1.50 minimum, 50c cover.

Harry Altman is opening the local night club season by parlaying more than a decade of nitery operational savvy and a new house production gambit against uncertain biz conditions, especially in the afterdark show spots. After shuttering the Casino last April with heated charges regarding overpriced feature acts and public indifference, he has bought out his former partner Harry Wallens and is going it alone this season with a valiant try at awakening the area public to the value and desirability of live stage entertainment.

New policy of the house is based on proclaimed slogan of giving the public the utmost for its dollar. In addition to regular service in the main auditorium, a new "Arizona Chuck Wagon" food bar has been installed at the front of the building, cased in glass, visible from the street and staffed by white-uniformed chefs. Here a full self-service dinner is available with chicken, prime ribs and all the fixings and an "eat as much as you want" slogan for $2.35. Immediately adjoining is a new "satellite" dining room where the Chuck Wagon dinner may be consumed without service charges and without any cover or minimum. This is apart from the show area and intended for diners only. If preferred, the Chuck Wagon fare may be taken into the main auditorium where service is available, together with a minimum and entertainment charge. This is an innovation hereabouts for this type of nitery and brings the tab down to any desired eating and/or entertainment level.

Opening show puts strong emphasis on house production idea. Altman has brought in a company of 35 under the producing and staging hand of David Bines, who handled special Palace (N.Y.) productions several seasons ago and more recently has been in charge of entertainment at Schroon Lake Manor. This show features five production scenes marked by some outstanding precision work by the entire ensemble who obviously are conditioned to working as a unit. Costumes and voices are above average and the choreography moves off in fast and striking patterns. Myron Roman (also ex-Palace) has been imported as guest conductor and does a sharp job in synchronizing the house orch with the show.

For the opening, the Vagabonds are underscored and hit a new laugh high in next-to-closing. Their zany instrumentation and clowning are in the best vein of this sort of offering and as usual they work it up to rousing returns. Comedy is strictly horseplay and pratfall, but the traditional kick in the pants never got heavier returns than with these dedicated careerists to the harum-scarum, wacky metier.

Mel Leonard, making a first nitery appearance following a successful stint as banquet entertainer, has some quiet, new gags and stories which are surprisingly effective in this milieu. Ed Dumont and Mary Gavin are standout in the vocal department, the Gavin girl being a cute replica of the Widow Todd with voice, as she demonstrates in her well projected bit of "Show Me" from "Fair Lady."

Lenny Page, perennial emcee of the Casino, this year has taken over the executive managership and is acting as general majordomo of the enterprise. Altman plans to follow this one with an entirely new production to be called "Let's Follow the Girls," featuring Domenico ("Volare") Modugno. Show biz entrepreneurs will be watching closely to see if and how the Casino's new policy pays off at this crossroads for the nitery aficionados north and south of the border. Burt.

365 Club, San Francisco

San Francisco, Sept. 25.

Mel Torme, Lili St. Cyr, Moro-Landis Dancers (10) with Bill Carey, Bill Weir Orch (8); $1-$1.50 cover.

Mel Torme, though somewhat handicapped by band's draggy tempo, is a big click paired with Lili St. Cyr in swift-paced 50-minute show.

Torme comes on strongly with "Nel Blu Dipinto di Blu," following his intro, knocks out a fine "Wrong Time, Wrong Place" (to bass accompaniment), a little "Shadrach," kids "Autumn Leaves" for a couple of minutes and then sings it straight and beautifully. He tops himself with "Guys and Dolls," sits down to a stage piano and plays and sings "Back in Your Own Backyard" and "Bye Bye Blackbird" and winds up 25-minute stint by doing a drum solo on "Lover."

Torme has an excellent voice, wonderful diction—no mushmouth, he — and lots of empathy with crowd, which liked him immensely.

Miss St. Cyr, held over until Wednesday (1), does her own special "Night in Tangiers," a terrific business-builder even though it gets little applause.

Moro-Landis Dancers hoof nicely in opening medley of New York songs and close show with a standard collegiate football number. Bill Carey's a pleasant singing emcee. Bill Weir orch isn't up to snuff. Stef.

Queen Elizabeth, Mont'l

Montreal, Sept. 24.

Jaye P. Morgan with Morgan Bros. (4), Don Warner Orch (11), Louis Pannet Trio; $2.50-$3 cover.

Jaye P. Morgan is the first blonde belter to play the elegant Salle Bonaventure of the Hilton-operated Queen Elizabeth Hotel and she is a refreshing and aggressive change. Supported by her four brothers who play, sing and dance with her, Miss Morgan offers one of the most varied programs seen around this part of the circuit for quite a while. Diversity is backed with okay talent and a desire to please, but the very nature of the potpourri, although bound to satisfy all tastes, takes some of the edge off overall effectiveness.

On night caught, group seemed to be trying everything in their book, moving from a click arrangement of "My Baby Just Cares For Me" in almost ballad rhythm to a rousing costume-change item, "Yes, Indeed." Except for a breather when the freres take over to do a group of spirituals and give Miss Morgan a chance to switch gowns, femme is very much in evidence at all times. They refrain from unnecessary gabbing during stint and only bring in a brief mention of their platter hits when they intro "Stardust," their new Victor waxing.

Act has solid potential for all visual mediums; they have youth and enthusiasm on their side but more care in coordinating their act to fit the medium or room they are working in would boost appeal.

The new orch under Don Warner makes for pleasant listening and hoofing but seems rather lethargic after the Denny Vaughan band. Vaughan is slated for a return to the Salle Bonaventure in November. Miss Morgan & Co. are in until Oct. 4 with Nelson Eddy to follow Oct. 6 and French chirper Jacqueline Francois set for Oct. 27. Newt.

Jefferson, St. Louis

St. Louis, Sept. 23.

Gene Austin, Johnny O'Brien, Johnny Polzin Orch (7); $1.50-$2 cover.

The Sheraton-Jefferson's Boulevard Room, minus floorshows for several years, made a happy choice of talent for its reentry into the entertainment department — veteran crooner Gene Austin. Austin's pipes have hardly changed at all since he first wowed 'em back in "the good old days," and he makes a nice, easygoing session of it up there on stage.

Along with "My Blue Heaven" and some perennials penned by Austin himself, he takes a rapid-fire tour down yesteryear's melody lane and coaxes the audience to sing along with him on the more familiar ditties. Austin is engaging in the story-telling department, too, and he makes good use of the informal patter between songs.

Harmonicomic Johnny O'Brien, who opens the show, builds up the yocks all the way with a folksy, drawling roundup of anecdotes that get to the customers' funny-bones and stay there. He's a whiz on that harmonica, too, and wraps up things with a batch of musical fireworks.

Johnny Polzin's local crew, a smooth, danceable outfit that cuts a good show, will be on the bandstand probably throughout the season. Next floor show attraction: Denise Lor and Jack Durant, opening Oct. 3. Godd.

Interlude, Hollywood

Hollywood, Sept. 23.

Earl Grant, Leo DeLyon, Morty Jacobs Trio; $1 cover, 2-drink minimum.

Leo DeLyon, a name that's bound to draw snickers on the Strip, has taken over second spot to Earl Grant at the Interlude and is moving downstairs for a show-a-night with Frances Faye at the Crescendo, besides. That he can whistle "Swanee River" and hum "Humoresque" at one and the same time is no mean talent, and, everything he does, it's this bit of variety that scores biggest.

As a comedian, DeLyon makes effective use of a voice that comically ranges from falsetto to bass. His material is sometimes good, sometimes so-so, but his opening show was no fair test because the meager crowd—typical of a slow Tuesday night—would have done in the best of comedic talents. In his 25-minute Interlude turn, DeLyon tinkles a pleasant-sounding piano in backing himself and receives intermittent help from the fine Morty Jacobs Trio, with trio also doing well on its own.

DeLyon is booked for three-and-a-half weeks, with Grant and his smooth style remaining until January. Ron.

CORINNE CALVET

Songs
25 Mins.
Le Cupidon, N. Y.

Corinne Calvet, the Gallic actress imported by Paramount, is now essaying a tour of the nitery circuits. Her path has been made a bit easier not only by the near perpetual vogue for French chanteuses who happen to be pretty and look sexy, but by the current trend to singing thesps who need no great singing voice to get by. For example "My Fair Lady" and "Gigi" are loaded with singers who do not sing. Marlene Dietrich has been getting by with an amelodic set of pipes for years. There are others too.

While Miss Calvet's voice is not keenly developed, her personality is. She's bright and cheerful and has a vivid personality which makes her excursions around the ringside a pleasurable event for the table occupants.

Another plus is her going along with familiar French tunes which seem to supply the melody by themselves. These familiars include "La Seine," "Under Paris Skies," "Autumn Leaves" and a few that aren't familiar but listenable. Her excursions into special material (en Anglais) do not come off as well.

Sartorially, Mlle. Calvet clicks handsomely. She makes her entrance in a slinky sequined tight-fitted trouser outfit, and thence goes into a kiosk-like construction, indigenous to the Paris scene, where she transforms into a tasteful gown.

Miss Calvet is still on the once-around count. By the time she makes the full circle of cafes, she should iron out the kinks in her turn which should make the subsequent bookings easier.

The Ish Ugardi Trio backs effectively in this room presided over by Robert who supervises all the details from back to front with style and class. Jose.

Recent entry into the chant-foursome slot, the Stereos have a slickness that points to clicko training and plenty work on sound routines. Group wisely limits stint to three or four items with fine arrangements, such as "76 Trombones," "You Are My Destiny," "Saints Go Marching In" and a spiritual "Joshua." Showing need of fixing are the gab bits, and the general staging where there is too much carboning of billtopping chant groups, particularly in visual slot.

Development of showmanship savvy should proceed with speed since the boys exhibit a tendency, possibly without realizing it, to condescension in working to the tables. Trimming and tightening would make this a socko item for all sight and sound media. Gorm.

RAFAEL RUIZ & DANCERS (6)

Dances
24 Mins.
Gatineau, Ottawa

Rafael Ruiz is a young (19) man with click terp ability showing definite evidence of training and routining in ballet and Latin slots. Boy's solos are spiked heavily with both terp types, ballet and heel-hammering sharing use fairly equally. But while Ruiz is an able dancer, the five femmes he surrounds himself with are lacking in ability, routining and coordination and costuming is only adequate.

Should Ruiz replace them with even two or three capable of enough Latin steps to back his items, the stint could ride higher. Now, it's flabby. Gorm.

House Reviews

Roxy, N. Y.

With this show, the Roxy returns to the land of the living (entertainment, that is). House was relinquished by the Skouras interests and taken over by a syndicate headed by Robert C. Rothafel, who was managing director under its previous ownership. The theatre ripped out the CineMiracle installation restored the house to its former capacity and its previous format, with the exception that it now has a regulation stage instead of an ice rink.

Rothafel faces a lot of problems with this kind of policy. Inasmuch as it will be difficult to get headliners, now accustomed to niteries, to do four shows daily, something different had to be evolved. Rothafel is apparently aiming for an intimate brand of entertainment which will showcase some pleasant talents and fresh faces. Production carried out by eight boys and an equal number of girls aims for warm and colorful format with song and dance predominating, although it's evident that these acts will be alternated with occasional novelties.

The opening show achieves a statement of its aims. Both the stage and the performers are comparative strangers to each other, but it is evident that with familiarity, the desired brand of entertainment will result.

Topper on this display is Jennie Smith, who has disked for RCA Victor and now Columbia. Pleasant voiced and with a style easily assimilated, she shows an ease of delivery and a disarming manner which brings this huge house down to her proportions. In a batch of numbers including "Everybody Loves a Lover" and a set of standards, Miss Smith wraps up the house easily.

Also in the singing vein, but with comedy overtones, Evelyn Page does a couple of delightful laments to some good surrounding production. The first, mourns the passing of solid dancing for choreography, and there are times when she not only has a point but makes the proposition comedically clear. Her solo opus, "100 Ways to Lose a Man," puts her over excellently.

The John La Salle Quartet serves a multiple function on this show. Aside from working the production, the three boys and a girl knock out some avante-garde rhythmics, more suitable for the small smoke-filled rooms than for a house that gets every shade of musical opinion. Rendition of "Night We Called It a Day" is a rather showy piece with complicated rhythms and overly ornate figurations, hard to follow and extremely wearing under these conditions. Reception to "Clementine" to a production bit immediately afterward should indicate their sticking to elementals.

The varied house numbers presents a variety of moods. Bulk are gay and there's a bow to a more modern bit of choreography in its deception of "Autumn Leaves." Costuming by Winniford Morton shows imagination; the sets by Bruno Maine are similarly striking and the musical direction of Bob Boucher, back in his accustomed spot onstage, helps create a smooth show. The Ray Frost and Kenny Springer choreography also helps the cause. It will take a show or two to break in the crew, but eventually Rothafel should evolve a consistantly winning stageshow style. Jose.

Prince of Wales, London

London, Sept. 23.

Jewel & Warriss, The Kalin Twins (2), The Mudlarks (3), Florian Zabach, Ron Parry, Jimmy Gay, The Dunjas (5), Alexander's Wonder Dog Revue, Granger's Puppets (2), Harold Collins Orch.

Originally there were to have been three vocal acts at the top of this layout, but Michael Holliday was taken ill on opening night and had to miss his West End debut. Jewel & Warriss, top-ranking local comedy act, currently riding high with their own commercial tv show, took over the headline spot at short notice. In the circumstances, it is understandable that they did not have adequate time to ready some new material, but it strained audience loyalty to find that the bulk of their show was very similar to their previous week's video act on the Palladium bill. Nevertheless, it evoked an adequate response and earned quite a few yocks.

The Kalin Twins, a fresh-looking pair of youngsters making their London stage bow, again demonstrated the success which can be achieved by disk stars in vaudeville. They are at their best when doing beat numbers like "Don't Care If I Die," but also show up nicely with a softer rendition of "Too Young." An oldtime medley with modern arrangements makes a diverting contrast, but "Dream of Me," which the twins have just recorded in Britain, is a sentimental ballad not entirely matching their talents. Naturally, they save their hit number, "When," as their closer, enabling them to bow off in fine style.

The other vocal act is a British trio, the Mudlarks, who are at their best in the rock 'n' roll idiom. They're a lively and vivacious group who have developed a fine and vigorous harmony style. Typical items from their songalog are "Rock Around the Clock," "The Book of Love" and "Don't Gamble With Love," while "I Didn't Know the Gun Was Loaded" makes a contrasting specialty.

A newcomer to the London scene is Florian Zabach (who is also doubling in Savoy cabaret) and he easily provides the best act on the bill. His expressive use of the violin is clearly demonstrated in a range of numbers from the classics to pop ballads. He has a warm and friendly personality which readily projects, although his patter is occasionally dated.

Ron Parry is a comedian with a different gimmick—he's able to throw his voice in a way which allows him to do a sort of ventriloquial act without the aid of a dummy. By this technique he carries on highly amusing two-way conversations. Jimmy Gay's type of humor is more straightforward, but he scores with his sharp, penetrating material. The Dunjas, a quintet of Danish youths, are energetic if conventional acrobats; Alexander's Wonder Dog Revue features a well-trained team of performing canines; and the Grangers have a typical lineup of performing puppets. Show, which is in for two weeks, is adequately backed by the Harold Collins orch. Myro.

Olympia, Paris

Paris, Sept. 30.

The Platters (5), Marcel Amont, George Reich's "Ballets HOlympia," Lucette Raillat, Jean-Marie Proslier, Oliveras, Marie-Josee Neuville, Warren, Devine & Sparks, Suzanne Gabriello; $4 top.

Bruno Coquatrix has done more than his share to put vaudeville back on the map in France. Taking over the second-run boulevard pix house, Olympia, four years ago, he has made it the Palace of Paris and now in addition manages the neighbor, Montparnasse house, the Bobino. Both are doing sellout biz.

Present Olympia program opens the 1958-59 season and is helmed by the Platters who scored sensationally on same boards last year. Established by their disks and previous engagement here as Paris favorites, the quintet register with equal strength on their return. During 45 minutes they exhibit most of the tricks in their bag, demonstrating cool bogie beat as opener; tenderly vocalizing "Only You" and "My Serenade"; swinging the ragtime "Darktown Strutters Ball" and doing an all-out belting of "When the Saints Come Marching In" spiritual as rousing finale.

Individual and ensemble work of fivesome are topflight. Zola Taylor, contralto; Tony Williams and David Lynch, tenors; Paul Robi, baritone, and Herbert Reed, bass, do harmonizing that brings cheers.

Marcel Amont, slight, quick-moving comic, is second headliner of bill. A droll clown, he opens with the cha-cha-cha and goes on to some neat parodies of bullfighter at work and Spanish guitar player who forgets the lingo in the middle of a passionate serenade.

There is Lucette Raillat, awarded Grand Prix du Disque this year, with her pop songs; a fast and funny trio of tumblers, Warren, Devine & Sparks; the acrobatic Oliveras and Suzanne Gabriello as sexy and likeable mistress of ceremonies.

Monsieur J-M. P. does comic roundup of current events. Guitar-lot-singer, Marie-Josee Neuville, now turned 19, does some chirping to small orch accompaniment. She has talent, but is on too long and there is a monotony to both her repertory and rendition.

As special attraction to round out this first program and those that will follow, Coquatrix has signed George Reich's "Ballets He" (now billed as "Ballets HOlympia"). Reich, an American and disciple of Jerome Robbins, has attractive and restful company and both dancing and choreography benefit by electric American tempo, still a novelty here. Curt.

Apollo, N. Y.

Norma Miller Dancers (5), Sad Sam & Pineapple, Royal Holidays (4), Oscar & Annette, Kodaks (4), Moonglows (5), Ruth Brown, Paul Williams Orch (13); "Ten Wanted Men" (Col).

Current semester at this Harlem house spotlights the rock 'n' roll beat with a succession of quartets, duets and quintets leading up to solo headliner Ruth Brown for a zingy finish. It's a slow and monotonous build to the closer, though, because preceding turns all toy with the "big beat" in similar fashion and it comes out as one long deejay show without a commercial intrusion to break the pace.

The singers come on in force after the Norma Miller Dancers and Sad Sam & Pineapple have their turns. Miss Miller, working with four fast-stepping boys, creates plenty of zip with her terp movements but loses some of the momentum when she tackles a patter repertoire that's too musty for laughs. When she sticks to the fancy stepping with her fellows, she's in good shape to get any vaude layout off to a running start. Sad Sam & Pineapple follow with tiresome dialog that misses in every respect.

The Paul Williams orch opens the way for the musical deluge that follows with a breezy "Huckleback," featuring maestro's sax and lively newie called "Upbeat." Then come the fingers.

First there's the Royal Holidays, four boys, who deliver "Zoom," "I'm Sorry" and "Summertime" without too much originality or style. Oscar & Annette move in next with some hip dueting on "Let's Get Together" and "Rockin' Child." Oscar's solo on "Guilty of Loving You" doesn't work out too well. Three boys and a femme, the Kodaks, take over the mikes with some juve-voiced workovers of "Little Boy and Girl," "King In My Castle" and "On Gee." Then come the Moonglows, five young men, with "Ten Commandments of Love," "See Saw" and "When I'm With You." The baritone and tenor leads keep the femme teeners in the aud happy through the songalog.

It's Miss Brown, though, who wraps up everything in pro fashion. Opening with a lively belter, "Just Too Much," and segueing to a mood item, "Book Of Lies," she packs her turn with such discHcks as "Mama," "Why Me" and "Little Girl." The aud here is familiar with her wax works and she wins 'em over easily. Gros.

Too Much Biz

centers. Many agents in that country aren't trustworthy and will frequently cancel acts at the last minute, or be unable to deliver talent already contracted for.

To prevent agents from taking too large a commission slice or rebates, Perry pays the acts with two checks, one for salary and the other the standard agency commission. When acts are booked out of London, prices rise about $78 to cover air transportation. To recoup part of the investment, frequently these acts are sold to smaller clubs which have shows one or two nights weekly. This helps acts as well as other cafe owners.

While there has been some talk of joint buying ventures, nothing has been done. Perry says that costs could be lowered and shows improved with consecutive routes of 10 or 12 weeks.

MacRae's CavOILcade

Port Arthur, Tex., Sept. 30.

Gordon MacRae, the Chordettes, dancer Delia Weddington and comedian-m.c. Johnny Matson are booked to appear at the CavOILcade here slated for Oct. 16 to 18.

Tippy & Cobina, chimp act, will round out the bill.

LURIE'S FRISCO 'ICE'-BREAKER

Second Night Critics Cry 'Ouch!' And Pressagents Still Embarrassed

By JESSE GROSS

Restoration to the first and second night lists of most of the individuals who had been dropped from the rosters, per below, was accomplished at yesterday's (Tues.) meeting.

The cuts ordered by the Shuberts in the first and second-night critics' lists for Broadway shows have put the New York legit pressagents on the spot. They're being pelted with protests from indjviduals shorn of former privileges.

Although members of the publicists chapter of the Assn. of Theatrical Pressagents & Managers had met with Shubert representative Leonard Sang and agreed on a modification of the original slashes made by Shuberts, the situation remains up in the air as far as the drumbeaters are concerned.

A meeting to discuss the matter was held by the Broadway p.a. group yesterday (Tues.). In a letter informing members of the conclave, Merle Debuskey, chairman of the chapter, commented on the protests received, by those deleted from the lists and the in-the-dark predicament of a number of publicists regarding the who's who. Cuts, incidentally, were subsequently agreed to by City Playhouses Inc.

The reasons for calling the meeting were summed up in Debuskey's letter as follows:

Perhaps upon reflection, the members feel they do not want a standard list. Perhaps they do not wish to accept the compromises that were made. Perhaps they misunderstood. Maybe they would now prefer to dump the whole responsibility back upon the individual producer to work out with the theatre owner."

The second night list is giving the pressagents the biggest head-

'Fair Lady' Tops Chicago Gross Mark of 'Pacific' But in 20 Fewer Weeks

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Over the past weekend "My Fair Lady" became the Windy City's new boxoffice champ, surpassing by several thousands the record $3,204,380 held by "South Pacific" for more than six years. "SP" made its score in 67 weeks at a $5 top, while "Lady" did it in 47 weeks at a $7 top.

The hit tuner is still strong in Chicago, running close to capacity nearly every week. Probability is that it will run another six months at least, whereby it figures to pad its record gross by at least another million and a half.

Not likely at this point, however, that "My Fair Lady" will attempt to best the Chi long run record of 100 weeks, set by "Good Night Ladies" (April 12, 1942 to March 11, 1944). Unless, says management, Jane Powell agrees to take over the role of Liza Doolittle when Anne Rogers quits the company around December. Feeling is that with Miss Powell on the marquee people who have seen the show once or twice might return to catch the new star.

Anna Russell Sets New British Provincial Tour

London, Sept. 30.

Anna Russell opens a new tour Oct. 7 at the Festival Hall here and will play a second London date at the same house Nov. 15. The singer-satirist's tour will include the key provincial cities, plus Glasgow and Edinburgh, and the two university cities, Oxford and Cambridge.

Miss Russell's new record album, "Anna Russell's Practical Banana Promotion," will be issued by Philips to coincide with her tour.

HEATED TENT GOES ON

Carousel at Framington Pushes 'Season' to Oct. 12

Framingham, Mass., Sept. 30.

Carousel Theatre, only strawhat musical tent still continuing, added two weeks to its season with "The Moon Is Blue," with Donald Wood, opening tonight, Tuesday (30), through Sunday (5).

For the final show of the season, Carousel, which has a radiant heat system going to ward off the fall chills, will open "Mr. Roberts" Oct. 7 through Oct. 12.

The 3,000-seat music tent has been competing with legit theatres in downtown Boston all through September.

Topeka Sellout For BTL Season

Topeka, Sept. 30.

Don't try to tell anybody in Topeka that the road is dead. Local stage buffs, offered the chance to subscribe for four legit shows this season in the local highschool auditorium, stood all in line all day in a driving rain to buy out the entire 2,404-seat capacity for the whole four-show series.

It's been a byword in recent years that Topeka was a one-night graveyard, and the tepid local response to the few-and-far-between touring shows has supported the premise. A notable instance was "Damn Yankees," which pulled a miserable $3,400 last spring in a one-nighter at the 4,200-seat City Auditorium.

There's obviously a legit audience hereabouts, however, and it responded to news stories about plans for a Broadway Theatre League subscription season of four touring shows. Due to slip-ups, the mail come-ons and window cards for the drive were never used, and the single mail-order ad didn't appear until the day before the sale was to open, instead of the previous Sunday, as planned.

Although the b.o. didn't open until 10 a.m., there was a long line at 8:30, despite the downpour, and for most of the day the string of

BERT McCORD EXITS HERALD-TRIB POST

Bert McCord is leaving his drama reporter's pillar at the N.Y. Herald-Tribune within the next three weeks. He had been at the Trib's drama desk for the past 15 years. A replacement will be filled from the staff.

McCord is switching from the Broadway scene to rural living in New England and a freelance writing career.

Garland 'Swindle' Charge Hearing Set For Oct. 14

The initial referee's hearing regarding all issues involved in the distribution of the remaining assets of Broadway Angels Inc., Hollywood Angels Inc. and Wallace Graydon Garland Productions will be held on Oct. 14 in New York at the city's Assn. of the Bar.

The referee, attorney Stanley Steingut, was appointed to take testimony and report recommendations on the conflicting claims and intricate problems involved in the divvy of the assets. The three firms, all formerly operated by Garland, are among the defendants in an action filed by the State, following the N. Y. Attorney General's accusation in 1955 that Garland had swindled about 4,000 investors of $400,000.

The Garland enterprises were involved principally in legit investments.

VEXED AT 'MAME' TICKET CLAUSE

By WILLIAM STEIF

San Francisco, Sept. 30.

Louis R. Lurie, owner of the 1,758-seat Curran Theatre and lessee of the adjoining 1,550-seat Geary, has instructed every ticket broker in San Francisco to lay off scalping any tickets for the Coast company of "Auntie Mame," opening at the Geary next Tuesday (7).

The show, set for a 10-week Frisco run, had an advance of more than $100,000 as of last weekend, $58,000 in mail orders alone.

Lurie's instructions were conveyed to the local brokers in a letter from William Zwissig, who runs the two houses.

The letter followed a demand from Benny Stein, general manager of the "Auntie Mame" company now in Los Angeles, for 250 house seats for opening night and 60 pairs of house seats every night thereafter.

This number of house seats is indeed in the fine print of the company contract—or so Lurie indicated but neither he nor Zwissig were aware of this clause until Stein made his demand.

Then, admits Lurie, "I blew my top."

He further remarks, "I'm not

Speed What's Left To the Investors As 'Swim' Sinks

"Swim in the Sea," the Fay Bainter starrer, which folded last Saturday (27) after two tryout weeks in Philadelphia, represents an approximate $50.000 loss of the $100,000 investment. The management has already returned $40,000 to the backers and its anticipated that around $10,000 more may be forthcoming after all closing expenses are covered.

In an unusual move, the management of the Jess Gregg comedy-drama distributed the $40,000 to the investors two days before the show's closing. The producers had notified the backers of their decision to wrap up the presentation in Philly rather than sink additional coin into the venture to bring it to New York, where they felt its prospects were dim.

The play, which was produced by Robert E. Griffith, Harold S. Prince and Shirley Ayers, was previously tested as a stock entry in Florida last April 28-May 3. Fade marks the second straight play casualty for Griffith and Prince, who've had a string of hit Broadway musicals. Last season they were partnered with George Abbott in the NBC-financed "Soft Touch," which was jettisoned during rehearsals.

Incidentally, there was no office charge by the management in connection with the operation of "Sea."

Nyack Barn Will Extend; Beckers to Tour Europe

Nyack, N.Y., Sept. 30.

The Tappan Zee Playhouse, which played a nine-week strawhat season this season, will extend to 12 or 13 weeks next year, and may even try to continue into the early fall period. The long-dark former legit, vaude and film house will also probably be air-conditioned.

Bruce Becker, operator of the spot, sailed last Saturday (27) with his wife and business associate, Honey Becker, for an extended motor tour of Europe. While in Paris, they will try to arrange for a French film production of "Tonight in Samarkand," the Jacques Deval drama which Becker produced on Broadway several seasons ago, and on which he holds all rights.

Alliance's 22 Cities, 7 Weeks' Dates On Subscription, Plus Guarantees

Broadway Theatre Alliance, which entered the legit booking field last year, will have subscription setups in 22 cities this season, comprising almost seven weeks of playing time. It also is booking non-subscription dates, mostly on guarantee.

The legit agency, a subsidiary of Columbia Artists Management, expects to have subscription in 60 cities next season and 100 the following season. By that time, the subscription playing time will total about 40 weeks, spanning the entire non-summer months comprising the legit season.

BTA is sending out four shows this fall, but may increase the number in future years if and as the public appetite for legit increases in subscription cities. Already playing BTA subscription dates is the Sylvia Sidney company of "Auntie Mame." Slated to go out soon are touring companies of "Li'l Abner" and "The Diary of Anne Frank," the latter starring Francis Lederer. The fourth tourer hasn't been set, but a prospect is in negotiation. Season subscription prices are in four categories, from $1 to $7.

Following are the BTA subscription cities for this season, with the number of subscription performances for each (in most cases, local subscription campaigns are still in progress, so subscriber totals are unavailable):

Atlanta, 3; Beaumont, 1; Birmingham, 2; Charlotte, N. C., 2; Columbia, S. C., 1; Ft. Wayne, 2; Ft. Worth, 1 or 2; Greensboro, N. C., 2; Houston, 3; Knoxville, 1; Lincoln, 1; Memphis, 3; Montgomery, 1; New Orleans, 4; Rochester, 3; San Antonio, 1; Sioux City, 1; Topeka, 1 (see separate story); Tulsa, 2; Utica, 2; White Plains, N. Y., 2; Wichita, 2.

JACK LEMMON'S LEGIT

'Scourge' Set Year Ahead-Rehearsals Start In Sept. '59

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Jack Lemmon has signed for lead role in Paul Gregory-staged "Scourge Of The Sun" which bows on Broadway next year.

Actor, under non-exclusive two-pix pact annually to Columbia Pictures reports for "Scourge" rehearsals in September of 1959.

Studio has pre-empt rights on actor.

'Seesaw' Profit Is Now $229,285

Backers of "Two for the Seesaw" have netted nearly 100% thus far on their $80,000 investment. That's based on a $145,000 profit distribution as of last Aug. 30. Returns are split equally between the investors and management.

As of the latest audit, the Fred Coe production had earned a total profit of $229,285. That included an initial $78,700 installment on the film sale, after deduction of commissions and other expenses. The rights were bought by Seven Arts Productions for $600,000, plus 10% of the film gross over $3,500,000.

The balance of "Seesaw" assets after the divvy of profits and other deductions was $56,584. The management figures that $35,000 of that will be required to produce the touring edition of the William Gibson comedy-drama. The road company, to costar Ruth Roman and Jeffrey Lynn, opens Oct. 6 at the Ford's Theatre, Baltimore.

The Broadway original, starring Dans Andrews and Lee Grant (subbing for the vacationing Anne Bancroft), is currently in its 37th week at the Booth Theatre, N. Y.

FRANK HALE ABROAD ON 'PRINCESS' CASTING

Frank J. Hale, producer of the Royal Poinciana Playhouse, Palm Beach, headed for Europe last week to talk with Moira Shearer and Thomas Beecham for possible guest-shots in his Florida theatre. He is producing an original full-length ballet, "The Princess," by Mario Bragiotti, and wants top names, lead dancer and conductor.

Among Hale's other interests are ballet shorts, which he produces mainly for dance instruction.

Stratford (Ont.) Fest's $664,600 Season Gross

Stratford, Ont., Sept. 30.

The Stratford Shakespeare Festival grossed approximately $664,600 for the season which ended Sept. 13, nearly $50,000 ahead of its best previous record. Total attendance was over 218,000, an increase of 35,000 over the previous record.

The 12-week season of Shakespeare repertory ("Henry IV," "Much Ado About Nothing" and "Winter's Tale") grossed $583,000 on 81% of capacity in the 2,196-seat Festival Theatre, including a smash 12,000 attendance (95%) at six special reduced-price matinees for school children the final week.

The nine-week season at the Avon Theatre, offering five weeks of music, two of films and two of Montreal's Le Theatre du Nouveau Monde in "La Malade Imaginaire" drew nearly 40,000 attendance for a $81,600 gross, almost double the previous season figure.

Festival officals plan a 12-week, two-production Shakespeare repertory next summer at the Festival Theatre, and music and films again at the Avon.

'Banned' Nice Word For Subscription Secretary Of Glasgow Society

Glasgow, Sept. 23.

The Citizens' Theatre, leading local legit group, has again launched a new season with a banned play. Public performances of the opener, Tennessee Williams' "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," are prohibited, with the audience limited to members of the Citizens' Theatre Society.

The situation is a repeat of last season when the Citizens' got underway with Arthur Miller's "View From the Bridge," another banned play. It's figured that the "banned" appellation, which hypoes both public and press interest, aids in increasing Theatre Society membership since only members of that org are permitted to purchase tickets for such offerings. The cost of joining the Society is 80c yearly.

Although, commenting that the Citizens' is aware of the publicity value, Michael Goldberg, chairman of the operation's board of directors, claims the decision to open the new season with another banned play was not a stunt. Other plays slated for Citizens' presentation this season include "Summer of the 17th Doll," "She Stoops to Conquer" and a four-week Scot repertory festival, with the Citizens', the Edinburgh Gateway Co., the Perth Theatre and the Dundee Repertory participating.

'Godunov' in Russian With Christoff, Resnik

London, Sept. 30.

Boris Christoff will sing the title role in a Covent Garden production of Moussorgsky's opera "Boris Godunov," which opens the fall opera season on October 31. The opera will be sung for the first time in Russian at the Royal Opera House.

Regina Resnik will sing Princess Marina. Others in the cast include Edith Coates, John Lanigan and Otaker Kraus.

Shows Out of Town

The Marriage-Go-Round

San Francisco, Sept. 27.

Paul Gregory production of play by Leslie Stevens. Stars Claudette Colbert and Charles Boyer; features Julie Newmar, Edmon Ryan. Directed by Joseph Anthony; settings and lighting by Donald Oenslager. Opening Sept. 27, '58, at Alcazar, San Francisco; $6.50 top.

Paul Delville	Charles Boyer
Content Lowell	Claudette Colbert
Katrin Sveg	Julie Newmar
Ross Barnett	Edmon Ryan

In "The Marriage-Go Round," which opened tonight at the Alcazar, producer Paul Gregory has come acropper. His production is splendid physically. The four characters, and especially Charles Boyer, are satisfactory. Donald Oenslager's settings and lights are fine. Joseph Anthony's direction is as good as can be expected under the circumstances. But Leslie Stevens' bedroom comedy is tedious and witless.

Two-and-a-half hour show hangs on one quasi-joke: should a middle-aged college professor, happily married 25 years, allow himself to go to bed with a brilliant, blonde amazon of 24 who wants him to be the father of her baby?

It takes more than two hours of incessant talk to get an answer to this relatively simple question, and then the answer is only "maybe" and the audience hardly cares.

Boyer plays the Professor, Claudette Colbert his wife, mother of grown children and herself a college dean. Boyer starts show with lecture on monogamy from podium at one side of stage. Miss Colbert follows immediately with lecture on happy marriage from podium at opposite side. Then they step onto revolving stage to greet big blonde, played by Julie Newmar, who has come from Sweden and decided Boyer would be perfect genetic specimen to produce perfect child with her.

Two acts depict various stages of triangle with Edmon Ryan introduced in small part of professorial foil for Miss Colbert.

Throughout show two principals step off stage to podiums for coy asides to audience. Boyer manages to stay in character as lecturer—This is a tribute to his acting skill. But Miss Colbert loses lecturer's poise during second act, lets her voice become shrill and turns into hysterical wife. She also displayed annoying habit of speaking with head turned away from audience.

Miss Newmar is vastly sexy and almost believable in an unbelievable role. Play's resolution, unfortunately, has Boyer suddenly talking Miss Newmar into seeking husband instead of perfect genetic specimen and strain of this final touch of unreality destroys any illusion she may have built.

Play is built on salves of one-line wisecracks of this order: "He makes Rocky Marciano look like a little girl" and "Mercy Me, that's Boston for I'll be damned."

Such gags lose their fizz very quickly and by second act "Marriage-Go-Round" is exceedingly thin, barren and too long.

Oenslager's 360-degree revolving set includes living room, kitchen and corner nook at Howard Johnson's restaurant. It's slick.

For Broadway Gregory and Anthony will have to cut half-hour and find some funnier lines than Stevens so far has supplied. Film possibilities at this juncture are nil. Steif.

Patate

New Haven, Sept. 24.

Gilbert Miller presentation of comedy in three acts by Irwin Shaw, from the French of Marcel Achard. Stars Tom Ewell; features Lee Bowman, Mercy Wickwire, Muriial Williams, Susan Oliver. Directed by H. C. Potter; settings, Raymond Sovey; costumes supervised by Kathryn Miller. At Shubert Theatre, New Haven, Sept. 24, '58; $4.80 top.

Lem Rollo	Tom Ewell
Edith Rolle	Nancy Wickwire
Butler	George Turner
Veronique Taillade	Muriial Williams
Noel Taillade	Lee Bowman
Alexa Rollo	Susan Oliver

"Patate" has "promise" but is going to require a more successful transition of Gallic values into American values before it can hope to leap the smash hit barricade. Present problem seemingly is to shed emphasis which perhaps had weight in the Paris version but invites a different type of reaction stateside. This applies especially to the central character who, currently, though reasonably amusing, should also draw considerable audience sympathy, but does not as presently portrayed.

Optimistic factor favoring property is general laugh content which provides a sound foundation for possible expansion. Fortunately there's ample tuneup time (four more weeks), indications being that present experimenting with several roles may jell and play could hit Broadway as a candidate for survival.

"Patate" is the French equivalent of "fall-guy," which is the role assigned Tom Ewell. Playing the patsy to a polished shady operator (Lee Bowman), Ewell has taken the rap for a variety of offenses committed by Bowman, a smooth heel who has even gone so far as to teach the facts of life to Ewell's 18-year-old adopted daughter. A shift in circumstances momentarily places Bowman at Ewell's mercy but latter softens up when chance for revenge actually presents itself. Role should generate audience sympathy but that facet is being glossed over, as of the emphasis at New Haven opening.

Ewell is right for the patsy part, grabbing off a good share of laughs, but as yet hasn't got his teeth into the role, partially due to adaptation. Bowman does the gentleman crook very well, with emphasis on unruffled delivery. Nancy Wickwire gives considerable understanding to the role of Ewell's forthright and faithful wife (part since taken over by Haila Stoddard as of the Boston run); Murial Williams adds ample graciousness as Bowman's wealthy wife who buys his way out of scrapes; Susan Oliver contributes rampant charm as the daughter who ignores the rules of propriety.

Pace at play's opening is lethargic, first act serving merely to prepare action. Best moments come in final frame as staging builds to interesting climax. Contrasting lush and modest Parisian living rooms are in good taste and there's opportunity for a nice femme apparel display.

Irwin Shaw's translation is said to stick pretty close to original version but might do well to get away from certain French characteristics for better Yank appreciation. Bone.

Man in the Dog-Suit

Wilmington, Sept. 30.

Producers Theatre production of three-act comedy by Albert Beich and William H. Wright, from novel by Edwin Corle. Stars Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn; features Cathleen Nesbitt and Carmen Andrews. Directed by Ralph Nelson; setting and light, Donald Oenslager; costumes, Anna Hill Johnstone; associate producer, Lewis Allen. At Playhouse, Wilmington, Del., Sept. 24 to 27, four evening performances. Saturday matinee; $5.40 top.

Martha Walling	Jessica Tandy
Oliver Walling	Hume Cronyn
George Stoddard	John Grigas
Eileen Stoddard	Carmen Mathews
Henry Garton	John McGovern
Letty Garton	Nancy Cushman
Mrs. Louisa Stoddard	Cathleen Nesbitt
Stewart Stoddard	Clinton Sundberg
Anthony Roberti	Tom Carlin
Mr. Beal	Arthur Hughes

Contemporary American society, smug in stereotyped homes, jobs and recreation with "security" as life's ultimate, is gently rocked and rolled from its foundations by an ordinary guy with a plausible dream and normal frustrations who finds escape and a more exciting self as "The Man In the Dog Suit."

Co-starring the highly compatible man-and-wife team—Hume Cronyn and Jessica Tandy—this warm marital comedy gives a charmingly funny twist to a not uncommon situation: A good Joe married to a beautiful and devoted gal whose family feels he's quite inferior but have accepted him with a few revisions and improvements which they continue to make over the years.

Cronyn in the title role of Oliver Walling and Miss Tandy as spouse, Martha, bring tears and laughter and sympathetic response. They live in a typical American suburb, have six-year-old twin sons attending a boys' camp with a typical American Indian name, and after nine years of married life, Oliver and Martha have fallen into the usual state of taking one another for granted, but the romantic glow of their first meeting in Italy is readily revived by playing the record, "Isle of Capri."

It is on this reminiscent note that the curtain rises on the Wallings in a playful mood and in a dim light, returning from a masquerade party at the country club. Scenic and lighting effects add to the enchantment and gaiety of this opening scene which also introduces the dog-suit—Oliver's costume. The guise quite feasibly becomes an exhilarating obsession with him and a fly in the ointment for his in-laws, the Stoddards, a family of prestige, affluence, extreme conventionality, and skeletons in the closet.

The Stoddards have gone to all well-meaning ends to fit Oliver into their mold, the first step having been to find his a niche in the banking world (at this point head teller), although he got his degree in forestry and is still moved to great emotion on the subject of trees, fungus, etc., especially with alcoholic stimulation and in his dog-suit.

The grotesque costume, its large, lolling head representing a German shepherd, cuts a convulsing figure whether hanging in the closet or on Walling. Yet, after becoming acclimated, one is inclined to agree that a fellow of Oliver's submerged personality has to go somewhere to refuel his ego and the dog suit does the trick. So much so that it becomes habit forming and he is unable to face a crisis without it.

This is both frightening and repugnant to the Stoddards and a threat to the family's good name since Walling makes several impromptu public appearances in the weird garb. When the time comes for a promotion at the bank (Stoddard-controlled), the ultimatum is issued: the loan officer's desk or the dog-suit. This crucial decision, of course, is the meat of the play.

This almost tender satire is beautifully executed with sensitive appreciation for minor details, gestures, expressions, actions. Even some of the silences are pregnant with humor or warm human feeling. However, some of these gaps must be closed to sharpen the pace and cut the running time.

Cathleen Nesbitt as Mother Stoddard comes forth in a manner befitting her stature as a veteran of nearly 50 years in the theatre. She endears herself with her studied sweetness, understanding and maternal concern, the subtle poison of which both makes and breaks.

Cronyn as the square peg in a round hole has an hilarious complement in Carmen Mathews, nonconformist married to the real estate tycoon of the Stoddard family. As Eileen Stoddard she not only has the big corner on laugh lines, but she hits the jackpot every time with crisp and clever delivery and synchronized expressions and attitudes as she adroitly affects various stages of inebriation.

John McGovern gives a commanding performance as Harry Gaxton, dentist-turned-bank-president under Stoddard influence. Arthur Hughes as the slightly deranged Mr. Beal, a pixie of a man who makes like a helicopter, seals the play's theme and his own popularity in his "takeoff and landing" bit.

Tom Carlin, a personable and promising young actor, in the role of Anthony Roberti, another odd patch in the Stoddard quilt, is the unwitting generator of amusing events creating this comedy. The son of Mother Stoddard's sister, who committed the indiscretion of marrying an Italian gardner, it is Tony's trip East from Omaha to become remodeled as a Stoddard that oils Oliver's wheels of memory and rebellion, thus motivating his frequent retreats into dog-suit.

This comedy by Albert Beich and William H. Wright, from a novel by Edwin Corle, should go well on Broadway, after a little fine tailoring. Neatly avoiding slapstick, the topnotch cast pokes fun at familiar aspects of American life, mischievously invading home, office, heart and a man's daydreams.

A departure from the ultra-smart and arty, the homely humor of "Man in the Dog Suit" is infectious. The dialog and situations are consistently funny and their harmonious flow is evidence of capable direction. The show promises excellent wearing of the dog-suit.

Second M.P.	Ty Perry
Cameraman	Hoke Howell
Reverend Conklin	Don Marye
Henry Whipple	Hoke Howell
Harry Flagg	Guy Perone
Dog Richmond	Ed Crowley
Telephone Operator	Barbara Barkley

"Make A Million" with Sam Levene in the starring role and Don Wilson, of radio and tv, in the cast, is the second tryout play to come to Atlantic City's boardwalk, once a breakin haven. For the first act it looks as though its on its way to make nearly a million for its backers. Unhappily the action soon fizzles though a large, hard-working cast of 18 gets plenty of laughs, despite the leveling off.

Three-acter is spoof of the television quiz program fad, timely now with the fix probes underway. It tells the story of a producer (Levene) harrassed by incidents which threaten his program. Top

Heloise

Gene Dingenary production of three-act drama by James Forsyth. Staged by Nadine Miles; settings and lighting, Henry Kurth; costumes, Theoni Vachliotl Aldredge; music, Crawford Wright. At Gate Theatre, N.Y., Sept. 24, '58; $3.90 top.

Cast: Alan Arkin, Hugh Palmerston, Brendan Fay, Mitzi Hoag, Sol Serlin, Richard Neilson, Steve Wolfson, Eugene Miles, Sue Trevathan.

When "Heloise" is raging with intellectual conflict, it is a fiery play. The first act, and most of the third, of James Forsyth's romantic drama, are concerned with gleaming ideological and spiritual conflict that make a visit to lower 2nd Ave.'s Gate Theatre enormously rewarding.

Forsyth, a British playwright, is said to have written his version of the celebrated Abelard-Heloise romance in dribs and drabs during World War II, sending scenes home from the front as finished for later reassembling into play form. Less inspiring theatre by far has often been written under more favorable circumstances, and although Forsyth's history is episodic, it discloses a king-sized talent for dramatic craftsmanship, as well as literary writing of a high order, talents not always found in tandem.

The play runs almost full gamut of the renowned love affair between the man who had one of the finest minds of the middle ages, and the not-much-less gifted woman whom he loved. Their premarital union that brought forth a child, the subsequent furtive marriage designed not to hinder his progress under churchly auspices, the fiendish revenge (emasculation) taken by Heloise's doting clerical uncle, canon of Notre Dame, and the spiritual furtherance of their love through taking of holy orders, are all touched upon.

The age's conflicts between faith and reason are exploited, and the play's underlying theme is the essential unity of love. That these elements have been made dynamically theatrical is the play's success.

The tasteful production that Gene Dingenary has provided, the discreet staging by Nadine Miles against Henry Kurth's painting-like unit sets, are fruitful labors. In fact, the Gate Theatre itself, formerly a church, is a good milieu for this medieval excursion.

As the discerningly glowing Heloise, Mitzi Hoag has clarity of tongue and spirit as she shows the girl and woman holding her own with the great minds of her time. Eugene Miles' Abelard is a rather dry, ascetic, occasionally pedantic man, whose passion is, paradoxically, most fully realized in the closing scenes of monastic self-denial.

As Abelard's intellectual rival, Richard Neilson is crisply stirring. Hugh Palmerston's worldly villain is replete with cynicism, while Sol Serlin's portrait of the canonical uncle, who plots Abelard's emasculation, suffers from an attempted rationalization through use of a senile dementia that is at odds with history.

"Heloise" was first produced seven years ago in London. Its local unveiling brings distinction to the new theatrical season.

Lulu

David Ross revival of four-act tragedy by Frank Wedekind, as translated by Stephen Spender and Frances Fawcett. Stars Eva Gabor, Harold Huber, Clarence Derwent. Features Don Fellows, Marcel Hillaire, Edgar Franken, Patrick O'Neal. Staged by Ross; settings, Eldon Elder. At 4th St. Theatre, N.Y., Sept. 29, '58; $4.45 top.

Cast: David Ross, Eva Gabor, Jack Adams, Harold Huber, Patrick O'Neal, Edgar Franken, Don Fellows, Lois Robinson, Clarence Derwent, Lore Noto, Marcel Hillaire, Ruth Maylas, Andreas Voutsinas, Michael Mann, William Bassett.

Time and David Ross have converted Frank Wedekind's sex tragedy, "Earth Spirit," into the sex comedy, "Lulu." With a marked assist from Stephen Spender and Frances Fawcett, who have provided a painfully literal translation, sufficient to tax the concentration of the most straightforward actor.

With its accent on prurience, the German playwright's script was originally a Victorian shocker, a theatrical piece of importance in its day for frankness of theme and explicitness of story and language. Somewhere lurking in the shadows of the far corners of the 4th St. arena theatre, there is an inkling of the play's essential tragedy. Neither in adaptation nor in staging, however, has this basic element been allowed to get on stage.

The heroine, if that's the term, is calculating, oversexed, demoniac. She destroys every male with whom she comes in contact. One dies of a heart attack, one cuts his throat, another she shoots, after telling him that she poisoned his first wife. (This man she really loves.)

The girl started her manhunt as a barefooted 12-year old flower girl. She seduces father and son, fogey and fledgling, prince or pauper, without discrimination, except insofar as this affair or that may advance her career or assure her of creature comforts. By the end, bored with it all, she has resorted to lesbianism.

Eva Gabor tackles this witch's stint in Ross's revival. She plays it straight, being kittenish or the vixen as required, narrowing her deepest eyes in cruel lust, curling her generous mouth as lovers grovel at her feet, clutching virtually the entire male cast to her decollete bosom at one point or another in the evening's proceedings.

As the surrounding court of males, such worthies as Clarence Derwent and Harold Huber dauntlessly show the way, taking hold of the improbable lines and reading them with authority, force and as much conviction as an actor may muster under such disconcerting circumstances. For each, it is valor beyond the call of duty.

In a later play of Wedekind's, Lulu is hacked to bits by one of her clients. None too soon, either.

The Young Provincials

Stage Enterprises production of three-act comedy-drama by Ben Levinson. Staged by Levinson; settings and lighting, Pecola. At the Cricket Theatre, N.Y., Sept. 18, '58; $3.45 top.

Cast: Jonnie Morton, Luke Askew, Barbara Pitcher, James Gere, John O'Connor, Gene Yanni.

"The Young Provincials" apparently falls into the category of comedy-drama. The Ben Levinson piece purports to be about young artist intellectuals who are really "hicks," the provincials of the title. It is very bad.

After a week's delay occasioned by the author-director's bout with recurrent malaria, "Provincials" has opened the Cricket Theatre, N.Y. Levinson was originally being triple threat by acting in his play as well, but withdrew because of his illness.

The four principal players, two young men and two young women, are all making their New York debut in this production. Pinch-hitting for Levinson in the play's only character role is an experienced actor named John O'Connor. He cannot improve on the play, but he does demonstrate quickly and effectively how to inform a scene with drive and tension. The junior quartet could well take note.

At one point, after a young lady whom an artist is about to sketch has been talking a great deal, she asks him how he sees her. "Right now," quoth he, "as all mouth." It got the laugh. Geor.

Dance Review

American Ballet Theatre

The American Ballet Theatre opened the second week of its current Metopera House stand with the world premiere of "Journey," an introspective apostrophe to death and final judgment, to music of Bela Bartok and with stimulatingly imaginative choreography by England's Kenneth MacMillan. This ballet was tried on the dog, so to speak, during the company's series of programs at the Phoenix Theatre during May 1957, and since that time it has been refined. Its essentials remain the same, however, it is still avant garde ballet and may not soon become popular with (or, perhaps, especially not with) confirmed balletomanes.

The mood is grimly uncompromising, the costuming is starkly drab, the setting is green-hued and cavernous. What Nora Kaye does within this grisly milieu, as she portrays a soul in limbo, is certainly not glum. With ascetic precision, emotional knowledge and remarkable discipline, she uses her gifts for characterization so that much of this ballet becomes deeply affecting.

Even when in repose, Miss Kaye has the facility to make the stage all hers. When she is merely sitting quietly, with action swirling elsewhere, it is virtually impossible to shift attention from her very immobility.

MacMillan is unquestionably a highly gifted choreographer, and that this company has had the courage to place this enigmatic ballet in repertoire is a distinct credit, for despite occasional self-consciousness, "Journey" is a masterly work that should achieve permanence.

The balance of the program consisted of the Balanchine-Tchaikowsky "Theme and Variations,"

The road, which is bustling with activity, had another good session last week. Business was healthy for most of the pre-Broadway and touring entries, with a number of shows in the sellout or virtual capacity groove. Among those were "Can-Can," "Girls in 509," "Goldilocks," "Music Man," "Touch of the Poet" and "World of Suzie Wong."

There was one tryout fold, "Swim in the Sea," which wrapped up Saturday (27) after a fortnight in Philadelphia.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout and RS indicates road show. Also, prices on touring shows include 10% Federal Tax and local tax, if any, but as on Broadway grosses are net; i.e. exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

The legits are playing on rental deals.

Opera Reviews

Medea

San Francisco, Sept. 13.

San Francisco Opera Co. presentation of three-act opera by Luigi Cherubini, libretto by F. B. Hoffman, after Euripides; staged by Paul Hager; conductor, Jean Fournet; setting, Waldemar Johansen; chorus director, Gianni Lazzari; choreographer, Eugene Loring. Features Eileen Farrell, Sylvia Stahlman, Richard Lewis, Giuseppe Modesti, Claramae Turner. At San Francisco Opera House, Sept. 12, '58; $12.50 top.

Creon ..... Giuseppe Modesti
Glauce ..... Sylvia Stahlman
Jason ..... Richard Lewis
Medea ..... Eileen Farrell
Neris ..... Claramae Turner
Captain of Guard ..... Harold Enns
First Handmaiden ..... Joan Marie Moynagh
Second Handmaiden ..... Margot Blum
Children ..... Bernard Pomeroy, Philip Kelsey

Why the Frisco Opera chose to open its 36th season with this 161-year-old opera, never before performed in the U. S., is something of a mystery. The only apparent answer is Eileen Farrell, a fine soprano. As the curtain-raiser to an opera season, however, this curiously static work in the tradition of the 18th Century is unsatisfying.

The story is clean and simple, following the classic Greek pattern. Jason throws over his wife, Medea, for Glauce, daughter of Creon, King of Corinth. Medea gains her revenge by poisoning Glauce and murdering her own two sons by Jason, and in the process goes mad. Even the murky Italian libretto of F. B. Hoffman can't obscure this plot.

Cherubini's music, resembling the immature Mozart in many places and in a few spots rising to the standard of "The Magic Flute," carries the story nicely, though it tends to be a trifle placid at times. Conductor Jean Fournet does not extract all the possible fire he could from the music and seems content to emphasize the music's grace rather than its sonorities.

But the opera's major disappointment is Paul Hager's tedious direction and production, a tedium which settled on the opening-night audience and never really moved this audience off its hands despite generous individual applause for Miss Farrell and Sylvia Stahlman, (as Glauce).

Choreographer Eugene Loring has inserted a couple of extra-simple, languid ballet steps and then given up. Waldemar Johansen's settings reinforce the static quality with huge, Germanic pillars, platforms and dim pastel lights. Goldstein & Co. has costumed the corps and chorus in what look like pastel nightgowns and include a few odd touches, like putting Medea's handmaiden, Neris (Claramae Turner), who has one big second act contralto aria, in a brown monk's habit and giving the male supernumeraries English Beefeaters' spears to carry.

The effect is a series of bloodless tableaux—except for the music and the singing of some principals.

Richard Lewis, as Jason, proves a rather hoarse tenor at first, but settles down and Giuseppe Modesti, making his American debut as Creon, has a pleasant basso which just lacks the power and force to be heard in a big house.

Kurt Herbert Adler, the Frisco Opera's general director, deserves a nod for trying to introduce new works into the repertoire but, in this case, it's evident why "Medea" hasn't been produced in the U. S. before—it's better in concert version. It might, incidentally, make a fine production for NBC-TV's opera series, where it wouldn't have to be spread over a vast stage. . . . Stef.

Ildebrando Pizzetti's musical adaptation of T. S. Eliot's "Murder in the Cathedral" is an interesting musical event.

On the basis of its reception in its world preem last March at La Scala, Milan, it has been called "notable," and that may be true, too. It tends to be a difficult work, however, that does not enhance

Louisville Theatre Train Capacity, Doing Encore

Louisville, Sept. 30.

Number 24 of the Louisville Theatre Trains to leave Louisville Sunday Oct. 19, returning Oct. 25, has been entirely sold out. Boyd Martin, Courier-Journal critic and sponsor of the train, had a waiting list weeks before his deadline, Sept. 20. He's now making plans for a December train that is to leave Dec. 7 and return Dec. 13. Both trains go to New York.

Martin's group now has reserved seats for several attractions, which have not opened, but which are potential hits. Deadline for reservations on the December train is Nov. 10.

'Candide' Record $8,157 In Bucks County Close; 'Crocus' Sock $9,800, Chi

The Bucks County Playhouse, New Hope., and the Drury Lane Theatre, Chicago, registered sock business last week with respective presentations of a concert version of "Candide" and "Autumn Crocus," with Margaret Truman.

"Candide," the windup bill at Mike Ellis' 432-seat Playhouse, broke the house record with a gross of $8,157 for eight performances. Another $1,002 was taken in for an extra closing performance last Sunday (28). The New Hope booking at a $2.50 top was a break-in for the upcoming one-niter tour of the Lester Osterman-Hillard Elkins production.

"Crocus" in its second week at the 485-seat Drury had another capacity round with the take hitting nearly $9,800. The previous week's gross was $9,600, which was sellout less press cuffolas. The show, which is scaled to $3.50 top, continues this frame.

Actor's Workshop Re U.S. State Dept.

Kershaw Treatment Draws Tart Comment — and How 'Poor' Is Performing Arts Program?

San Francisco, Sept. 30.

James A. Kershaw, stage manager of Actor's Workshop here who was barred by the State Department from participating in Brussels Fair presentation of "Waiting for Godot," arrived back in San Francisco last week and said:

"Arthur Miller, Paul Robeson, sure maybe the State Department has some sort of a point, they're bigshots. But what am I? If they are going to reach that far down . . . wow!"

He and the workshop's codirector, Herbert Blau, also revealed that Jean Dalrymple, an official of the Performing Arts Program at Brussels, had a stage manager of her choice fly from Brussels to New York a week before the "Godot" cast was to cross the Atlantic so that Kershaw could teach her man the ropes while the show was playing the off-Broadway York Theatre.

"We didn't like him in the theatre," said Blau simply, "but we got to wondering about all the poor-mouthing we heard—we had to pay our own fares across—if the Performing Arts Program could pay for a man to make this kind of a mission."

Kershaw was reluctant to discuss "my personal background," saying:

"The issue is not what is wrong with me, but what is wrong with the State Department that it feels compelled to embarrass itself and its representative at the fair by an action so arbitrary as the refusal to let me do my job . . . what disturbed me most was the procedure. There were no specific charges . . . there was apparently a 'recommendation,' not a 'decision,' and yet it was made quite clear that the company wouldn't be permitted to play if I were connected with the production . . ."

Only reason anyone so far can figure out for the department's stand is that Kershaw once studied at the defunct California Labor School, listed as "Communist-dominated" by the U.S. attorney-general.

O'NEILL 1-ACT 'HUGHIE' PREEM IN STOCKHOLM

Stockholm, Sept. 23.

Eugene O'Neill's "Hughie," posthumously preemed here last Thursday (18), is one of the playwright's more important short plays, more mature than most of his other playlets. The presentation at the Royal Dramatic Theatre marked the third successive year that a posthumous O'Neill script has been world-debuted locally. King Gustaf Adolf and Queen Louisa were among the distinguished first-nighters.

"Hughie," paired with O'Neill's "Emperor Jones," bowed in the Royal Dramatic's 350-seater. As was the case with the other posthumous O'Neill productions, the greenlight for the local presentation of "Hughie" was given the Royal Dramatic Theatre by the playwright's widow, Mrs. Carlotta Monterey O'Neill, in appreciation of the theatre's 35-year interest in his works.

"Hughie" is virtually a monologue, a psychological study of a petty gambler. It takes place during the summer of 1928 and is set in a shabby New York hotel, described by O'Neill as "a third class dump." The Nobel Prize dramatist wrote the final version of the script in 1942 and it was intended to be one of a cycle of eight one-act plays called "By Way of Obit." Dr. Karl-Ragnar Gierow, head of the Dramatic Theatres, believes that "Hughie" is the only existing play from the cycle.

East London's Royal New Hope for Council Subsidy

London, Sept. 30.

After a period of uncertainty, the Theatre Royal, Stratford, East London, is to reopen on Oct. 14 with Brendan Behan's new play, "The Hostage," specially commissioned by Theatre Workshop.

It was under Theatre Workshop auspices, also at the Theatre Royal, that Behan's first play, "The Quare Fellow," was launched. It subsequently transferred to the West End, and is due for a fall New York production.

There had been doubt for some months about the Theatre Royal's future, but municipal authorities in East London have guaranteed to raise about $4,500, and it is hoped there will also be an Arts Council grant.

Make A Million

is an unmarried contestant scheduled to be on the show for another 10 months, but pregnant.

With the sponsor threatening to cancel, the desperate producer is at his wits end to save his show. His first move is to find the father-to-be, and to this end he gets the help of a Pentagon general (Wilson), when the military comes under suspicion. Agency men, sponsor and producer all have ideas, many risible, to hoist the fat from the fire. Situation finally solves itself when contestant's hometown sweetheart looms up, and proves a willing bridegroom.

Levene gets maximum laughs out of his somewhat repetitious material. Don Wilson, playing the pompous fat general, gets his share during a too short stay on stage. Ann Wedgeworth is excellent (and an eyeful) as the pregnant and confused contestant, while Neva Patterson, as the producer's ex-wife, now his secretary, is professionally helpful.

Comedy has plenty of laugh lines, but is overboard on profanity which serves little purpose and needlessly offends. If its last two acts can be re-done to nearer the pace of first this guess might stand: it still won't be a great comedy, or "Make a Million," but it will find some favor on Broadway.

With a $21,000 plus pre-paid subscription gate before the box office opened, it can't lose money in Atlantic City. Walk.

Dance Review

American Ballet Theatre

danced with fetching politesse by Violette Verdy, the Pas de Deux from the Minkus-Petipa "Don Quixote," with Lupe Serrano and Erik Bruhn exhibiting enterprising technical prowess, and the Robbins-Gould "Interplay." This last is presently marked by some personal flamboyancies among the octet that deprive the piece of an essential crispness. Geor.

For Men Only

The introduction of the innocuous "Variations for Four" into the American Ballet Theatre's repertoire has one specific virtue, if few others. It is one of a smattering of ballets for men only. To music by Marguerite Keogh, that is notable chiefly for charm, and as orchestrated by R. Temple Savage, Anton Dolin has contrived a series of athletic exercises by way of choreography. He has seemed to be interested in the questions how high, how many, how long, and there's little doubt that the prowess demonstrated by dancers John Kriza, Erik Bruhn, Scot Douglas and Royes Fernandez will appeal to the matinee trade, among others.

In white tights, with bright blue jackets, as costumed by Tom Lingwood, each of the dancers has his chance at bravura, but in the struggle for excess, any cogent pretensions of this ballet are lost.

The balance of the program included the Ivanov-Petipa-Tchaikowsky "Swan Lake," as restaged by Fernand Nault, the brilliant new MacMillan-Bartok "Journey," and the cartoon that choreographer Herbert Ross has made out of Tchiakowsky's "Violin Concerto in D."

Ballet Theatre's "Swan Lake," even as revamped, is still perfunctory, its chief validity being to give the limpid Lupe Serrano, as the Swan Queen, a chance to grow in this part for which she has so many essential qualities. Instead of toying with this excerpt, it may be about time that ABT challenged itself and Miss Serrano with a full-length "Swan Lake?" Geor.

Are Critics First Reporters'?

Roger Dettmer Raises Issue of Chicago Covering Roadshows Opening Via Benefit Previews

By LES BROWN

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Chicago American first-stringer Roger Dettmer is thumping to get critical immunity here for touring shows on the unofficial opening nights, i.e. benefit previews and such. Dettmer believes every road company, however well rehearsed, needs a single night to learn the limits of the local stage, and in a recent Sunday column he asked his Windy City colleagues to agree, like their New York brethren, to lay off a show until it opens to the public officially.

A spot check by VARIETY found only one fellow critic receptive to Dettmer's proposal. That was Syd Harris of the Daily News, whose argument runs thus: "When a group buys the house, it is their show. I want to cover only when it opens for the general public at regular boxoffice prices. Otherwise, no matter how many performances were given elsewhere on the road, I consider it a dress rehearsal. Opening nights are terrible, anyway. If I had my way I'd see every show the second night."

Both Dettmer and Harris said their papers covered the Sept. 2 preview of "Auntie Mame" instead of the Sept. 3 opening for the sole reason that the morning papers insisted on catching the benefit show. There was the matter of being scooped, which raises the question of whether reviewers should be reporters, or critics, or both. Dettmer termed this confusion of status "anti-critical."

Glenna Syse (Sun-Times), on the other hand, holds that the opening of a legit show is an event that has to be reported as well as evaluated. She says, "The columnists attend the preview nights, and their copy, ahead of our own, would take some of the excitement out of the reviews." She points out that "Mame" had toured 22 cities before it reached Chi, that other plays which do not sell a benefit preview are caught cold on the first night, and that the preview audiences are a legitimate part of the general public. "If they were seeing it for nothing," she says, "we might be able to consider it a dress rehearsal."

Broached in the absence of Claudia Cassidy, Tribune second-stringer Seymour Raven stated that first night coverage depends on individual circumstances, that if a locally produced show tossed a break-in benefit he or Miss Cassidy would probably give it the day's grace. "This," he said, "is why the New York critics are willing to wait for the official openings; they wouldn't if it were not a new show. But when a show comes in with actors who know their parts well, should the Chicago Tribune pretend it hasn't opened?"

The Trib, said Raven, has never set a policy about previews. "How can you have a policy for something that happens three times in five years?"

"Mame" opened in Chicago to two raves (Dettmer and Van Allen Bradley, spelling Harris) and two nays (Raven and Syse). One of the critics said he thought the breakdown would be no different even if the appraisers had waited for the official opening.

Opera Reviews

Murder in the Cathedral

the emotional power of Eliot's play.

Much of this opera's early part is static and painted in tonal grays and blacks. Not until the Archbishop's aria at the close of the first act does majesty begin to become manifest. From then forward, there is a sense of musical and dramatic progression.

Probably due to the difficulties of attempting to stage opera in Carnegie Hall, stage director Richard Baldridge has been unable to achieve physical urgency, so that tableaus and processions are the interminable order of the evening. It is discouraging to see an opera of some strength victimized by ancient operatic devices and trappings, but it has happened here, so that instead of a sweep and pageantry that might induce grandeur, there is constraint and tableau.

As the Archbishop, cannonized soon after his martyrdom, Nicola Rossi-Lemeni, who created this role in Milan, is fine. His voice is the measure of the role that Pizzetti has composed. He has size, dimension and command, and the virtues of this production are largely of his making. From his first white robed entrance against the dark scenery and sombre costumes, he is the dominating figure and voice.

Laszlo Halasz has conducted the Symphony of the Air orchestra. Although he occasionally has had to labor mightily for results, orchestra and chorus respond when the demand is for majesty. (An audience hazard, however, is the array of lights on the maestro's podium which dazzle occupants of parquet pews to the detriment of observing the stage.)

It would be fine if one day hereabouts this opera might get the full treatment. What emerges at Carnegie Hall, despite scenery, costumes and bad lighting is something between a concert version and the real thing. The indications of the resulting performance are good, but can hardly be considered definitive. Geor.

Editor, VARIETY:

The recent article by J. S. Seidman (Sept. 3, 1958) was an informative and succinct analysis of the new tax law as it affects the limited partnership form for legit shows.

I would like to add what Mr. Seidman has said regarding the impact of income taxes on a corporation as opposed to a limited partnership when you have a highly successful theatrical venture. The tax rate on corporate income in excess of $25,000 is 52%, This income, when distributed to stockholders as a dividend, would again be taxed at the individual level—the rate being determined by the taxpayer's income from other sources. If dividends were paid, the effective tax on corporate income would be very high. Under the same circumstances the income earned by a limited partnership would be taxed once at individual rates.

Let us take an example of a successful play in its second year of operation with net income of $200,000 (the pre-opening costs have been during earned the first year of operation). If the corporate form is used, the tax payable by the corporation would be $98,500. Assuming all income is distributed to the stockholders as dividends, the corporation could distribute $101,500. Assuming an average 40% tax rate for the backers, another $40,600 in taxes would be paid by them. Out of $200,000 in income, $142,100 would be paid in income taxes and $57,900 would be after tax return to the investors. A limited partnership's backers and/or producers would have to be at least in the 70% bracket (after inclusion of the income from the partnership) before it would be cheaper to choose the corporate form.

The tax problem of a corporate shareholder, as pointed out by Mr. Seidman, would be mitigated to the extent that dividends were not paid and the shareholder either waited until liquidation to receive his return or sold his stock at a profit—in either case realizing a capital gain. However, many successful shows run for two, three or four years. It would be risky to fail to pay dividends until liquidation where the show enjoys such a long run. The other alternative, i.e. sale of the stock, might mean to the producers giving up control of the enterprise.

Although the amendments to the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 have granted more flexibility to the business form a show may take, the limited partnership in many situations may still be the cheapest way of conducting this kind of a venture.

DON AMECHE WARMS UP IN 'GOLDILOCKS' WINGS

Boston, Sept. 30.

Don Ameche takes over the Barry Sullivan role in "Goldilocks" at the Shubert here this week. Sullivan, who gave his notice preceding the Boston opening on Wednesday (24), played in the Jean and Walter Kerr musical through the first five performances and was still billed in Sunday newspaper ads.

Ads in the New York Times Sunday (28) billed Don Ameche and Elaine Stritch for the show opening at the Lunt-Fontanne Theatre Oct. 11.

ache since only four people were scratched from the first night roster. Actually, discussions regarding changes in the first and second night lists were inaugurated last year between the League of N.Y. Theatres and the pressagents chapter. At that time, the League wanted cuts made and the publicists wanted to add names, proposing a third night list for that purpose.

However, no action was taken after the matter was discussed with the League It's understood the general attitude of the pressagents is that the lists should carry as many legitimate newsmen as possible.

Besides the problem with the N.Y. press, the pressagents are also concerned over the Shubert clampdown on giving out-of-town critics courtesy tickets to Broadway shows. The Shuberts have agreed to meet with the publicists to discuss the matter, but, as yet, a date hasn't been set.

Chi Readings of Plays By GBS-Inspired Writers

Chicago, Sept. 30.

The Shaw Society of Chicago is interlarding its lectern productions of Shavian plays this season with protest drama by contemporary playwrights whose iconoclasm allegedly was influenced by G. B. S. Among those scheduled for the fall term are "The Wrecker" by Saul Bellow; "The Interview" by J. P. Donlevy, one of London's angry young men; "The Mother" by Paddy Chayefsky, in its original teleplay form, and "Childhood's End," a dramatization of the Arthur C. Clarke science fiction novel.

Tentative other shows are "The Doctor and the Devils," by Dylan Thomas; "All That Fall," by Samuel Beckett; "The Entertainer," John Osborne; "The Hole," W. F. Simpson, and "Quest for Corbett" by Kenneth Tynan.

The Shaw Society series started Sept. 10 with a production of "Dear Liar," for which Jerome Kilty and Cavada Humphrey were brought in. Play is an adaptation by Kilty of the G. B. S.-Mrs. Patrick Campbell correspondence.

going to stand for the public getting around."

Zwissig, too, was hopping mad when first confronted by the demand from Stein, who used to be a top Shubert hand in New York. Lurie decided at that time to give Stein the 250 opening night seats and to have ruled:

"But he's going to have to eat them."

The reference to "eating" the tickets, obviously, concerned Lurie's plan to bring the brokers in line and prevent the floating of "ice".

Some of Frisco's half-dozen brokers, of course, are unhappy about the situation—they stood to make a killing on this "demand ticket," just as they did on house seats of "My Fair Lady" last summer.

But Lurie, operating two of Frisco's three legit houses and the two most active, has warned the brokers that if they scalp "Auntie Mame" seats they'll get no more Curran and Geary tickets, "forever."

Since original demand was made, Lurie's become confident he won't have to cough up the 250 house seats for opening night. How he was arranging not to wasn't known. But his apparently deadly-earnest instructions to the brokers stood. He referred to the dangerous possibility of "taxfree money" in the situation and said:

"I am not going to be a part of this."

Topeka Sellout

would-be patrons extended almost around the block. When it became evident that the b.o. staff would never be able to handle all the trade, the waiting patrons were given numbered slips, and the ensuing few days were taken to allocate the supply of tickets and return checks for unfillable orders.

There have been complaints because the local engagement is limited to a single night, but BTL representative Conrad Sutton Smith has explained that the Broadway Theatre Alliance, the New York agency operating BTL, was unprepared for the Topeka demand, and has other bookings that prevent extending the stand here. However, it's assumed that shows will be scheduled for two and perhaps three nights here next season. Also, on the basis of the proven legit interest, it's hoped other touring shows, not booked by BTA, may decide to play here this season.

At the scale of $16 for best locations, or $13, $10 and $7 for the four-show series, the total gross for the series will be $32,758, of which the local sponsoring group will get 35%, probably leaving somewhere around $5,000 or $6,000 for the charity fund.

The fact that the series was completely sold out the opening day means that there will be no expense for radio or tv blurbs or any further display advertising. However, the boxoffice is remaining open to display the filled-in seating chart and, it's hoped, thereby to allay gripes from disappointed would-be subscribers.

Inside Stuff—Legit

The second visit of Red China's Peking "Opera" Co. at the Stadttheatre in Zurich (troupe first came three years ago), brought picket lines by liberal Swiss students in front of the theatre prior to the performance—a thing seldom, if ever, noticed in Switzerland. Displayed were such slogans as "No Communist Propaganda in Switzerland" and "Your Visit Shames Switzerland," and handbills were distributed to all arriving visitors to the effect that "by your visit you support Communist China which is spurring war" and that "part of your entrance fee is serving Communist espionage and propaganda." Pamphlets also quoted Lenin and other Red leaders as having declared that "the arts are means to an end."

Picketing was done quietly, and no incidents occurred. B.o. for both performances was near-capacity, and applause heavy. Reviews, however, were generally n.s.g.

Acrobatic feats are of stunning calibre, reaching virtually breathtaking proportions in the first-part closer, "City of Setcheou." The show's finale, "Dance of the Dragon," is a highly spectacular bit, showing a giant-sized illuminated dragon on a completely darkened stage, manipulated by black-clad men invisible to the public. I'ts a perfect optical illusion and a cinch to win extended curtain calls.

Mezo.

Los Angeles Civic Light Opera Assn. ran up a whooping $1,558,000 for its 21-week season, plus three extra performances, for season ending today. Figure, second highest in company's history, compares with last season's record of $1,998,700 for 25 weeks.

Shakespeare's Ages Of Man

(SIR JOHN GIELGUD)

Toronto, Sept. 22.

Peter Lawrence & Jerry Leider (in association with Tennent Productions Ltd.) presentation of John Gielgud in a three-part solo performance, based on George Rylands' Shakespearean Anthology. At Royal Alexandra, Toronto, Sept. 22, '58; $4 top.

After an eight years' absence from Broadway—he was last there in "The Lady's Not For Burning"—Sir John Gielgud is back on this continent for a reading of Shakespeare's "Ages of Man," it's a chautauqua-type recital of the great bard, in which Shakespeare is occasionally but not often dominated by the actor.

Gielgud, over here for a 13-weeks' tour of mainly one-nighters, many of them university towns, is giving a recital of Shakespeare readings ranging from youth to manhood to old age. He is doing these in a dinner jacket before a black backdrop, plus lectern. After the Toronto opening, Gielgud might better learn his lines and drop the idiot board.

Old Vic grad remains a master of diction in his Shakespearian readings from George Ryland's anthology. He ranges from Romeo to Hamlet and Macbeth with excerpts from The Kings cycle. Finale is Prospero's speech from "Winters Tale" in which the bard asks for the tolerance of the audience.

From King Lear backwards, Gielgud deals with death, sickness and sleep, as quoted from Shakespeare, with this strictly a lecture. Ruled by the lectern of the pedagog, who can be as tiresome as a drunk in a dining car, Gielgud picks up because of the sheer beauty of the bard's writing and the declamation skill.

The management is contemplating bringing the one-man show to Broadway following the tour, which runs through Dec. 20.

A Lovely Light

Abingdon, Va., Sept. 23.

Robert Porterfield presentation of three-act chronicle by Dorothy Stickney; staged by Howard Lindsay; costume by Bergdorf Goodman. Stars Dorothy Stickney. At Barter Theatre, Abingdon, Va., Sept. 22, '58.

"A Lovely Light" is Dorothy Stickney's romanticized description of the life of the not-long-dead American poetess, Edna St. Vincent Millay. In what she terms "a chronicle" of Miss Millay's life, Miss Stickney does not attempt analysis; she merely selects from the letters and poems, adding an occasional bit of biographical commentary, to present a rather emotional and personalized account of the poetess.

Poetry is thus used to underline the events. These are not necessarily sequenced to fit the episode biographically. Actually Miss Millay wrote of emotions she was to experience long before they were felt.

Miss Stickney's acting and rhetoric are pro, of course, and she is able to sustain and divert successfully in her solo performance. But she is at her best as the comedienne and her emotional involvement with the first act glosses over one of her finer talents.

As the colorful life of Miss Millay unfolds, a variety of moods, crises, conflicts and sorrows are seen. Several minor facets of the poetess' life are lucidly illustrated which would go unmentioned in a study of the poetry alone. Vincent's preoccupation with money, and her frugality, as well as her democratic individuality are well treated.

As a curio Miss Stickney's work should interest off-Broadway or concert-type audiences. Marg.

Paul Beisman, managing director of the American Theatre, St. Louis, and the Municipal Opera there, is at home and in satisfactory condition after undergoing surgery. He's now spending a couple of hours daily at his office.

Upcoming "Nine Lives of Michael Todd," by the late Art Cohn, who crashed in the same plane accident with the producer, was assiduously checked and crosschecked by Random House, says prexy Bennett Cerf. Theatrical attorney Arnold Grant, who proceeded against Todd; Chicago industrialist Col. Henry Crown, who loaned millions to Todd; Marlene Dietrich, and others, were among those who were carefully checked on some of the facts in the book.

Marta Cohn wrote the epilogue to "Nine Lives," completing her late husband's blog of the showman which took two years' work.

Howell-Mark Hanna Merger

Molly Binion, sole beneficiary of the late literary agent Mark Hanna's estate — business, apartment, etc.—has merged with the Miriam Howell agency. She is carrying on the Hanna business which, in effect, has been her dual responsibility for the 24 years she was associated with the literary and talent agent who died last month at 59.

Miss Binion decided she could continue better servicing the writers in the Hanna stable by hooking up with an established agency, instead of adding new manpower and going it alone.

Dell's Hot One-Shots

Dell Publishing "Liz & Mike," 25c one-shot, which got on the newsstands a month after the showman's fatal plane crash last spring, has gone back to press twice, with 700,000 copies sold to date. A serious one-shotter, "1,000 Hints for Teens," did so well (500,000 copies) that the publisher is bringing it out as a quarterly starting next February. Richard L. Williams, editorial director of Dell's special projects, has two more due in October: "Brigitte" (as in Bardot) and "Ricky" (as in Nelson).

Mrs. Dorothea Zack Hanle, editor of Everywoman's until it was purchased by Family Circle, has joined Dell as women's editor and will edit the "Dell 1,000 Hints" quarterly, plus three other annual mags: "1,000 Ideas for Christmas," "1,000-Recipe Cookbook" and "Dell Barbecue Cookbook." Mrs. Jean Ramer is another new staffer, as entertainment editor of Screen Album and Dell Quarterly now in its 20th year; and the annuals, Hollywood Romances, Who's Who In Hollywood, Who's Who In TV and Radio, Modern Screen's Hollywood Yearbook, Hollywood Life Stories. Mrs. Ramer is ex-managing editor of Photoplay.

Robert Markel, former ed of Picture Week, has joined Dell as sports editor and will supervise the Baseball Annual, Baseball Stars, Who's Who in the Big Leagues, Stanley Woodward's Football Annual and Dell Basketball Annual.

Buchwald's Literary Prize

Art Buchwald, columnist for the Paris edition of the N.Y. Herald Tribune, won the annual "good humor" literary prize here for his first novel, now out in French, "A Gift From the Boys." Called the Prix De La Bonne Humeur, the remuneration came to $475.

This is Buchwald's first novel, though collections of his columns have been published. Yearly award is handed out for the wittiest work, and Buchwald commented it was a serious thing getting a humor prize. Book will be made into a pic in Italy this summer by Stanley Donen. It is about a deported Yank gangster who gets a going-away gift of a heady chorine.

Buchwald won the prize unanimously from a jury which included Marcel Pagnol and the originator of the prize, Dorothy Gould.

Job Ain't Steady

After 29 years, John A. Rose, Denver correspondent for VARIETY, has resigned to move his family to Yuma, Colo., some 142 miles from the state capital.

Marjorie Barrett, on the Rocky Mountain News, is taking over from Rose. She's daughter of the novelist, William E. Barrett long a Denver resident.

Ustinov's HCL

Peter Ustinov's high cost of literature deal with Atlantic Monthly and Little, Brown calls for a $21,500 package deal for seven brief articles which will run first in the magazine and will be compiled in book form by the LB publishing house. Actor will write on anything he chooses.

Carlton Cole set the deal.

Redgrave's 'Mask Or Face'

That accomplished British actor, Michael Redgrave, has written an erudite but far from egghead book on the actor's craft, "Mask Or Face" (Heinemann; $2.50). Based mainly on lectures he has given Redgrave discusses "The Method," the difference between stage and film acting, Shakespearian roles, his work as a stage director, and various other aspects of his job.

This is no book of theatrical chitchat. It provides an absorbing glimpse into what makes a serious actor tick and is written with grace and insight. Lavishly illustrated with scenes from his various plays and films this is not only an excellent Redgrave souvenir for all his fans, but a worthwhile addition to any library being built up by a theatre enthusiast. Rich.

As timely as the headlines—an authentic, explosive novel about the meteoric rise (and fall) of a big-money TV Quiz show

Advertised as a game of skill, an honest contest of wits, it was the highest-rating show on any network. Week after week, audiences gasped at the phenomenal knowledge displayed by ordinary people, waited in suspense while the large money prizes were handed out...

But the men behind the scenes took another view. They controlled the questions, the contestants, the timing. To them it was just another job: to build a TV show that would hit the top ten fast. So Roger Norden, account executive at one of the old-line advertising agencies, gave them Put N'Take — the biggest TV quiz ever devised, based on the sound principle that some of the "peons" have a lot of facts stuffed in their heads — and every "hick" is money mad.

"Bob Foreman strings along with his characters the same as a ventriloquist uses a dummy to say many things that need saying but which it isn't politic for an important man in the TV rat race to say with his own mouth. It's a fun book and a great deal of the fun is between the lines . . ."

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

The economic bombs that made Hiroshima and Nagasaki out of Lou Walters' Cafe de Paris in N.Y. and Herman Hover's Ciro in L.A. and caused many other mortalities across the country, were generally believed to have been talent-made. Salary demands slugged the niteries into oblivion. That's the coroner's verdict, anyway.

But any name performer can tell a different story. Lillian Roth, for instance, in "Beyond My Worth." In the middle of that book she tells of the sluggings a performer takes in niteries, and her worst case deals with a top hotel in the west.

How To Lose A Million

Why an act that would gladly work at the Waldorf for $5,000 a week would spurn $15,000 along the Vegas Strip has baffled cafe owners who had to curry to this same talent between the two towns. Trying to stay in the game while running short of blue chips is not unfamiliar to gamblers and running niteries never had the security of running a Federal Reserve Bank.

It's three-handed poker and each one hopes to control the other. The entertainer hopes he has the audience eating out of his hand and the cafe owner hopes he has the entertainer just where he wants him. The paying client hopes he will get more than his money's worth. When they all are in harmony you have a great show.

But it is the performer's job, not the manager's to unlock the hearts of an audience. If he does it so well the place is a sellout, he looks for a basic guarantee plus a percentage for the extra biz he has brought in. However, good business with a small overhead is a cafe owner's idea of a fair shake.

When he finds himself forced to pay more and make less he screams the demands of talent are closing his biz.

Miss Roth details how one works up from the basement, and in her case a pretty damp and dismal one, to $1,000 a week and the long haul as in-betweener where managers admire a comeback but say a cheap act is not for them.

When she finally arrived at $12,000 a week, even here she was not free from all the problems that go with being one against a machine, for a performer in a nitery or a hotel isn't part of a team, or at least is never judged to be such by an audience.

For "Tomorrow" Read "Today"

This is why arguments over billing which seem ridiculous and venal to outsiders is so important to an act. Miss Roth tells of a booking she got while Metro was filming "I'll Cry Tomorrow." She does not name the hotel, and gives the manager the concealing name of Harry Burns.

Two weeks before her act was to open she got a call from him asking if she would take equal billing with a comedian. It was explained it was a new hotel and had booked several big names in the hope of strengthening the opening show.

This would not be such a problem in a night club where they have a multiple bill, but hotels cater to single stars, and this is one of the nicer reasons for working in the hotels. However, she decided not to be difficult and said okay to the split billing.

When she arrived at the hotel, however, her equal billing had disappeared. She was cut down to half size and dropped out of the ads altogether. When she complained, it was explained it was a mistake and would be taken care of tomorrow. Next day, no change. So she wrote to Mr. Burns saying that she so admired a man who could keep his word.

Mr. Burns Does A Burn

Walking through the lobby of the hotel some time later, she heard a roar from the barbershop. It was from Mr. Burns, his face contorted with rage.

"You," he shouted, "come in here! How dare you write such a letter?"

"How dare you violate your agreement?" she wanted to know.

She held up the morning paper. Her name was not in the ad. He slapped the paper out of her hand and thundered, "Sit down!"

The upshot of the interview was he told her he'd fix her, he'd give her only 12 minutes on the show. "Use one more minute and I'll have you blacked out." For an act that ran 35 minutes, 12 minutes was a turning a trout into sardine.

Efforts to contact her union official were in vain, and not surprising, because he was working for the same Mr. Burns on the side. He was handling Burns' chorus line—at least he was until his union fired him.

Seed Of 'Get Tough' Policy

On every turn the power of Mr. Burns was evident to the performer. She could have quit or she could have fought it out, and she preferred to do the latter. After all, she wasn't there to entertain Mr. Burns, but the people who paid Mr. Burns' keep as well as her own. She came through admirably, but there's no denying that such treatment hardens a performer in his or her dealings with management.

That many of them will work for $500 a week in a strawhat theatre or take a part in a tv show which is gone and forgotten in an hour, but will not slice one nickel off their fat fees for a nitery is due to instances like this which may not happen often to one performer, but happens at least once to every performer.

Generally speaking, hotel management and hotel audiences are better behaved than those handling and attending separate saloons. Even different audiences at these places differ, the dinner crowd in a hotel being notably more quiet than those who come in for a midnight frolic, and, frequently half-crocked, want to perform as well.

Mondays Strictly For Blues Singers

Monday audiences, like the waiters, orchestra and performers, are beat. Friday audiences are family affairs. Saturday crowds are the worst for a performer to handle and generally the noisiest. A hostile table can pop up anywhere, any time, but the weekend whooper-uppers can almost be guaranteed to be built-in. All these are primarily performers' problems.

Performers find that big eastern towns like more subtle entertainment, the middle west simplicity, and the south more bombastic delivery. Everywhere the performer, if liked professionally, doesn't necessarily rate social acceptance as well. Perhaps this goes also for managers.

Bedouin's Bonifaces Same End

According to Lillian Roth, audiences are not what they were in the roaring '20s. They don't race from one night spot to another. The unsettled state of the world has settled them a bit. So they dine more quietly and go home earlier. Biz falls off and more managers of niteries, like the Arabs of old, quietly fold their tents and folding chairs and disappear from the records of the tax collectors.

That's life, and the performer is only a small part of why it is so.

CARL BRISSON

Carl Brisson, 64, nitery singer, film and musical comedy actor, died Sept. 24 in Copenhagen of jaundice, while on a visit to his native country. Brisson is best remembered on the nitery circuits in the United States where he was labeled the "older girls' Sinatra" having played some of the more fashionable cafes and hotels on the class circuit. Brisson was regarded as boxoffice for the haute-monde clientele and was booked in for long periods. He played the Versailles, N. Y., for example, for 12 weeks. He worked the Waldorf-Astoria, Plaza and other hostelries in New York as well as the Palmer House, Chicago, and others.

Brisson's first public appearances were as a boxer, winning the amateur lightweight championship at the age of 15 under his given name, Carl Pedersen. Later he became welterweight champion of Central Europe and Scandinavia. He bowed as a dancer in 1916 and later added singing while touring South Africa in revues. He debuted in England in 1921 and two years later played Prince Danilo in "The Merry Widow" which he did in revival form for many years all over the world. His last rendition of that role was in Los Angeles in 1951.

Brisson also appeared in films including "The Manxman," directed by Alfred Hitchcock in 1929. In 1934 he played in "Murder at the Vanities" opposite Kitty Carlisle and with a cast including Victor McLaglen and Jack Oakie. His Broadway musical bow was in an illfated Sigmund Romberg operetta, "Forbidden Melody" in 1936 where he made a favorable impact despite the unfavorable reception given the show. After a tour of England, Brisson returned to the United States where he settled into cafe work.

He was well-known for his charitable works in the Scandinavian countries and was frequently decorated by royalty. He received the Order of Dannebrog from King Frederick IX in 1939 and also the Swedish order of Vasa. He also endowed an orphan home in his native country.

Over 3,000 attended the funeral in Copenhagen and flags were at half-mast for the late singing idol of Denmark. Premier Hans Hansen and Julius Hansen, Mayor of Copenhagen, were among the pallbearers. A requiem mass was offered for the star who, last Thursday (25), a day before his death, was converted to the Roman Catholic Church. He had been in the Komune Hospital in his native Copenhagen for three months, suffering from cancer of the liver.

Survived by his wife, the former Cleo Willard, and his son, producer Frederick Brisson, who is married to actress Rosalind Russell, and a grandson.

JOHN MAY

John May, a sales executive of Screen Gems, Inc., died Sept. 23 when a private plane in which he was a passenger crashed into a swamp near the Salisbury, N.C. airport. Also killed was Charlotte, N.C., advertising executive Eugene Sink, who was at the controls. Salisbury police theorized that the private plane has made a poor landing at the airport, had been pushed back onto a runway, and had crashed while attempting a takeoff.

May joined Screen Gems in September, 1957. He had previously been associated with Ziv Television and with TV stations WXEX-TV, Richmond, Va., and WMTW-TV, Portland, Me.

Survived by his wife, son and daughter.

MILTON SCOTT

Milton C. Scott, Jr., 51, chief engineer and executive of WCKT, Miami, Florida, died Sept. 20 in that city. A pioneer in the broadcasting field, Scott joined radio station WIOD in 1925 as its sole licensed radio operator. In 1956, when WIOD was supplanted by WCKR and WCKT (Biscayne Television Corp.), he became chief engineer of WCKT. In that capacity at WCKT, he instituted the latest electronic improvements developed for telecasting and supervised many of the engineering details of the new station.

A resident of South Florida since 1926, he was active in the communication areas of defense and disaster.

Survived by his wife and son.

tionately via audience appreciation of the visual values.

For instance, Mark Robson shot "Inn of the Sixth Happiness" in England and Wales instead of on location in Formosa. A set was built in London and another outdoor one was constructed in Wales. Robson said he defied the ordinary person to tell the difference in locales. Yet, shooting in the London studios, with all the modern equipment at hand, certainly reduced costs.

Noting the current trend in "epics," Huston said it was developing largely in contradistinction to television. "I am not sure it will last," he added. "There's always room for the painter of frescoes and the artist with simple black-and-white drawings." The subject increasingly will determine the treatment, he held.

star answered: "They all say 'why don't you send more good pictures?' They stress that good stories make good pictures, as though this is a new idea. And you have to explain that good stories are hard to find, that nobody ever starts out to make a lousy picture. Sometimes they confuse direction and acting with writing. If an actor has a plum part written for him, they credit the actor or director, whereas it should go to the writer. And conversely, sometimes when an actor and director come off better with a character than the way it was written, they don't grasp that. But I suppose we shouldn't expect them to.

"I heard occasional complaints about the teenage, horror and gorilla pictures. I told them they don't condemn books because pulps are put out, and by the same token they shouldn't condemn our industry because of this type of product. There is a tendency to generalize," commented Peck.

Actor's next starring vehicle is "On the Beach," for Stanley Kramer. Film rolls in Australia in January.

Dear Boys,

You have just completed an unprecedented 20 week run for me at the fabulous Tropicana Hotel. The Hollywood Reporter called you "tremendous" and America's top comedy duo. Variety said you were hilarious and the number one comedy team working today.

They should have said more—you're the all time greatest. See you next year.

YANKS STEAL EUROPE'S SEX

MCA-TV Will Recoup $50,000,000 Par Library Coin By End of Month

MCA-TV, which committed itself to pay $50,000,000 for the Paramount library, should gross just about that by the end of next month.

To date, in five months of active selling, MCA-TV has grossed over $40,000,000. The 700 Paramount pix have gone to 18 U.S. markets at this date, with most of the stations signing up for the full library. Virtually all the major markets, except Chicago, have been sold. Chicago stations now have been given the price list and licensing period for each pic, as per custom.

Latest markets sold are WJW-TV, Cleveland, and WITI-TV, Milwaukee, each buying the full library. The Milwaukee deal was made subject to the FCC's approval of Storer's purchase of the station. WJW-TV also is a Storer outlet. Another four markets, representing about $4,000,000 in billings, are known to be close to signing.

Remaining for sizable coin are the so-called middle markets, such as San Francisco, Pittsburgh, Hartford, Charleston, Dallas, and Providence. No one's guessing at MCA-TV, but seasoned forecasts are that 'Damn Yankees' Indeed!

Milwaukee, Oct. 7.

Baseball fans here had themselves a particularly sorrowful day on Monday (6) when the Yankees clobbered the Braves in the fifth game of the World Series at Yankee Stadium.

Film exhibitors, especially, took it on the chin with the city glued to radio and video sets. One of the key houses in town was showing "Damn Yankees" and biz was in keeping with the title.

Ford Fund Grant To Help Develop U.S. Playwrights

A Ford Foundation grant of $213,600 for the development of new American playwrights has been clarified and put into operation. Covering a two-year period, the fund is designed to give as many as 10 authors a year an opportunity of sitting in during the entire course of the production of their plays.

The grant, based on the assumption that most unknown playwrights work at other jobs for their livelihood, involves underwriting salary losses and other ex-

IMPORTED FILMS MAY LOSE B.O.

By FRED HIFT

"They're stealing our thunder!" That's the complaint these days of the independent U.S. distributors of foreign films as they note the rising sex content of the Hollywood output. Importers are only half-serious, of course, but underneath it all there's a note of real concern.

"The American films have grabbed the ball from the Europeans and are running with it," said Edward L. Kingsley of Kingsley-International. "If they keep it up, they'll be outstripping the imports in sex frankness. It'll take the edge off our pictures.

There's a degree of irony in the fact that, as overseas producers seek to "adapt" their output to American tastes and demands, by which they often understand muting of the sex angle for the U.S. Production Code and Legion of Decency, Hollywood is taking a leaf from the Europeans and is giving its films "the works." Part of the reason, of course, is that American producers have taken more and more to adapting hit plays and novels, which in turn were partly successful precisely because they are candid.

Foreign films in the States during recent years have thrived—at the popular level—because of their reputation of being sexy. Many of them are sold to the U.S. public on that theme and plug it unrestrainedly in their newspaper ads. The American pix ads sometimes play up sex situations not actually "delivered" on the screen.

Pope Pius XII's Constant Anxiety For Moral Tone of Screen, Video

Pope Pius XII, who suffered a paralyzing stroke at his summer home at Castel Gandolfo Monday morning (6), has been intensively concerned during his reign with the impact of motion pictures and television on Roman Catholics. His approach, as was emphasized again in last year's Encyclical letter, has been largely positive and he has striven, on several occasions, to clearly define his views on the dual topics of film and video.

In June of 1955, he defended film censorship by the state as justified "in order to defend the common civil and common heritage." The spirit of our times, he told film industry representatives from all over the world, "is unreasonably intolerant" of intervention by public authority. He added that leaders in the film business themselves should censor immoral pictures and produce "good, noble and beautiful films."

In this same speech, the Pope discussed the concept of "the ideal film" and said it had to "strengthen and uplift man in the consciousness of his dignity," increase his knowledge and love of the lofty natural position conferred on him by his Creator, strengthen his con-

Brussels Expo Counts Up Its Fiascos & Gyps

By JOHN FLORQUIN

Brussels Oct. 7.

Baron Moens de Fernig, commissioner-general of the 1958 Expo, boasted a 35,000,000 attendance before the Fair opened its doors. Skeptics barbed the irascible baron who has been a picturesque target for humorous epigrams. But the 35,000,000 target has not only been reached but will be exceeded by Oct. 20, when the International Exposition folds.

But what about private enterprise at the Fair? To say the least, results are discouraging. Business has been bad, prices were steep. Concessionaires were roped in,

Germany's Anne Frank Sequel Wins Top Radio Prize on Human Rights

Venice, Oct. 7.

Germany, oddly enough, won the Human Rights prize for the best dramatic radio work at the 10th annual competition of the Italia Prize. Ernest Schnabel wrote and produced the documentary on what happened to Anne Frank when the Broadway play version ended. The "Sequel of Anne Frank" received the $2,000 prize. Even the Israeli member of the jury voted for Germany in this instance.

Australian Broadcasting System won first prize in the literary and dramatic category with an hour-

The disk and tape biz, including playback equipment, will climb to a new all-time gross of $1,300,000,000 in 1959, according to Robert Baggs, head of RCA Victor's radio-phonograph division.

Baggs, in spotlighting the potential of home music on disks and tapes to a meeting of retailers in New York last week, made the following breakdown of anticipated sales: $575,000,000 in high fidelity phonograph equipment, a major percentage of which will be in stereo; $125,000,000 in low-priced phonographs; $400,000,000 in disk sales; $50,000,00 in tape sales; and $14,000,000 in tape machine sales.

Drive-In on Deck of Shopping Centre In Downtown Dover Makes 'History'

By GEORGE GILBERT

Dover, N.J., Oct. 7.

Drive-ins traditionally have been located well outside urban centres due to the need for large tracts that could be acquired for a reasonable sum. In the past no developer or exhibitor could visualize construction of an open air theatre accommodating hundreds of cars in the centre of a "downtown" shopping district.

But through the joint efforts of Walter Reade, a former president of the Theatre Owners of America and head of the circuit bearing his father's name, and builder Milton L. Ehrlich a 608-car ozoner opened here Saturday (4) in the heart of this city of some 15,000 people.

The Dover Drive-in, known as the Theatre in the Sky, is a vital part of Ehrlich's 34-store Dover Shopping Center Inc. which he estimates represents an investment of about $9,000,000 including the ozoner. Latter is built on the top deck of two-level parking area that's said to be the largest of its kind in the country. It provides five acres of free parking space for use of shoppers.

Upper level, whose absence of conventional drive-in speaker posts makes it unique, is used by daytime shoppers as a place to leave their cars. But at night it becomes an open air theatre replete with a 60' x 130' screen, an L-shaped concession stand, children's playground and walk-in facilities for 200 patrons.

Among tenants at the Dover Shopping Center, aside from the Reade Drive-in, are Woolworth, J. C. Penney, a Food Fair market and a bowling alley. A large department store will also rise on a site now being excavated. "Before the shopping centre was built," Ehrlich pointed out, "property values in the downtown section were steadily decreasing but in the past 12 to 18 months they have doubled."

Periphery shopping centres, Ehrlich feels, aren't always the answer to generating more business. Frequently they're served by only one highway and the limited access tends to deter customers. Nevertheless they're strong factors in drawing trade away from established downtown merchants.

In contrast to peripheral shopping centres which may be located on one road, Ehrlich emphasized that Dover is the hub of northwest Jersey with five highways converging in the city. His development, he added, has revived Dover's downtown shopping area and there's no reason why the same thing can't be duplicated in other cities whose merchants have seen trade drifting out of town.

Such future developments, Ehr-

'Brigitte' Platter 1st For Distel in Dot Pact (With B.B. on the Cover)

Sacha Distel, Brigitte Bardot's fiance, has been tapped for U.S. disk release by Dot Records. The guitarist-singer records in France for Ray Ventura's Versailles label.

His first Dot release will be his own composition, "Brigitte," with English lyrics by Fred Ebb. The Dot album currently in preparation will feature a cover photo of Mlle. Bardot.

Distel's tunes are published in the U.S. by Rayven Music which is run by Duke Niles for Ventura. Distel made his tv bow on Ed Sullivan's CBS-TV show last week (28) for which he received a reported $5,000.

Legit May Out-Price Self, Sez John Shubert

John Shubert, presiding last Monday (6) at the annual stockholders meeting of the Shubert-controlled Select Theatres Corp., expressed concern over the high cost of theatregoing. Rapping the trend towards increased ticket prices, Shubert said that he was in favor of keeping the b.o. scale down to a $7-$8 top.

However, he also made it clear that increases will be necessary if expenses continue to climb. Such a situation, he feels, might result in the theatre out-pricing itself.

Disagreements Break Out Among Irish, But May Still Try Drama Fest in 1959

Dublin, Oct. 7.

Despite the collapse of Dublin's 1958 International Theatre Festival, the city may try anew in 1959. If so, it will be set as a commercial project as well as a tourist lure.

Preliminary discussions have been held under the chairmanship of Louis Elliman, president of Dublin's Gaiety Theatre, managing director of the J. Arthur Rank cinema circuit here, and a director of the newly-built Ardmore Studios. Elliman was unconnected with the earlier venture, except in making the Gaiety Theatre available to tie-in with the organizing committee's plans.

A farcical situation was created this year by the mixups over scheduled plays. One play, Alan McClelland's dramatization of James Joyce's "Ulysses," was subsequently rejected and then Sean O'Casey refused the producer's request to make changes in "The Drums of Father Ned."

A third blowup involved the withdrawal of a new play by Samuel Beckett, an expatriot Dubliner now living in Paris. Much of the whole sorry sequence apparently stemmed from the fact that although Brendan Smith was director of the Festival, he was subject to the veto of a committee not knowing about show business.

O'Casey has warred with his countrymen on several occasions, but this time producer Jim Fitzgerald had sought changes in "Drums" for technical not content reasons. O'Casey refused and withdrew the piece. The Joyce play was dropped because the Festival committee was nervous that it might offend clerics.

Dublin's Theatre Festivals have been laden with trouble. The 1957 edition was notable for the arrest of producer Alan Simpson at the Pike Theatre on charge of presenting an "obscene" play, Tennessee William's "Rose Tattoo." The case was thrown out.

10th Anni of Franz Lehar

An affectionate tribute to Franz Lehar to commemorate the 10th anniversary of his death, on Oct. 24, has been written by Maria von Peteani, based on her larger autobiography of the composer.

The illustrated booklet published by Glocken Verlag, Ltd., London, subsidiary of the Viennese publishing house of that name and tied to Franz Lehar's Glocken Verlag Inc., Sweetsburg, Quebec, Canada, briefly describes Lehar's beginnings, and his struggles both with the world and himself in order to find his ultimate objective. Lehar's magnum opus, of course, is "The Merry Widow," but he's also renowned for many other operettas, including "Count of Luxembourg," "Gypsy Love," "Eva," "Land of Smiles," and others. Lehar's works also induced Richard Tauber to channel his talents to a lighter phase and, at one time, he was known as "Lehar's tenor." Lehar died in 1948.

Blanche Sweet Back

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Blanche Sweet, one of the screen's immortals when movies were young, returns to film acting as guest star in a "Thin Man" segment at M-G-M-TV.

Actress last faced the cameras in 1931.

PAIGE, NEGRO TWIRLER, IN MEX FILM DEBUT

Kansas City, Oct. 7.

Leroy "Satchel" Paige, the ageless baseball tosser, is giving up the diamond to take on an embryonic career in motion pictures. He confirmed at his home in Kansas City that he has signed with film producer Chester Erskine for a role in "The Wonderful Country." Paige reports Wednesday (8) in Mexico City to begin work in the film. He'll play a sergeant in a story based on a book by Thomas Lea.

Top pitcher for the Miami team of the International League for the past three seasons, Paige said he is through with baseball if he can make the grade in films. He is reported to have earned a fortune playing in the Negro leagues before the majors were opened to colored players.

Paar Gets Nod As 'Personality of Year'

Washington, Oct. 7.

Jack Paar, the insomaniac's delight, has been named "Personality of the Year" for 1958 by the Variety Club of Washington, Tent 11.

Paar will be given a plaque at the club's annual dinner-dance at the Statler Hotel Nov. 22. Previous winners include Al Jolson, Arthur Godfrey, Joe E. Brown, Perry Como, Jane Froman, Eddie Fisher, Steve Allen, Pat Boone, and Kitty Kallen.

The dinner will climax the fund-raising drive which has as its most recent project a $200,000 contribution toward the Variety Club Research Center of Children's Hospital.

Modugno's N. J. Kudos

Atlantic City, Oct. 7.

Domenico Modugno, Italian singer ("Nel Blu Dipinao Di Blu"). was made an honorary citizen of Somers Point, resort suburban community, last week.

Point's publicity - conscious mayor, Fred Chapman, on learning Modugno was in the city, invited him to a dinner attended by some 20 persons, and conferred the honor with news cameras and local and wire reporters present.

BAMBI'S BAMBINO BOWS

Belinda Alexander In Stage 'Debut' At Age Two

Augusta, Me., Oct. 7.

Belinda Alexander, two-year old daughter of Bambi Linn and Rod Alexander, made her stage bow here with her parents in their "Dance Jubilee," a new dance novelty booked by Columbia Artists Management for a tour of 90 dates this season.

Fledgling ballerina twirls on stage in a "Schooldays" number based on Gus Edwards nostalgia.

Conceived and staged by Alexander, "Jubilee" is a panorama of American dance patterns, theatre, social and balletic, from minstrel days to the present.

Pair returned to New York (5) to do numbers from their routine on Ed Sullivan Show.

Columbia Artists, through Humphrey Doulens and Chris Schang, have booked tour through mid-February. Second tour which will include Coast time, is projected for next season.

Melville Burke, Broadway director, comes out of his Westport retirement, to act as a narrator of the changing dance years.

Legion of Decency 'B' Ratings Drop 40% in Year

Having previously officially recognized that not all motion pictures are made for adults and juveniles alike, the Roman Catholic National Legion of Decency during the past year sharply reduced the number of B (Morally Objectionable in Part for All) ratings for films.

The development represents a long stride forward on the part of the Church and is due to the innovation of the Legion's third "A" rating (Morally Unobjectionable for Adults) last December. It is this rating which has absorbed a great many of the films which normally would have received a "B" tag. During the past 11 months, the number of "B"s correspondingly

Frisco's Retort To Met's Bing

San Francisco, Oct. 7.

Kurt Herbert Adler, who should know better, took umbrage last week at some depreciatory remarks about U.S. opera by Rudolf Bing, who should know better.

Bing, general manager of New York's Met, casually told a United Press reporter that the U.S., outside New York, has no opera "worth speaking of," that he saw no "chance for any real serious development of opera in this country," partly because the U.S. public "has been so educated to the star cult that even the smallest

Grace M. Mayer's Photo Book Mirrors Beaucoup Show Biz: 1890-1910

Theatre buffs will have themselves a down-front, on-the-aisle seat when they pour over Grace M. Mayer's "Once Upon a City" (Macmillan; $15) a loving, touchingly-written account behind the celebrated photographs made by Percy Byron from the period of 1890 to 1910 in Gotham. Edward Steichen contributes the foreword.

Byron presented the Museum of the City of New York with some 10,000 negatives and prints covering one of the most colorful eras in the city's history and it was Miss Mayer, learned curator of prints at the museum, who provided the appropriate text for the Byron pictures.

There are handsome photographs of many show biz personalities because Byron and his family pioneered in stage photography. The reader will come upon memorable prints of Maude Adams, the Algerian Theatre in Coney Island,

'All Alone by the Telephone'?

Frankfort, Oct. 1.

Metro director Richard Brooks just fulfilled a longtime ambition of "getting away from the telephone and all those monsters"—and found it unbelievable mental torture.

Brooks took a 24-day trip on the freighter Golden Gate to Europe, to work on the script of his next film "Elmer Gantry" en route and to get away from it all. But, after a day at sea, he was yearning to hear a phone ring.

Explained Brooks, "The only thing you die of in Hollywood is failure. You don't die of a heart attack or tuberculosis, you die of failure. And you think you're a failure when nobody calls. I just kept waiting for a phone to ring . . ."

Brightest sight was when the ship docked at Antwerp and Brooks spotted a Metro exec standing on the pier and shouting "Have you seen VARIETY yet?" (with grosses on his "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof.") Brooks said, "My first thought was, why was he there? Was the picture a flop? But then I figured if it was a disaster, Metro wouldn't send anybody to meet me."

Bernstein's Como-Like 'At Home' May Revolutionize Longhair Concerts

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Not altogether revolution but partly evolution growing out of trends in other branches of entertainment, the New York Philharmonic this season is innovating a Thursday "preview" of its Friday-Saturday-Sunday programs. But it is much more than that. It is, for one thing, Leonard Bernstein's informal "at home" to some 3,000 "friends." It is the projection of sheer theatrical personality from the traditionally austere podium of longhair music.

Evolutionary interpretation was supported by the new conductor, Broadway - conditioned Leonard Bernstein, displaying a superb gift of gab reminiscent of Deems Taylor in his radio heyday. When Bernstein dissects Charles Ives' Symphony No. 2 and traces its derivative passages on the piano, the reminder is of another yesteryear radio personality, tune detective Sigmund Spaeth.

Other comparisons arise during the evening. In his magnificent-athomeness and relaxation, Bernstein is kin to Perry Como and when he bursts into song snatches, and piano bits he has traces of

Stew Hathaway Upped

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Stewart H. Hathaway, manager and assistant treasurer of the Beverly Hills Hotel, has been upped to veepee and managing director by Ben Silberstein, owner of the posh BevHills spot, long a favorite with show biz brass. Previous m.d. title was held by Hernando Courtright whose five-year contract as president of the hotel corporation was just about up when he resigned last month following policy differences with Silberstein.

Hathaway's hotel background is extensive including the Santa Barbara Ambassador, the Clift in Frisco, the Gaylord, in downtown L.A., and the Hollywood-Roosevelt.

SAM RAYBURN ORATES FOR TEXAS 'N' CLIBURN

Dallas, Oct. 7.

Sam Rayburn, speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, will act for the state of Texas in welcoming pianist Van Cliburn back to Dallas on Nov. 28. Cliburn, from Kilgore, won the G. B. Dealey award for music in 1952 when he was soloist with the Dallas Symphony Orchestra.

Cipango Club will host the press party and reception for the pianist, who will be soloist again Nov. 29 with the Dallas orch. State Fair Music Hall (4,120 seats) is SRO at $5 top for Cliburn's appearance.

Jimmy Stroocks Pass Up B'way Preem to Watch TV

For the first time in 45 years of playgoing, the James E. Stroocks will pass up tonight's (Wed.) preem of "Drink to Me Only," at the 54th Street Theatre, N. Y. They'll stay at their Manhattan apartment to watch the Patti Page show on NBC-TV.

The angle is that the television stanza will carry a remote from the Brooks Costume Co. workroom and office in New York, the gimmick being that the cast breaks into the establishment in search of outfits for a Halloween party. The sequence was taped last week.

Stroock is president of Brooks and his wife, Bianca, is a costume designer. They've never before missed a Broadway first-night, except when they were out of town or because of illness.

GOVT. AS FILMS' 'PROTECTOR'?

Property Master Sues Gregory Peck

In N.Y. Action Cite Stranding in Madrid During 'Thieves' Market' Misadventure

Production abroad may have its risks and perils for the producer, but it's no less risky for the individual craftsmen who may be signed up to work overseas on American locationers. Fact, which might well serve as a warning to others, is underscored by a suit currently pending in N.Y. Supreme Court.

It involves Samuel J. Martin, a property master, his wife Irene, and Gregory Peck. The human side of the story doesn't fully emerge in the dry legal papers.

Back in 1956, Peck, then planning to produce "Thieves Market" in Spain, signed an agreement with Martin to work on the picture in Madrid. Peck maintained he couldn't pay the Martins their fare to Spain. However, he agreed to give Martin between five and six months of work, a living allowance, and a later accounting of expenses incurred, such as the travel money. Jobs were scarce on the Coast, and the Martins agreed to the deal, arriving in Madrid on December 15, 1956. They found no preparation for filming, but received the stipulated weekly pay for six weeks.

After that, the pay stopped coming. To make matters worse, both Martins fell sick. Finding themselves penniless in Madrid, they sought unsuccessfully to reach either Peck or his coproducer Sy Bartlett. Eventually, someone from the United Artists office in Paris looked them up. Martin was in bed with a high fever. He was asked to sign a piece of paper, and did. This turned out to be a release, with the amounts to be paid Martin left blank.

Eventually, the Martins made their way to Switzerland and from there, with the help of the American consul, they managed to get back to the States. Prior to leaving, they had sold their house and car in Hollywood and they now live in New York.

"How could one human being do such a thing to another," Mrs. Martin, a refugee from behind the Iron Curtain, asked last week.

I can't get in to see Peck. Neither he nor any of his associates ever came to see us, though they knew how desperate our situation was."

So now the Martins are suing. The amount involved—$6,550.

20th Eager That Stevens Direct Oursler's Saga Of 'Story' as $10-Mil Film

Hollywood Oct. 7.

Twentieth-Fox reportedly is persistent in its attempt to sign George Stevens as producer-director of "The Greatest Story Ever Told." Latest talks were held during prexy Spyros Skouras' recent Coast trip. Studio had named Philip Dunne to produce the late Fulton Oursler's property when Stevens reportedly turned thumbs down on project.

It's believed newest talks for Stevens to helm filmization of the story of Jesus Christ at least did not result in a completely negative reply from the film-maker, and it seems likely that further talks are on tap. It stevens is signed for production, deal probably would be a participation.

Twentieth has earmarked $10,000,000 for project, a budget said to be twice that of any previous 20th production. Studio's purchase of the tome, which entails sharing of the profits by Oursler's estate, may involve over $2,000,000.

Paris Theatre, N.Y., plushest of the "east side" arties (it's actually just west of Fifth Ave.) marks its 10th anni this week.

'Eighth Day of Week' Has Obstacles Aplenty; Is It A German or Polish Pic?

"The Eighth Day of the Week," a German-Polish coproduction with a troubled history, continues to run an obstacle race.

The film was made in Poland as a cooperative venture between the Poles and the West Germans. When it was finished, and just before it was to go into the Cannes film festival this year, the Polish government objected and the picture was pulled. Then it couldn't find a distributor in Germany.

Eventually, after its showing at Venice, "Eighth Day" was bought for the U. S. by a group headed by Gene Gutowsky. Question then arose whether it'd be wise to release the film in the German version, it being basically a Polish story about a young married couple trying to put a roof over their heads. It quickly developed that no print of the Polish version could be obtained. Meanwhile, the film ran into trouble with U. S. Customs, censors on the side, which demanded several deletions.

Gutowsky is currently mulling the idea of taking the German version and dubbing it into Polish in Europe. Picture was originally shot in that language, with some of the closeups done in two versions, i.e. Polish and German. Reasoning is that the Polish version would hold considerable appeal to the large Polish-speaking population in the States.

NOW THEY'RE RAZING DRIVE-IN FOR SHOPS

Calgary, Alta., Oct. 7.

The Chinook Drive-in Theatre here has been demolished to make way for an $8,000,000 shopping centre. Built in 1949, it was the first drive-in theatre in Alberta.

Fred Levitt, manager of the Chinook, has been transferred to the Cinema Park, succeeding Ken McGregor who has accepted an executive post with the shopping centre.

No decision on a new location for the Chinook drive-in has been reached. F. H. Kershaw, general manager of Western Drive-in Theatres, Ltd., said one of the plans being discussed is a combined indoor-outdoor theatre with a capacity of 5,000.

HONG KONG SCIENCE FICTION

Corman Freres Will Join Shaws In Filming There

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Expanding to the Orient, Hollywood producer team of Roger and Gene Corman will make untitled science fiction film in Hong Kong early next year in association with the Shaw Bros., of that British crown colony. Film reportedly will carry a budget of $1,000,000.

Shooting starts after windup of Roger Corman's production of Rider Haggard's "She," which he'll turn out in Australia with Ray Films for American International release.

SUBSIDY NOTION IN NEW FOCUS

Uncle Sam is taking shape as the new father-image to "save" the American film industry. The situation is partly confusing and somewhat paradoxical in that the original exhibitors' plea to the Dept. of Justice, and the subsequent divorcement of theatres from studios, is now often called the seed which which yielded today's troubles (along with television) among theatrical producer-distributors and, by direct spillover, among the film theatres themselves.

The American film industry lives in and partly by constant dealings with the film industries of such countries as Britain, France, Italy, Germany, Japan, Mexico, Spain. In such countries Government "subsidy" is either a main or an important factor in film economics. Though traditionally "subsidy" has not had a good name in America, it is common enough, flourishing under euphemisms, though not in amusements. The shipping, aviation, natural gas, oil, wheat, meat and many another American industry thrive on direct or indirect handouts from the Federal Government. It is this "me, too" idea that is beginning to take root among the sorely-beset showmen of the film industry in America.

Hollywood film-makers, finding the present going rough, begin to think about government to pull its chestnuts out of the fire. Gradually, sentiment is being generated for some sort of governmental assistance, or "protection," of the film business.

It is as if, after years of looking down its nose at subsidized foreign industries, Hollywood had suddenly discovered that there are ways and means in which it might be able to make Washington share the economic responsibility. Pitch used is that the motion picture has grown into such an important medium of international communication that it must be protected if it is to survive.

Said Skouras

Considered most significant were the remarks recently of 20th-Fox prez Spyros P. Skouras in The New York Times. Noting that the business "must be protected," he said the industry had to be "for the good of the country" and the theatres should be helped by "protective legislation and supported."

And he added: "Let me add that practically all the motion picture industries of the world are subsidized by their government."

Heretofore the U.S. film business always has jealously guarded its individualistic private enterprise approach. It now appears to be forced into the opposite direction. The voices that speak out in favor of "more government" aid—which inevitably means greater government controls—are thoughtful ones, like Mark Robson, the director, who is also plugging that theme (see separate story).

Today, more than 50% of the industry's revenues come from abroad. The income is vital. Increasingly, Hollywood finds itself at a disadvantage by having to deal as an industry with a foregin government. Some take the view that Washington should take a more active part in helping the film industry get a fair shake overseas. In some isolated instances, this has been done.

The German film agreement, for instance, was negotiated on a governmental level, though the State Dept., as a rule does not conclude commercial agreements of this type. Various ambassadors have, from time to time, been asked to intercede for Hollywood with local governments when the going got rough.

The film men know that (1) the going is going to get even rougher, and (2) the government is in a position to bring pressures to bear which, normally, are not at the command of any single business.

That the Government needs Hollywood is without question. It was brought home to the industry forcefully in connection with the Soviet-

Shopping Centres (And Free Parking) Stimulate Puerto Rican Theatres

San Juan, Oct. 7.

Free parking space available at shopping centres is bringing about construction of the first new film theatres in Puerto Rico in 10 years. Plans for several new houses were disclosed yesterday (Mon.) by Rafael Cobian who owns the majority of the Island's theatres. All of the proposed cinemas will rise within shopping centres now being developed by the Ibec Realty Co. for Todos Supermarkets.

Cobian said that his decision to locate the theatres in the shopping centres was partly due to the large amount of free parking space patrons would find next to the cinemas. His first theatre will be at the 65th Infantry Shopping Center, a few blocks from the U. of Puerto Rico campus in suburban Rio Piedras. House, which will seat 750 patrons, will cost $350,000 completely equipped.

Cobian, who's negotiating to bring Cinerama films into the initial new theatre, revealed that the structure will be extra wide and semi-circular in shape to accommodate the Cinerama screen. House will form part of the six and a half acre shopping centre which will also have a bowling alley and 22 stores.

New theatres are now planned for two other Ibec shopping centres in metropolitan San Juan, Cobian disclosed. Ibec Realty is a subsidiary of the International Basic Economy Corp. of N. Y., which operates Todos Supermarkets in Puerto Rico.

Total rentals in distinct view are in the neighborhood of $60,000,000 worldwide.

Brando's Pennebaker's London HQ for 3 Pix There in Next 4 Years

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Marlon Brando's Pennebaker Productions will set up a British subsidiary with headquarters in London, after first of year. Plans, according to exec producer George Glass, just returned from supervising company's "Shake Hands With the Devil," James Cagney starrer, in Ireland, call for a minimum of three features during next four years in Britain or on Continent.

Establishment of a British company will enable Pennebaker to take advantage of financial bonuses, both taxwise and through the Eady Plan, Glass says. London, he notes, is rapidly becoming the crossroads for international casting and new company will be able to effect more weddings of foreign and U.S. talent.

Cost of using foreign locations decreases proportionately with their proximity to company's home base, Glass points out, and there is a multiplicity of locations close to London fresh to American audiences. Glass is partnered as exec producers of Pennebaker with Walter Seltzer.

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Royal Command Performance-bound, the Danny Kayes, William Goetzes and Frank Sinatra head for London Oct. 24 to attend screening of "Me and the Colonel" Oct. 27.

Queen Elizabeth and members of royal family are skedded to be present at showing, after which Kaye returns immediately to Hollywood for his Paramount starrer, "The Five Pennies."

Anthony Mann has drawn directorial ehores on Universal's "Spartacus."

U's Co-Production With Schneer; But 'Gulliver' To Be Columbia Release

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Universal Pictures, which previously filed a protest with the Motion Picture Assn. Title Registration Bureau over Charles Schneer's registration of "The Travels of Lemuel Gulliver" as in conflict with its own "Gulliver's Travels," has closed a joint production deal with indie.

"Gulliver's Travels," based on the Jonathan Swift classic, will be co-produced by U and Schneer's Morningside Productions for Columbia Pictures release. Filmed in new Dynamation process and Technicolor, Jack Sher will direct from a script by himself, Arthur Ross and Sy Gomberg. Ray Harryhausen will handle special effects.

Pic is skedded for early 1959 camera work in Europe.

Metro's Hot & Fat 'Cat' Dominates September Boxoffice; 2-3-4 Spots To 'Pacific,' 'Gigi,' 'Big Country'

VARIETY's regular weekly boxoffice reports are summarized each month, retrospectively. Based on an average of 24 key situations, the source data constitute an adequate sampling of current releases but are not, of course, fully definite. An index of relative grossing strength in the U.S.-Canada market, the monthly report does not pretend to express total rentals.

By MIKE WEAR

The month of September found exhibitors cheered by some fresh releases but still annoyed by the absence of enough potent pictures to go around. The annual Labor Day weekend was stronger than it's been in recent years, but trade started getting spotty towards the end of the month, a pattern prevalent in recent years.

The Metro buster, "Cat on Hot Tin Roof," paced the boxoffice sweepstakes for the month, moving into No. 1 spot at the outset and never relinquishing the position through all of September. The Elizabeth Taylor-Burl Ives-Paul Newman opus, from the stage play of the same name, showed more than $1,600,000 gross in keys covered by VARIETY.

"South Pacific" (20th) was a sturdy second-place winner. The pic showed better than $1,000,000 gross on the month. It was No. 1 at the wickets in August. "Gigi" (M-G), which was fif h in August, pushed up to third position.

"Big Country" (UA) was a close fourth-place winner, being only a step behind "Gigi." "Reluctant Debutante" (M-G), which finished fourth in the preceding month, wound up fifth in September, moving as high as second spot in weekly tabulations once. "Windjammer" (NT), which benefitted from a flock of additional bookings last month, copped sixth money.

"Around World in 80 Days" (UA) landed seventh position as against sixth in August. "The Hunters" (20th) finished eighth although far from sensational in many keys. "Search for Paradise" (Cinerama) copped ninth place. It was seventh in August.

"Me and Colonel" (Col) wound up 10th, mainly on the draw of Danny Kaye. "Indiscreet" (WB), second-place winner in August, landed 11th place. "Naked and Dead" (UA), which was third in the preceding month, rounds out the Golden Dozen for last month. "Matchmaker" (Par) was the runner-up pic though it figured in VARIETY weekly totals only twice.

It Was Christmas & All the Boys --

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Majors currently planning $50,000,000 "Christmas package" releases for important Yule trade, also get under yearend line for Academy Oscar consideration. Most majors will be scheduling at least two features, one pure entertainment, other for more serious consideration.

Twentieth has three upcomers, "Inn Of Sixth Happiness," "Diary of Anne Frank," "Roots of Heaven." Columbia has "Seventh Voyage of Sinbad," "Last Hurrah" and "Bell, Book and Candle."

At United Artists, "I Want To Live," "Separate Tables" and "Lonelyhearts" are pending. Metro has "Tom Thumb," and, tentatively, "Some Came Running" and "The Journey."

Disney's entry is "Sleeping Beauty." Paramount will peg "Geisha Boy" and "The Buccaneer."

Universal goes to market with "Perfect Furlough"; Warners with "Auntie Mame" and "Home Before Dark."

John Sturges, director of "The Old Man and the Sea": "Technically this is the sloppiest picture I've ever made, but I think it's also the best." (Author Ernest Hemingway saw the film, liked it).

20th's New Budget-Film Unit Replacing Regal; One to Star Red Skelton

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Associated Producers Inc., has been formed as new indie to produce moderate budget features for 20th-Fox release. George Warren, former production cost comptroller at Metro, heads firm, with William Magginetti to act as production supervisor, Harry Spaulding as story editor. Robert L. Lippert will be liaison with 20th.

First project is "Alaskan Highway." In prospect are 14 to 16 features budgetted at $250,000 to $750,000 to expand 20th's 1958-59 program. Current planning is for 20th to release one API film monthly starting in January. Subsid has seven other pix in prepping stage, four expected to roll in CinemaScope and color.

Pact has been signed for Red Skelton to star in an untitled script by Gene Fowler Jr. and Louis Vittes.

Apparently there are no further plans this time for Regal Films, which has been providing 20th with lowbudgetters. Its president, Edumund Baumgarten, may launch own indie film unit.

Lewis Rachmil Set With Lou Costello's 'Bride'

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Lewis Rachmil, who checked out of Columbia Pictures producer berth Oct. 1 after six years with company to enter indie work, will helm Lou Costello's "The Secret Bride of Candy Rock," for his first assignment.

Indie, with Edward Sherman acting as exec producer, will go out under banner of Col, which also is financing. Pic, scripted by Roland Barber and Lawrence Goldman, is skedded to roll in early 1959.

Roger Lewis to Wed

Roger Lewis, United Artists adpub director, and actress Lisa Daniels are to be married at Lewis' sister's home in Upper Montclair, N. Y., Oct. 19. Wedding trip is off for a month, Lewis having to await the return to the States of UA v.p. Max E. Youngstein.

Latter leaves shortly for a visit to Russia.

National Boxoffice Survey

Trade Continues Spotty; 'Yankees' No. 1, 'Cat' 2d, 'Pacific' 3d, 'Defiant' 4th, 'Gigi' 5th

Biz is okay this session for the b.o. blockbusters. It is with the lesser produce that exhibitors are having their trouble, and as usual the afternoon competition from the World Series is being blamed for the sluggish pace, notably with more doubtful pix. Much cooler weather in many sections of the country is providing little lift.

"Damn Yankees" (WB), just getting started last stanza, is forging ahead to become champ at the wickets currently. Pic is playing in some 21 keys covered by VARIETY. It is closely followed by "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G), which had been No. 1 for some five weeks in a row.

"South Pacific (20th) again is winding up third, same as last round. "Defiant Ones" (UA) is taking fourth place, position it held a week ago. "Gigi" (M-G) is finishing fifth, unchanged from last stanza.

"Big Country" (UA) is moving up to sixth spot. "Around World in 80 Days" (UA) is capturing seventh position, an improvement over last week. "Search For Paradise" (Cinerama) is winding up eighth. "Windjammer" (NT) is landing ninth place while "Me and Colonel" (Col) rounds out the Top 10.

"Matchmaker" (Par), "Reluctant Debutante" (M-G) and "White Wilderness" (BV) are the runner-up pix this session. First-named was in same category last round.

"Barbarian and Geisha" (20th) shapes as a promising newcomer, being fine on opening week at N.Y. Paramount. "Onionhead" (WB), also new, is rated mild on its preem session at N.Y. Capitol. "Dunkirk" (M-G), also fairly new, is big in Toronto and so-so in Philly. "Liane" (DCA) looks big in Chi while the reissue of "Streetcar Named Desire" (20th) is rated good in Pitt and Louisville, but just fair in Frisco and okay in L.A.

"Law and Disorder" (Cont), bright in Chi, looks okay in Frisco. "The Hunters" (20th) looms strong in Chi. "God Created Woman" (Kings) is bright in K.C.

"La Parisienne" (UA) shapes fine in Detroit and good in Providence. "Badlanders" (M-G), fairish in Boston, is rated fair in Portland.

"Raw Wind in Eden" (U), big in Louisville, looks fair in N.Y. in third stanza. "South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama), hotsy in Chi, shapes lively in N.Y. and wham in L.A.

"Indiscreet" (WB), long high on list, is great in Boston and trim in Toronto. "Harry Black and Tiger" (20th) continues a disappointment this week. "Andy Hardy Comes Home" (M-G) is slow in Pitt.

"Night Heaven Fell" (Kings) is good in Boston and Philly. "Bridge on River Kwai" (Col), nearing end of its prolonged run at N.Y. Palace, still is good.

See No Paramount Special Divvy

Although Paramount is collecting $10,000,000 a year for five years via its sale of the film backlog to a subsidiary of the Music Corp. of America, and operating earnings presently are holding steady, there's to be no special dividend to stockholders, at least at this time. Extra income is being placed back into operations or held in reserve.

V.p. Paul Raibourn stated he thinks there would be a special payoff to stockholders if the company trading price on the New York Stock Exchange were to go up to around $60 per share. It's now selling at the $44 level.

Set Verne Earth-Core Film

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Twentieth-Fox and Joseph M. Schenck Productions will jointly film Jules Verne's "Journey To Center Of Earth."

Charles Brackett will produce as high budget science fiction feature.

New York Sound Track

Figure magic: 20th-Fox's "Peyton Place" has hit over the $10,000,000 mark domestically alone. On the foreign side, "God Created Woman," starring Brigitte Bardot, will do well over $4,000,000 in the States. Producers Raoul Levy and Ray Ventura aren't happy with the slow way their share is rolling in via Columbia Pictures.

Herbert Bayard Swope Jr., whose producer pact at 20th-Fox winds the end of this month, may move over to the studio's tv subsid, TCF-TV as exec producer-director. Negotiations between 20th and Swope are now under way. This would mean Swope as right-hand man of production chief Martin Manulis, with whom he worked in television years ago.

Mrs. Lillian N. Gerard and Duncan McGregor hosting with a noon buffet Friday (10) at the Paris on occasion of the French cinema's 10th anni which is unveiling a new decor.

Paul Muni returns to screen after five-year absence in Fred Kohler's "The Last Angry Man," at Columbia Pictures, for which Robert Ryan is being negotiated for co-star role . . . Dick Powell will shoot locations for his 20th-Fox production, "No House Limit," in Havana . . . Nicholas Brodszky's "The Queen in Love," operetta written 20 years ago in Hungary before he came to America, will be produced as a screen feature by Austrian producer Herman Millakovski (no relation to Lithuanian producer Herman Millakowsky) . . .

James A. Lebenthal, whilom Life mag Hollywood staffer, is in Manhattan negotiating possible sale of his wordless documentary, "T Is For Tumbleweed" which stars Anne Lockhart, four-year-old granddaughter of the late Gene Lockhart. Short played both Edinburgh Festival and Brussels World Fair this summer . . . it carries a music track by jazz-cellist Fred Katz.

Joe Pasternak will produce "The Elsie Janis Story" for Metro, to be scripted by William Ludwig from original by Adela Rogers St. John and Ralph Wheelwright . . . Victor Saville bought screen rights to "Legacy of a Spy," Harpers novel by Henry S. Macfield . . . Mark Robson snagged producer-director chores on 20th-Fox' "From the Terrace," John O'Hara novel purchased last week . . . Aeneas Mackenzie will do screenplay on "King William the Conqueror," set by Evyan Productions with reputed budget of $5,000,000 . . . Edmund Grainger will seek U. S. Navy cooperation on his upcoming "Beneath the Arctic Circle," story of an atomic sub . . . Rock Hudson and Doris Day will costar in "It's That Time of Year," bank-rolled-released by Universal and co-produced by Martin Melcher and Ross Hunter.

Foster Blake, former western division manager for Universal, set to succeed Irving Sochin as sales topper at Rank Film Distributors of America . . . Michael B. Bromhead, newly appointed as the Lion International Films rep in the U. S., is engaged to a Maryland girl whom he met in London . . . Playwright Arthur Miller helping Edward L. Kingsley edit the French "Sorceress of Salem" for the States. It's based on his play, "The Crucible" . . . Sir Michael Balcon has two more films to do for Metro under the Ealing-MG pact. After that, he'll seek another U. S. tie . . . Lopert Films will have to move out of its offices. Building's been sold . . . While in N.Y. over the weekend, Theatre Owners of America prez Ernest G. Stellings took in the World Series . . . Trans-Lux v.p. Tom Rodgers in Europe . . . Janus Films' Swedish import, "The Seventh Seal," due to open "cold" at the Paris Theatre next week, i.e. without reference to the many honors won by the film abroad. Cy Harvey feels that plugging the awards tends to make some critics more critical.

Leo Jaffe, Columbia v.p., and Mrs. Harry Cohn, wife of the late Col president, have been elected to the board of Fico, holding company whose function is the acquisition of Col common stock . . . Roxy Theatre, under the new Robert Rothafel management, has booked a couple of Col productions, "Last Hurrah" and "Seventh Voyage of Sinbad."

Richard F. Walsh, president of IATSE and chairman of the National AFL-CIO Safety Committee, fellow-speaker with Gov. Averell Harriman and Norman R. Baker, president of the New York State Society of Newspaper Editors, at a special dinner meeting in the Sheraton-Ten Eyck Hotel, Albany last night (Tues.).

All film festivals are phony, their appeal and utility has evaporated, per Francois Truffaut, critic of the Paris highbrow weeky, Arts . . . Once a child film actress in France, now a concert pianist, Vivian Florian recently entered the U. S. as an immigrant with two objectives: citizenship and Carnegie Hall. She originates in Poland, is now 29.

Jerry Wald had until Monday to exercise his $7,500 option on Hollywood columnist Sheilah Graham's memoir, "The Beloved Infidel" (Henry Holt & Co.), so picked it up for $100,000, plus 5% of the net profits, last week. Gerold Frank, who collabed on the Lillian Roth and Diana Barrymore autobiogs, gets equal billing (and profits) with Miss Graham. Saga dwells on the last days of F. Scott Fitzgerald with whom she was romantically linked.

Public relationist, age 50, is hero of novel, "The Birthday Boy," which Scribner's will bring out next spring. Author is Holiday's ex-associate ed, Al Hine. Same house will issue a British screenwriter's novel of Balkan derring-do. "The Achilles Affair"—meaning Berkley Mather . . . Peter Heggie has returned after some years to the executive secretariat of the Authors League of America, he and Mills Tea Eyck trio under veteran Liuse Sillcox. Oldtimers of show biz will remember Heggie's late father, the legit and screen actor, O. P. Heggie.

Fleming Museum Assn. in Burlington, Vt. has lined up oldies for revival, to wit: Oct. 15, Frank Capra's "Lost Horizons," starring Ronald Colman; Nov. 19, five art history films; Jan. 7, Capra's "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," with Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur; March 11, "Miss Julie," 1951 Swedish award winner at Cannes and Berlin film festivals, starring Anita Bjork.

SILENTS: GOOD ENUF FOR TV?

Though Comparison Lopsided, 'Cheapies' Made for Television Influence Paramount's Ideas

Paramount is taking its cues from television, as concerns film-making economy. This picture corporation, while investing a minimum of $30,000,000 in 20 new productions, is underway with a studio cost-cutting program fashioned after tv methods.

Specifically, Par is impressed with the way video producers can turn out a half-hour film at amounts in the area of $35,000 whereas a major studio spends $10,000 to $20,000 per single minute of a feature.

The comparison is not a fully valid one, of course. The production values and talent involved in a Hollywood feature of major stature outdistance the routine tv entry.

But there is nonetheless a wide area for economy, as demonstrated by the tv practitioners, and this centers on shooting time. Par has it figured that a film's before-the-cameras schedule can be cut substantially by way of more pre-production planning and rehearsals. Numerous extra takes for a scene must be eliminated, it has been decreed, because these simply add too much to negative costs unnecessarily.

Company has had the policy of cutting shooting skeds in effect for some time although, naturally, there have been no public statements about its adoption.

And there has been a payoff. Par's gross business so far this year is under last year's level but net earnings are holding up well. This is attributable, in part at least, to the trimming of production expenditures.

Turkey Eases Its Rules, Oughta Aid U. S. Film Cos.

With Leo Hochstetter on the grounds, the Turkish government last week agreed to the establishment of non-resident bank accounts by the major film companies in Turkey. Move goes a long way by untangling the complicated situation in which the Americans have found themselves in that country.

Hochstetter, the Motion Picture Export Assn. rep in West Germany, was sent to Turkey from his Frankfurt headquarters. He had spent several years in the country earlier, working as a journalist. Turkey actually belongs in the domain of Frank Gervasi, MPEA's Mediterrancean rep, but Gervasi was busy with Italy and Spain at the moment.

Yanks don't distribute for themselves in Turkey but sell their product outright to local Turkish distributors. Turkey is one of the countries covered by the International Media Guarantee Program of the U. S. State Dept., which means that the U. S. government picks up local currency up to $500,000 and pays out the equivalent in dollars in New York.

This arrangement, too, was fouled up, and Hochstetter has managed to get these funds flowing again. It's earnings over and above the $500,000 that will go into the non-resident accounts from where unblocking will be easier. Up to now, the local agents paid cash on picking up the films from Turkish customs. That money was deposited in the central bank, where it accrued.

With the funds being deposited in non-resident accounts, each company is now in a better position to use these funds or find ways of remitting them.

'SEA BEAST' TITLE SWAP

Parsons Trades WB His 'Rio Bravo' Tag For It

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Indie producer Lindsley Parsons will bring "The Sea Beast" to the screen. It's a modern whaling story, from an original by Jack DeWitt. Will roll next spring in the Caribbean.

Parsons has Barry Sullivan in mind for star role and will discuss matter with actor during his trip to N. Y. later this month.

Warners has owned title since silent days, when John Barrymore made it first in non-talkie form, then with sound. Parsons acquired title via an exchange with WB, surrendering his own "Rio Bravo."

Columbia Fattens Its Spanish Lingo Line Via Mexico

To supplement its insufficient supply of Spanish-language pictures for the American market, Columbia Pictures has closed a deal with a new, exhibitor-owned production company in Mexico. It assures Col of 30 new habla Espagnol features.

Columbia maintains a production program of its own in Mexico, but it runs to only about a dozen films per year. The company wants to release at least 24 a year to Spanish-language houses in the States.

There are two other outfits releasing Mexican films—Azteca and Clasa-Mohme. However, both of these are now jointly owned by the Mexican government-controlled Cimex outfit, which has bought out Gustav Mohme, vet producer and distributor of Mexican films in the States. It's understood that Mohme bowed out of the company Sept. 26 under the terms of a deal made two years ago. Eventual merger of Azteca and Clasa-Mohme is in the works.

New Mexican production group channelling films to Columbia includes Gabriel Alarcon of Mexico, Carlos Plaza Izquierdo of Venezuela, and Enrique Ponce of Columbia. All are major exhibitors in their countries and obtain the rights for their productions to several areas apart from their homelands.

As for Columbia, it's not a partner, but it puts up advance monies on the productions in return for the U. S. rights. Three films already have been delivered, two more are ready, and one is currently planned. It's figured the new outfit may be able to turn out 18 to 20 films a year, though 30 is the goal. The films will be released by Col's Mexican films division under Donald McConville.

O'DONNELL TOA SPIELER, KERASOTES NEXT HEAD?

Robert J. O'Donnell of the Texas Interstate circuit will be keynote speaker at the Theatre Owners of America convention in Miami which starts on Oct. 21. It'll be the first important order of business after Boston's Samuel Pinanski calls the meeting to order that day.

After O'Donnell's speech, retiring president Ernest G. Stellings will report on the prior day's board of directors and executive committee meetings. It is expected that Stellings will be succeeded as TOA president by George G. Kerasotes of Springfield Ill.

PAR CALMS DOWN HECTIC 'ACTING'

Paramount is underway with tests of its silent pictures with the view of peddling the vintage backlog, somewhat updated, to television.

Company has 1,500 pre-sound pictures in its vaults and most of the prints are in good condition. Job now at hand is to re-fashion them so as to make them in line with modern standards. Specifically being worked on by technicians are a comedy, a meller and a straight drama.

It's been concluded already that the oldtime titles would't be adequate for tv. As a substitute Par is trying the use of off-screen narration. It's felt dubbing would be impractical.

Another problem being tackled is that of timing. The ancient "flickers" unspooled quickly in comparison with today's features and the performers appear gesticulating so wildly that in many instances they cannot be accepted seriously. Par has to calm them down.

There's been no tipoff on accomplishments so far in terms of making the oldies presentable. But it is known that Par officials are high on the prospects. "You'll find some surprises," commented Paul Raibourn, v.p.

If there's any degree of success the trade repercussions, obviously will be widespread. Prints of pretalkers are in abundance—and just gathering dust—at various of the major companies and it's a cinch these outfits wouldn't hesitate to convert the otherwise worthless material into cash if it's feasible. In any case the Par experiments are being closely watched

Incidentally, Par's backlog sale to a subsidiary of Music Corp. of America covered only the pre-1948 sound pictures; the silents were excluded.

Stellings Sees Key TOA Plans In Lap Of Justice Dept.

The Federal Government, specifically Justice , is the key to two pressing exhibitor problems—(1) the sale of films to television and (2) the restitution of showcases to the producer-distributors, Ernest G. Stellings, the outgoing Theatre Owners of America president, said in N. Y. yesterday (Tues).

He has hopes that the TOA convention in Miami later this month will adopt the "trust" fund project, under which theatremen would actually buy up the companies' post-'48 films to keep them from going to television. One of the keys to any such venture is Justice Dept. approval for the major circuits to join in the move. There appears to be little doubt that the circuits will get the greenlight to participate, Stellings opined.

As for the modification of the decree to allow theatre ownership by the producer-distributors, Stellings appeared less sanguine, though he believed this was necessary to encourage greater volume in production. "We cannot, as TOA, reopen the decree issue with the courts," he said. "Only the Justice Dept. can do that, or else one of the parties to the suit. TOA was involved only as a friend of the court."

So far, said Stellings, "we have had nothing but discouragement from the Justice Department, but we're still hoping that a way can be found to reexamine the situation."

The TOA chief exec said the question of buying up the companies' post-'48 films was the major issue facing exhibition today. "If they sell those films to tv, we're through," he maintained flatly. "The whole business would be gone."

Black Cloud of Television Thickens For Europe's Cinema Operators; Now Have 12,792,805 Video Sets

With the experience in the U. S. as a convenient handwriting-on-the-wall, European film industries can look to rapidly rising competition from television. The latest figures from countries connected within the Eurovision Video network show a total of 12,792,805 receivers, an increase of close to 2,000,000 during the first half of 1958 alone.

According to statistics published in the German trade publication, Film-Echo, the number of receivers in Europe today stands at around 16,000,000, of which some 3,400,000 are in Russia and the Communist countries.

As of July 1, '58, Britain had 8,300,000 sets, West Germany 1,677,000, Italy 900,000, France 860,000, Belgium 370,000, Holland 315,000, Denmark 157,000, Sweden 147,000, Switzerland 41,000 and Austria 32,000. At the first of the year, the total reached in the Eurovision web was 10,857,194 sets.

European tv is generally state-operated and its programming is limited. However, it is expanding its service hours and the number of programs shown on the European web are being increased. While Britain already has commercial tv, other important markets, like Germany, are on the brink of getting it.

ALL-AROUND-THE-TOWN

Again Open Brigitte Bardot That Way in N. Y.

Pattern of dual cast and west-side openings for foreign films in Manhattan continues with the Brigitte Bardot starrer, "The Night Heaven Fell." Picture bows Oct. 21 at the Odeon on Broadway and the Fine Arts on the east side.

Kingsley-International, the distributor, is booking the English version into the Odeon and the subtitled French version into the Fine Arts.

Local 47 Charges New Guild Unduly 'In' At Studios

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

American Federation of Musicians, now under a new president, Herman D. Kenin, is moving to unhorse the rebels in the film studios here. Some 500 tooters loyal to the A.F.M. have filed a petition with the National Labor Relations Board requesting another secret ballot test. This is aimed at ending a crucial clause in the collective bargaining authorization vested with the Musicians Guild of America for a period 39 months under the earlier showdown.

Should this latest tactic be crowned with success the Guild would be "de-authorized." Under its (the Guild's) current advantages the studios are required, by contract stipulation, to require any musician to join the Guild within 30 days of employment at a major studio.

With dues-paying members of the international forced to be also in the Guild, or no jobs, the Kenin regime is firing a series of "unfair practices" charges against the various employers. Newcomer union was formed over dissatisfaction with the former Petrillo regime, and its alleged lack of zeal for Hollywood musicians' special problems.

A.F.M. is currently expressing a "discrimination" allegation against 20th-Fox in particular for that lot's "favoring" of musicians who belong to the splinter Guild and bias against the old Local 47.

SPAIN HELPS 'SHEBA' PRODUCERS CUT COSTS

Saragossa, Sept. 30.

Hollywood is finding Spanish government cooperation an attractive budget and production item. Importance of official aid is illustrated here on the Saragossa wastes where King Vidor is directing battle sequences for the Edward Small-Ted Richmond biblical spectacle, "Solomon and Sheba."

Several Spanish Army regiments have been mobilized to provide over 2,000 extras and squadrons of cavalry. And the bibilical battles are being re-enacted on an abandoned military reservation where the bleak, sandy terrain offers compatible identification with the George Bruce screenplay backgrounds, only 15 minutes from the main location base in Saragossa.

Entire "Solmon and Sheba" military assistance program is coordinated by Maj. Martin Pozuelo, chief of staff officer assigned by the Spanish Army to King Vidor as military adviser. Under him are 150 regimental officers and non-coms, fully briefed on Vidor's war strategy.

Prudential Loans Disney $5-Mil On 5½% 1973 Note

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

New working capital, via a loan of $5,000,000 from Prudential Insurance Co. of America, has been secured by Walt Disney Productions. Coin, for which firm gave 5½% sinking fund notes due Sept. 15, 1973, also will be used to reduce bank loans previously incurred.

Under its new format of expanded operations, production company has earmarked a record $3,500,000 to promote five Buena Vista releases between now and through next summer, according to prexy Roy O. Disney. Sked comprises the largest release program in company history and reps a negative cost of $13,000,000.

Films to come under the huge allocation include "Sleeping Beauty," "Tonka," "The Shaggy Dog," "Darby O'Gill and the Little People" and "Third Man on the Mountain."

Machinery for this outlay will be activated this week by BV, when execs return to their home bases from a week of confabs at studio.

LOU WIETHE CHARGES IA 'FEATHERBEDDING'

Cincinnati, Oct. 7.

Lou Wiethe, who closed his swank suburban Valley Theatre last week over a labor dispute, threatens to go non-union unless "a fair settlement" is reached. Action halted run of 20th's "South Pacific" in the 23d week.

His explanation of the shuttering on the theatre's marquee reads: "Featherbedding by the operators closed this theatre."

Wiethe asked for a reduction of personnel, stating that business dipped 25% since Labor Day. He claimed that the IATSE stagehands and ticket sellers "offered relief," but the IATSE boothman refused to cut down from four men.

William Lynn, business agent of Local 327-A, Moving Picture Operators' Union, said Wiethe's demand would violate the union's policy of long standing on road show jobs.

The Perfect Furlough
(C'SCOPE—COLOR

Well-paced comedy with fair-enough merriment and Tony Curtis and Janet Leigh to provide sufficient boxoffice returns.

Universal release of Robert Arthur production. Stars Tony Curtis, Janet Leigh, Keenan Wynn, Linda Cristal, Elaine Stritch; features Marcel Dalio, Les Tremayne, Jay Novello. Directed by Blake Edwards. Screenplay, Stanley Shapiro; camera (Eastman Color), Philip Lathrop; editor, Milton Carruth; music, Frank Skinner. Previewed at RKO 58th Street Theatre, N.Y., Sept. 30, '58. Running time, 93 MINS.

Paul Hodges	Tony Curtis

Basic story is lacking in substance and it's difficult to figure the sense behind the casting of Janet Leigh as a U.S. Army psychologist. But, then, "Perfect Furlough" is done up strictly for laughs and, for those who are on an anything-goes kind of basis, it stacks up well enough.

Writer Stanley Shapiro, in plotting the farce, followed obvious lines. Group of soldiers in an Arctic outpost are in dire need of morale uplifting. They have nothing but women on their minds and daydream about erotic opportunities.

Miss Leigh provides what's intended to be the solution. One of the group is to be given the "perfect furlough" and the others are to experience it vicariously. Tony Curtis, who's a sharp operator with a big reputation for taking a fancy to femmes, cops the leave. He chooses three weeks in Paris with nifty looker film star Linda Cristal. Miss Leigh goes along to supervise and it's only a matter of time before Miss Leigh and Curtis team up at the altar.

While the script's turns can easily be guessed in advance there are within its framework some amusing situations. Too, director Blake Edwards keeps the broad action going at a good clip and Robert Arthur has wrapped up his production handsomely in CinemaScope and Eastman Color.

The overall result is a fair-enough boxoffice contender with Curtis' name providing an extra lift.

Curtis plays comedy well, playing it broadly (there's not much subtlety in the screenplay) and agreeably. Miss Leigh, as noted, is the psychologist; this profession rarely yields such attractive practitioners.

Keenan Wynn is Miss Cristal's manager and comes off as a stereotyped zany caricature. Elaine Stritch does handily as a hard-boiled, cynical pressagent. Marcel Dalio, Les Tremayne and Jay Novello work competently in feature-billing spots and King Donovan, as the perplexed army major in charge of Curtis' expedition to Paris is an amusing all the way.

Miss Cristal as the film star who keeps her marriage a secret until she becomes pregnant (a situation for which Curtis at first is held responsible) looks and plays her part in appealing fashion.

Philip Lathrop's camera work is sharp, editing is tight enough and music, editing and technical credits all are good. Gene.

Joy Ride

No names, but exceptionally well-done suspense item.

Hollywood, Oct. 3.

Allied Artists release of Ben Schwalb production. Stars Rad Fulton, Ann Doran, Regis Toomey. Directed by Edward Bernds. Screenplay, Christopher Knopf; from a story by C. B. Gilford; camera, Carl Guthrie; music, Marlin Skiles; editor, William Austin. Previewed at the studio, Sept. 30, 1958. Running time, 65 MINS.

Paul	Rad Fulton
Grace	Ann Doran
Miles	Regis Toomey
Arnie	Nicholas King
Vince	Robert Levin
Dirk	Jim Bridges
Barrett	Roy Engel
Taverner	Robert Colbert
Ellensten	Robert Anderson

"Joy Ride" is a tough and often terrifying melodrama of juveniles underpriviliged in mind only who set out to demoralize and dominate an older man for no apparent reason except "kicks." The Ben Schwalb production for Allied Artists, skillfully directed by Edward Bernds, is too modest in structure to attract much attention, but it is absorbing screen entertainment and will be no disappointment to the customers. Slated for double-bills, it will be a strong entry in this class.

The plot of Christopher Knopf's screenplay, based on a story by C. B. Gilford, is very simple. A quartet of teen-agers, Rad Fulton, Nicholas King, Jim Bridges and Robert Levin, spot a sports car owned by Regis Toomey. They want a ride in it. Sensing Toomey's uncertainty to their request, and mistaking his natural kindness as fear, they launch a campaign of systematic intimidation and mounting ferocity. The "Joy Ride" now becomes secondary to their immature desire to conquer the car's owner, symbol of authority and adulthood. Their campaign culminates when they openly invade Toomey's home while he is away and terrorize his wife, Ann Doran, into a heart attack.

Basically, of course, this kind of story is similar to "The Desperate Hours," and others of that genre. But this does not mitigate against its power to absorb the spectator. Knopf's screenplay does not neglect the reasons for the youths' behavior and it attempts an ending along contemporary sociological lines in which Toomey as shown as almost superhumanly tolerant and understanding of the situation. (He gets the charges against three of the boys reduced, conscious that prison terms may not be the answer to their problem.)

Toomey performs with dignity and authority and Miss Doran, as the wife, is a fine study in muted hysteria. The young men, Fulton, King, Bridges and Levin, are uniformly good, and other cast members, Roy Engle, Robert Colbert and Robert Anderson give solid support.

All aspects of the production respond to Bernds' incisive direction, including the photography of Carl Guthrie, Marlin Skiles' imaginatively-used music, and the expertly paced editing by William Austin. Powe.

The Man Upstairs
(BRITISH)

Modest, well-made little thriller; should be useful entertainment in average houses.

London, Sept. 30.

British Lion release of an ACT (Robert Dunbar) production. Stars Richard Attenborough, Bernard Lee, Donald Houston, Dorothy Alison. Directed by Don Chaffey. Screenplay, Alun Falconer; camera, Gerald Massie-Collier; editor, John Trumper. At Hemmer Theatre, London. Running time, 88 MINS.

The Man	Richard Attenborough
Inspector	Bernard Lee
Sanderson	Donald Houston
Mrs. Barnes	Dorothy Alison
Nicholas	Charles Houston
Eunice	Maureen Connell
Pollen	Kenneth Griffith
Helen	Virginia Maskell
Mrs. Lawrence	Patricia Jessel
Miss Acres	Amy Dalby
P. C. Stevens	Edward Judd
Injured Sergeant	Patrick Jordan
Mr. Barnes	Alfred Burke
Johnny	David Griffith
Superintendent	Walter Hudd
Dulcie	Polly Clark
Sgt. Morris	Graham Stewart

"The Man Upstairs" is a competently made, often tense, little drama, which comes off well within its own modest terms. But it is doubtful if many people will be happy to pay out good money to see the kind of pic which could have been handled equally well on television. This seems no way to combat the small screen. Starring several popular British players, it should be a useful booking for most British houses, but it is not important enough to arouse much interest in the U.S.

The story has Richard Attenborough as a scientist who has been involved in a laboratory accident in which his fiancee's brother has been killed. Burdened with a sense of guilt, he has changed his name and is living in a seedy lodging house. The film concerns one night in his life. His peculiar behaviour causes one of the guests to call the police. Attenborough locks himself in his room and the story line concerns the reactions of the various guests to the situation and the clash between an intolerant police officer and a local mental welfare officer.

Don Chaffey's direction is straightforward and brings out several good performances, notably by Attenborough, in a difficult role. Kenneth Griffith is a fussy busybody, Dorothy Allison an understanding housewife and Donald Houston the welfare officer, all nice portrayals. Bernard Lee, as the cop also is good.

Virginia Maskell also shows considerable promise in a tiny part as Attenborough's girl friend. Dialog is sometimes a trifle too literary and the acting taking place in such cramped circumstances makes it difficult for the requisite tension to be unflagging. But the atmosphere of fear and suspicion has been excellently created and handled. Rich.

Money, Women and Guns
(COLOR; C'SCOPE)

Suspense oater of routine interest and prospect.

Hollywood, Sept. 5.

Universal release of a Howie Horwitz production. Stars Jock Mahoney, Kim Hunter, Tim Hovey; costars Gene Evans, Tom Drake, Lon Chaney, William Campbell, Jeffrey Stone, James Gleason, Judy Meredith. Directed by Richard H. Bartlett, Screenplay, Montgomery Pittman; camera (Eastman color), Philip Lathrop; music supervisor, Joseph Gershenson; editor, Patrick McCormack. Previewed at the studio, Sept. 4, '58. Running time, 80 MINS.

Hogan	Jock Mahoney
Mary Kingman	Kim Hunter
Davey Kingman	Tim Hovey
Sheriff Crowley	Gene Evans
Jess Ryerson	Tom Drake
Art Bridwell	Lon Chaney
Clint Gunston	William Campbell
Johnny Bee	Jeffrey Stone
Henry Devers	James Gleason
Sally Gunston	Judy Meredith
Damion Bard	Phillip Terry
Setting Sun	Richard Devon
Nibbs	Ian Mac Donald
John Briggs	Don Megowan
Job Kingman	Nolan Leary
Joe	Kelly Thordsen

"Money, Women and Guns" title doesn't have much to do with the product but is apparently dedicated to the proposition that magic in the billing will overcome the lack of it in the production. A mysterious will and the suspense involved in carrying out its terms supply the plot for the Howie Horwitz production, directed by Richard H. Bartlett. Satisfactory for double-bill booking.

Jock Mahoney is the frontier detective hired to unravel the mystery caused by the will of an old prospector, bushwacked by three guns. Mahoney must track down each name mentioned in the will and not only make sure each beneficiary is legitimate but, in the process, find the killers. In the course of his investigation he meets and falls in love with Kim Hunter, mother of Tim Hovey, one of these named in the testament. He also solves the mystery of the murder, when he discovers that Jeffrey Stone, who has been wandering through the picture as a mystery stranger, was one of the three gunmen—but a repentant one—who took part in the killing.

Montgomery Pittman's screenplay is interesting and Bartlett's direction is capable, although lacking in much tension. Mahoney does a rough-hewn job of the restless detective, but Miss Hunter's talents are wasted in a routine role. Young Hovey contributes some humor, and others in the cast who make effective contributions include Stone, Gene Evans, Lon Chaney, Tom Drake, James Gleason, William Campbell and Judy Meredith.

Menace in the Night

Melodrama for second billing.
(BRITISH)

Hollywood, Sept. 25.

United Artists release of a Gibraltar Production. Stars Griffith Jones, Lisa Gastoni, Vincent Ball; features Eddie Byrne, Victor Maddern, Clifford Evans, Joan Miller, Leslie Dwyer, Leonard Sachs. Produced by Charles A. Leeds. Directed by Lance Comfort. Screenplay by Norman Hudis and John Sherman, from a novel, "Suspense," by Bruce Graeme; camera, Arthur Graham; editor, Peter Pitt; music, Richard Bennett. Previewed at Goldwyn Studios, Sept. 26, '58. Running time, 78 MINS.

Rapson	Griffith Jones
Jean Francis	Lisa Gastoni
Bob Meredith	Vincent Ball
Art	Eddie Byrne
Ted	Victor Maddern
Inspector Ford	Clifford Evans
Victor's Wife	Joan Miller
Victor	Leonard Sachs
Toby	Leslie Dwyer
Postman's Widow	Jenny Laird
Betty Francis	Angela White
Mrs. Francis	Barbara Couper
Auntie	Marie Burke
Bank Manager	Andre Van Gysegham

Instead of falling down, London Bridge draws up in "Menace in the Night," and, in so doing, allows a sleek British sedan and its robbery-prodded driver to be hurled into the murky Thames, thus producing the only real thrill this Scotland Yard epic has to offer. An English film, apparently made two years ago and just now picked up for U.S. release by United Artists, it has scarcely a peg to sell it on and likely will live its life as a somewhat offbeat filler.

Charles A. Leeds produced the Gibraltar Production on what couldn't have been a very hefty budget, but scenes of internal London will be bonuses for American audiences. Norman Hudis and John Sherman screenplayed from a Bruce Graeme novel called "Suspense," and, although too talky in the first reel or two, it's a fair script when the action rolls around. Direction by Lance Comfort, likewise, picks up in direct relation with the action.

Story is a simple one, revolving around four Britishers who plan and execute the robbery of a mail van hauling 250,000 pounds sterling worth of soiled banknotes to the furnaces. But, it seems, there's an eyewitness—a fetching blonde who co-operates with the bobbies until threatened by one of the culprits—and then there's an overzealous reporter who's out to scoop London's other dailies. The robbers bicker among themselves, resulting in one death and three remaining who steal from each other, and finally there's the big chase, at the end of which the leader drives off the bridge.

Performances, with few highlights, are nonetheless adequate. Lisa Gastoni, as the blonde, is fine to look at, and she manages to create a considerable amount of fear. It does seem strange, though, that, despite a thoroughly British family, she converses in a delightful continental accent. Griffith Jones, as the gang leader, and Vincent Ball, as the reporter, are fine, and Clifford Evans, as the inspector, Eddie Byrne, Victor Maddern and Leonard Sachs, as the other gangsters and Leslie Dwyer, as an underworld barber, are good.

Cameraman Arthur Graham's work is generally proficient in spite of frequent overexposures, with editing by Peter Pitt and art direction by John Stoll adequate. Philip Martell directed an excellent Richard Bennett musical score that turns out to be more exciting than most other aspects of the film. Ron.

Le Gorille Vous Salue Bien
(The Gorilla Greets You)
(FRENCH; FRANSCOPE)

Paris, Sept. 30.

Pathe release of Raoul Ploquin production. Stars Lino Ventura, Bella Darvi, Charles Vanel; features Pierre Dux, Rene Lefevre, Robert Manuel. Directed by Bernard Borderie. Screenplay, Antoine Dominique, Jacques Robert, Borderie, from the novel by Dominique; camera, Louis Page; editor, Pierre Gaudin. At Balzac, Paris, Running time, 105 MINS.

Gorille	Lino Ventura
Moll	Bella Darvi
Colonel	Charles Vanel
Inspector	Rene Lefevre
Lawson	Pierre Dux
Kanas	Robert Manuel

Film kicks off what may turn into a long, lucrative series here. It concerns a secret service man, known as "The Gorilla," forever caught between gangsters and the police, to whom he must remain unknown. This allows for plenty of fights, dolls and intrigue. Well manned, slickly paced, it is okay entertainmentwise, but emerges for only possible dualer fare outside of its own country.

"The Gorilla" is investigating stolen missile plans which brings him into contact with counterfeiters, dope peddlers and high ranking espionage agents. He comes through via his shrewdness, great strength and wise chief who overlords it all via quiet mastery.

With top actors in the many overdrawn parts, the film is acceptable on most counts and is helped by Lino Ventura's miming of the clever, strong and pugnacious Gorilla. Bella Darvi is a fine, perverse gun moll and technical credits are helpful. This is played straight, unlike the successful Eddie Constantine parody G-Man films it seems to be emulating. Mosk.

films. "Defiant Ones" (UA), which likewise was just getting started as the month ended, did well enough to finish fourth in the final week. Also new, "Harry Black and Tiger," (20th), was uneven but managed to finish 10th the same week. "Wind Across Everglades" (WB), another newie, wound up 11th another stanza during the month.

"Raw Wind in Eden" (U) did well enough to be runner-up film one week. "Certain Smile" (20th) was 12th one round in weekly VARIETY ratings. "La Parisienne" (UA), which was eighth in August, was in a like category to cop 12th place another week. Same applies to "Tank Force" (Col). "Night Heaven Fell' (Kings) finished 10th in weekly ratings another stanza.

"Kings Go Forth" (UA) added additional coin in bigger keys early in the month. Same was true of "Proud Rebel" (BV) and "Twilight for Gods" (U). Last-named was 10th-place winner in August.

"South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama), which was launched in Chicago late last month, promises to measure up to its showing in N.Y. at the Warner where now in its 12th week. It goes into the same houses where Cinerama subjects have played as soon as "Search for Paradise" winds up its runs.

She Didn't Say No!
(BRITISH-COLOR)

Naive, but warmhearted piece of Irish blarney. Fairly amusing mixture of comedy, whimsy and sentiment which lacks marquee value.

London, Sept. 30.

Associated-British release of a Sergei Nolbandov production. Features Eileen Herlie, Niall MacGinnis, Ray McAnally, Perlita Neilson, Liam Redmond, Betty McDowell, Ian Bannen. Directed by Cyril Frankel. Screenplay, T. J. Morrison and Una Troy, from Una Troy's novel, "We Are Seven"; camera, Gilbert Taylor; editor, Charles Hasse; music, Tristram Carey. At Studio One, London. Running time, 85 MINS.

Bridget Monaghan	Eileen Herlie
Mary Monaghan	Perlita Nielson
Tommy Monaghan	Wilfred Downing
Poppy Monaghan	Ann Dickins
The Twins	Teresa & Lesley Scoble
Toughy Monaghan	Raymond Manthorpe
Jamesy Casey	Niall MacGinnis
Matthew Hogan	Patrick McAlinney
William Bates	Jack MacGowran
Mrs. Bates	Joan O'Hara
Jim Powers	Ray McAnally
Mrs. Power	Betty McDowell
Peter Howard	Ian Bannen
Miss Hogan	Eithne Dunne
The Film Director	Hilton Edwards
Miss Kelly	Maureen Halligan
The Judge	Harry Hutchinson
Darmody	Paul Farrell
Maybella Merton	Shirley Joy
Mrs. Merton	Viola Keats
Maggie Murphy	Anna Manahan
The Sergeant	Michael O'Brien
Doctor Cassidy	Liam Redmond
The Inspector	John Welsh

The story line of "She Didn't Say No!" sounds a fairly risque theme for a film, unless treated as sharp satire. But actually it is a warmhearted comedy. It's naive and loaded with Irish blarney which sometimes teeters uncomfortably to the verge of sentimentality. But the accent is mainly on comedy and a competent bunch of Irish players extract a healthy measure of yocks. There are also some attractive moppets, and it should appeal particularly to femme picturegoers. Pic will be a worthwhile proposition in British family houses, but lack of stellar names may soft-pedal its prospects further afield.

Based on Una Troy's novel, "We Are Seven," this vehicle has Eileen Herlie as an attractive, romantically-minded, indulgent woman whose lover died before they could marry, leaving her with a child. Her idealistic search for a father for the child has unfortunate results. She is mother of six born on the wrong side of the blanket.

Since the last five children have been fathered by men of the village, Miss Herlie's family is something of a local embarassment, with villagers anxious to get them out of their hair. There is a predictable, but neat pay-off leading up to a happy ending for a film which despite early misgivings, is put over without any offense.

Cyril Frankel has directed with a light touch while Gilbert Taylor's color photography makes good use of the pleasant Irish scenery. The dialog has good humor rather than wit. Sentimental sequences do not obtrude so that this disarming film seems rather better while watching it than it probably is.

Eileen Herlie gives an attractive performance as the woman who unwittingly causes all the bother. Among other adult performances which add to the film's merits are those of Betty McDowell, Jack McGowran, Ian Bannen, Perlita Neilson, Eithne Dunne, Liam Redmond, Ray McAnally and Niall MacGinnis.

But it is the children who contribute most to "She Didn't Say No!". This introduces a youngster named Raymond Manthorpe. He is a tiny kid with tremendous self-assurance and sense of comedy. Another promising newcomer is Ann Dickens, with a neat performance as a screen-struck teenager. Shirley Joy, as a precocious child film star, Tristram Carey's music leans heavily on typical Irish airs, but is well suited to the subject. Rich.

Philly Tent's 73G Harvest

Philadelphia, Oct. 7.

Theatrical and face luminaries, plus civic officials helped make the "Old Newsboys Day" fund drive of the Variety Club, Tent 13, a $73,000 success.

Showmen's group linked forces with the Philadelphia Inquirer in fund-raising stunt to aid club's summer camp for handicapped children. Hal Marshall, 20th Century Fox publicity man, acted as coordinator for "Old Newsboys Day" (Oct. 3) in which $23,000 was raised in street corner sales in three hours.

Among the showbiz "Newsboys" were Sophie Tucker, Tommy Leonetti, Don Rickles, Al Fisher and Lou Marks, Frankie Avalon, Jodie Sands Charlie Gracie along with the floor shows of virtually every midtown cafe plus a majority of the local radio and tv personalities.

HISTORY WITH RESERVATIONS

Bullish on Loew's Earnings

First quarter of Loew's current fiscal year, ending Nov. 30, will bring net earnings of around $2,500,000 and "don't be surprised" if the second quarter's net is up to $3,500,000, circuit operator Harry Brandt predicted this week:

All due to important boxoffice pictures, he said. Brandt has been a strong supporter of president Joseph R. Vogel's management and sees the earnings as further warranting full film industry confidence in Vogel.

Harry Brandt Says U.S. Theatremen Root for Vogel's 'Hold-the-Studio'

Joseph R. Vogel, president of Loew's, apparently has the exhibitors of the country on his side in his differences with Louis Green, Jerome Newman and other Wall Street interests, according to Harry Brandt, New York circuit operator.

Theatremen are motivated by the wish to see the Metro studio continue as a means of providing exhibition with a flow of product. They feel certain that Vogel will continue operation of the studio and, in contrast, suspect the Green-Newman faction is entertaining ideas of short-term profit-taking via liquidation, said Brandt.

The Gotham theatreowner said he figures that exhibs presently own about 500,000 shares of Loew's common stock. And, Brandt adds, he's ready to take a prominent role in any proxy fight that comes about, just as he did in the previous row between Vogel and the opposition forces.

But Brandt doubts that a proxy fight will materialize because this time "Green knows he's on the wrong side of the fence." The reference is to Green's position favoring a spinoff of the studio which, Brandt asserted, would not be practical since the film-making plant requires the affiliated enterprises, such as the music companies, foreign theatres, etc., which would go with domestic theatres under the Green plan.

The Green-Newman side's claim of controlling 2,000,000 voting shares is not accepted by Brandt. He said this amount of stock represents the total of shares held by brokers and it's to be seriously doubted that all of it would be voted for Green-Newman.

Brandt said he and his family own 20,000 shares.

No Compromise in Sight

Next meeting of the Loew's board is penciled for Oct. 22 with, so far, no evidence of a compromise that could avert a clash between president Joseph R. Vogel and the Jerome Newman-Louis Green faction.

The issue remains the same. Vogel wants the film end of the corporation to survive as the "parent" following divorcement, with domestic theatres spun off. Newman-Green syndicate is demanding that the studio be spun off.

Wall Street sources this week claimed that Newman-Green will have a strong edge in any kind of voting contest, with stockholder support increasing day by day.

50 Goldwyns Up For Syndication

Samuel Goldwyn is making 50 back-number features available to television. They're on the market and if a deal materializes it would mark the first unloading to tv by the veteran producer.

James Mulvey, president of the Goldwyn organization, is engaged in sale talks but is keeping the wraps on the identity of possible buyers. Product on the block includes about eight post-1948 features. Among these is "Hans Christian Andersen," Danny Kaye starrer.

N.Y. Rivoli Run Summary: 'Days' Gross $4,872,326; Sold 187,622 Souvenirs

When "Around the World In 80 Days" bowed out of the Rivoli Theatre, N. Y., last week (5) it completed a run of 102 weeks at the Broadway showcase, second only in length to that chalked up by "Cinerama." The net theatre gross for "80 Days" was $4,872,326 and it was seen by 2,173,238 persons in 1,564 performances. Some 187,622 souvenir books were sold at $1 a piece.

"80 Days" opened at the Rivoli on Oct. 17, 1956. It didn't have an empty seat for the first 15 months. The Mike Todd film is skedded to open at 11 houses, including six Loew's theatres, in the metropolitan area Nov. 11.

Dixie Boxoffice Up 17% on '57

Business throughout the South this year has been about 17% above 1957, but still between 15% and 20% below the 1954-'55 level, Ernest G. Stellings, president of the Theatre Owners of America, said in N.Y. yesterday (Tues.).

He said his, like other, circuits were closing down unprofitable situations and predicted that, if current business conditions continue, exhibition throughout the country will be trimmed down to between 15,000 and 16,000 regular theatres and drive-ins.

"There's nothing wrong with this," he commented. "It's simply an adjustment. Naturally, I'd prefer if there were more houses, but you've got to face reality."

Stellings said he was satisfied with the way most of the companies were following "orderly release" plans worked out between them and the exhibitors. "We've got a good flow of product between Oct. 1 and Christmas and beyond," he held.

Stellings stressed the business comparisons with 1957 aren't valid since last year was such a bad year for business.

SID BLUMENSTOCK, ACAD COORDINATOR

Sid Blumenstock, former ad-pub director for Paramount Pictures, last week was named as coordinator of all Motion Picture Assn. of America promotional and publicity activities in connection with the 1959 Academy Awards telecast. It pays $500 weekly.

Blumenstock was picked at a meeting of the MPAA's ad-pub directors committee under the chairmanship of Charles Simonelli. Aim is to "direct the public's attention toward the industry's most important public relations activity of the year."

Brando Signs on 'Bounty'

Marlon Brando has been signed to star in Metro's remake of "Mutiny on the Bounty," which the studio is planning to film next year.

Aron Rosenberg will produce. Original version of the adventure yarn was made in 1935, with Clark Gable and Charles Laughton starring.

BEFORE CIVIL WAR NO MAN'S LAND

American history prior to the Civil War is a neglected plot area for Hollywood producers, and likely to remain so. The reasoning of the showmen goes like this:

"There's no suspense in Alexander Hamilton. Every Schoolboy knows he was knocked off by Aaron Burr."

This seems not to apply to the Bible. Everybody knows Moses made it across the Red Sea and the pursuing Egyptians didn't. But the Bible is always "special."

It's also tough to fictionalize well-established historic American personages, since taking liberty with them would bring a lot of angry kicks.

Director Elia Kazan said last week that he regretted the absence of American history themes on the screen, but he, too, bows to the inevitable. "I remember visiting the set of 'Knickerbocker Holiday' once and talking to one of the extras I knew," he related. "The man had appeared in many films. He pointed to his knickers and said: 'Whenever I've appeared in one of these in a picture it's always lost money.'"

One film challenging the prevailing theory is Samuel Bronston's upcoming "John Paul Jones," which John Farrow directed in Spain and which pretends to relate the tumultuous career of the American naval hero. Though it concentrates on his exploits at sea (reenacting the historic encounter between the Bonhomme Richard and the Serapis off the British Coast), the film includes many characters out of American history. Bronston is planning another naval history film dealing with the life of Admiral Nelson.

Biblical times will be represented with the ambitiously planned filmization of "The Greatest Story Ever Told" at 20th-Fox, and the currently shooting (in Spain) "Solomon and Sheba," costarring Tyrone Power and Gina Lollobrigida. Going back to antiquity, a film is to be made of the best-seller, "The King Must Die," and another is due on the Spartans. Metro's spectacular "Ben Hur" remake is winding up in Italy and Kirk Douglas has "The Vikings" in current release. Also planned (by Yul Brynner) are a remake of the Japanese samurai film, "The Magnificent Seven" and "Spartacus and the Gladiator." Alec Guinness plans to appear in a film on the life of Buddha.

There are many other titles. "The Big Fisherman" is being done by Rowland V. Lee for Disney release; Ava Gardner stars in "The Naked Maja," a story about Goya, which has been completed in Rome; Brynner has shot "The Buccaneers" and 20th is releasing "The Barbarian and the Geisha," which tells the story of the first American consul sent to Japan.

The one film dealing with American history, but in a whimsical rather than a historical way, is the production of "The Devil's Disciple," based on the G. B. Shaw play, which Hecht-Hill-Lancaster is shooting in London. It is set in the time of the American revolution. At Columbia, "Andersonville" still is an active project. The MacKinlay Kantor book tells of the infamous Southern prison camp during the Civil War. Another film with a historical theme is "The Miracle," which plays off at the time of Waterloo.

Set in more recent times are "Shake Hands with the Devil," now shooting in Ireland and telling a story of the 1920 Irish Republican rebellion, and "Inherit the Wind," which Stanley Kramer will make, based on the play about the Scopes trial. And anticipating the future, with a somewhat bleak outlook, are two films — "On the Beach" and the one made by Harry Belafonte. Both deal with situations created after the world has been devastated by a new war.

Wall Streeters See Their Own Men And Views Sure-Winning in Loew's

By ABEL GREEN

Wall Streeters say that the way the market is acting on Loew's Inc. stock the investors are betting on Louis A. Green and Jerome Newman in the current tussle with Joseph R. Vogel, company president, who is resisting spinning off the Culver City studio. Downtowners aver that a special committee appointed at last week's special meeting, which must report back in November, will recommend finalization of the move to divorce the company and relinquish the film production-distribution phase of it. It is said, pointedly, that this is not a "loaded" committee by the Vogel management.

The insurance companies are owed some $24,000,000 and the proposed split, under Federal divorcement, would relieve the real estate company (theatres, music, records, radio and tv stations) of that commitment. Proposal is for the picture company to assume that indebtedness, on the theory it was largely borrowed for film production in the first place. No. 2, the potential $35,000,000 in television film rentals would redound 50% to the picture company, hence it would yield an immediate $17,500,000 against $24,000,000 obligation.

All the film libraries already earmarked for tv and the post-1948 films would go into the picture company, as a major asset for unlimited future value according to present plans. The studio also would retain MGM-TV film production and distribution operations, according to the Green-Newman plan.

Want No Proxy Fight

Green-Newman want no proxy fight, they aver, and while Vogel has been heatedly opposing spinning off the studio, they favor him to become president of the new Loew's Inc. which would comprise the theatre holdings, real estate, MGM Records, radio station WMGM (N. Y.), interests in several television stations across the land, and The Big Three Music Corp. (holding company for the Robbins, Feist and Miller Music Publishing Corps. Metro has dominant control although 20th-Fox also has an interest in the music firms).

The trading volume in Loew's Inc. stock has been big in a bullish market; some days the former blue chip and bellweather amusement stock was the No. 1 traded issue. It has pyramided in a few months from a low of $12 to over $22, and this near-doubling of the value of the stock is not based, say the downtowners, on "Cat" or "Gigi"

Vogel Sees 'Peace'

There's to be no proxy fight at Loew's, despite reports to the contrary, president Joseph R. Vogel stated in New York yesterday (Tues.). While declining to offer any official breakdown, he said all Loew's divisions ("including our studio in Hollywood, which I regard as our prime asset") are operating at a profit.

Vogel went on: "I want it plainly understood that my associates and I assumed our positions in Loew's to rehabilitate, not liquidate, our greatest potential earning asset—the MGM studios."

The prez said in effect he originally had asked for a brief opportunity to show the film-making lot could make money and, having been given such opportunity, the point has been proven.

Vogel's Own Spin: Theatres By Jan.

Joseph R. Vogel, president of Loew's, will attempt to spin off the domestic theatre end of the corporation, as he has wanted to do from the start, by next January. This would be a month in advance of the Loew's annual meeting of stockholders.

Such a move is being opposed by the Louis Green-Jerome Newman board-stockholder group, which wants the studio spun-off, with the theatre division and other subsidiary enterprises emerging as the parent.

Vogel's strategy, as now blueprinted, is designed to avert a proxy fight and, at the same time, achieve the chief exec's objectives.

As president, Vogel is said to feel he's in a position to call the turns on the corporate split. This is particularly so, he believes, since the stockholders already have voted approval (several years ago) of dividing the company along the lines he chooses.

It's figured in some quarters, though, that such a maneuver would bring about court action, with Green, Newman, et al., looking for an injunction to stop Vogel.

CHUCK TEITEL'S HORIZON

Chi Art Handler Eyes Additional Markets

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Chuck Teitel is pondering expansion of his distribution and theatre interests based here, with possibility the former may wind up as a sometime national operation.

With foreign pictures (e.g. "And God Created Woman," "La Strada") the bulk of its roster, the distribbery now covers the Chi, Milwaukee and Indianapolis exchange territories, but Teitel has eyes additionally for the Des Moines, St. Louis and Minneapolis markets. In the case of some pix, he would book nationwide.

Theatrewise, Teitel has only one showcase, the 600-seat World Playhouse, Chi's pioneer art filmery, but Teitel says he "may go into art situations elsewhere," most likely in one or more major midwest cities.

Ready 'Elmer Gantry'

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Richard Brooks has just returned from Europe with a first draft of Sinclair Lewis' expose of evangelism, "Elmer Gantry." Release to be budgetted at $3,000,000 is marked to go through United Artists. Filming starts Dec. 15.

Brooks is handling both writing and directing.

Irving Lazar is coordinating production.

'Beg' Public To See 'Debutante'

Minneapolis, Oct. 7.

"The Reluctant Debutante," at the Gopher here, has failed by a long distance to come up to boxoffice expectation, but is now in its third (and final) week because the winning competing bid required its retention.

At the third week's outset, the Gopher management, upset because of the mild response to a highly praised attraction, took large newspaper space virtually to plead with the public not to overlook the picture, a new approach here and, coming at the runs' end all the more unusual.

Among other type-packed ad headed "Attention" pointed out the large business done by "Debutante" at New Yorks' Radio City and declared "it's the talk of the country and it has been a privilege for this theatre to show it—one of the finest comedies ever made."

"Unhesitatingly recommending" it, the ad expresses the hope "you will not pass up this opportunity to see it—one of the year's best pictures."

New Films Hypo L.A.; 'Defiant' Huge $43,000, 'Seas' Socko 27G, 'Terror' Fair 13G, 'Desire' 9½G, 'Days' 14G

Los Angeles, Oct. 7.

Local first-runs are taking on a rosier hue this week because of a pair of wow new bills. "Defiant Ones" is heading for a great $43,000 in two theatres. "South Seas Adventure," after running up a slick $15,800 for three-day first week, is looking for a socko $27,000 in second, picture's first full week at Warner Hollywood.

Other newies shape fair to mild or worse. "It—Terror From Beyond Space" looks mild $13,000 in three houses. First multiple run of "La Parisienne" looms fair $12,500 in four spots. "Matchmaker," also on initial multi-run, is neat $9,700 for four locations.

"Streetcar Named Desire," in third round at Four Star, and opening week for two other houses, shapes okay $9,500. "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" looms snappy $11,000 in sixth frame at Fox Wilshire. "Big Country" is rated hearty $7,000 in seventh Warner Beverly session.

All hard-ticket entries are holding well with just as strong or better takes than recently. "Around World in 80 Days" shapes as standout in this category with a tall $14,200 in 94th stanza at the Carthay.

Estimates for This Week

Fox Beverly, Orpheum (FWC-Metropolitan) (1,170; 2,213; 90-$2)—"Defiant Ones" (UA). Socko $43,000. Last week, Fox Beverly, "Reluctant Debutante" (M-G) (6th wk), $4,900. Orpheum with Hollywood, "Trapeze" (UA), "Vera Cruz" (UA) (reissues), $5,900.

'Yankees' Mighty $22,000, Toronto

Toronto, Oct. 7.

"Damn Yankees" and "Dunkirk" did turnaway weekend biz to pace newcomers currently. Former is terrific at Imperial. "Tale of Two Cities" also looks fine at small Hyland house. "Reluctant Debutante" still is solid in eight stanza at Loew's while "Gigi" is rated big in 11th session at the Towne. "Indiscreet" also looms fine in sixth round at the Hollywood. "Harry Black and Tiger" shapes sad at Carlton.

Estimates for This Week

Carlton (Rank) (2,518; 75-$1.25)—"Harry Black and Tiger" (20th). Sad $7,000. Last week, "Me and Colonel" (Col) (3d wk), $11,500.

'Yankees' Big 16G, Philly; 'Cat' 32G, 2

Philadelphia, Oct. 7.

Saturday brought back old times here for first-runs with the World Series clobbering matinees. However, several pix fared so well at night that they are coming through with excellent showings. "Damn Yankees" shapes socko opening week at Randolph while "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" still is wow in second stanza at the Stanley. "Defiant Ones" is rated proud in second week at smaller Stanton. "Dunkirk" drew good notices but it is disappointing at the wickets.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (536; 99-$1.80) — "Dunkirk" (M-G). So-so $7,500. Last week, "Decks Ran Red" (M-G) (2d wk), $5,000.

Hub Hot; 'Yankees' Sockeroo $24,000, 'Defiant' Boff 19G, 2d, 'Cat' 11G, 7th

Boston, Oct. 7.

Little new product here, but biz is perking all the same with strong holdovers and crisp autumn weather helping trade. "Damn Yankees" shapes sock opening week at the Metropolitan, first winner for house in some time. "High School Hellcats" is good at Paramount and Fenway.

"Badlanders" is fairish at the Orpheum. "Defiant Ones" is the ace holdover with a great take in second at the Memorial. Most surprising is "Time Of Desire" at the Capri which appears set for a longrun after breaking house record, being torrid in second frame. Also smash is "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" in seventh round at State. "Me And Colonel" is holding solid in second at Exeter. "Night Heaven Fell" is still hot at Beacon Hill in sixth round.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,371; 75-$1.25)—"Matchmaker" (Par) (3d wk). Nice $7,000. Last week, $9,000.

'Yankees' Great 11G in Dull K.C.

Kansas City, Oct. 7.

Baseball influence is being felt at local deluxers this session as "Damn Yankees" leads the town with a smash week at the Paramount. Otherwise grosses are mild, "Harry Black and Tiger" in three Fox Midwest houses being especially dull. "Me and Colonel" at the Midland is very slow. "God Created Woman" continues to stretch the longrun record at the Kimo while "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" remains strong in sixth week at the Roxy. "Windjammer" shapes nice in sixth round at the Missouri.

Estimates for This Week

Glen, Dickinson, Shawnee Drive-nn, Leawood Drive-in (Dickinson) (700; 750; 1,100 cars; 900 cars; 75-90) — "Robbery Under Arms" (Rank) plus "Destination 60,000" (AA) (2d run). Mild $7,500. Last week, "Never Love Stranger" (AA), "In Between Age" (AA), "The Oklahoman" (AA) (2d run), same.

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; 90-$1.25)—"God Created Woman" (Kings) (35th wk). Bright $2,000. Last week, ditto.

Midland (Loew) (3,500; 75-90)—"Me and Colonel" (Col) and "She Played with Fire" (Col). Slow $5,500, although drawing strong reviews. Last week, "Dunkirk" (M-G) and "Andy Hardy Comes Home" (M-G), $4,500.

Missouri (SW-Cinerama) (1,194; $1.25-$2)—"Windjammer (NT) (6th wk). Holding on at nice $10,000. Last week, same.

Paramount (UP) (1,900; 90-$1.25) — "Damn Yankees" (WB). Nifty $11,000, holds. Last week, "Matchmaker" (Par), $7,000.

Roxy (Durwood) (879; 90-$1.50)—"Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (6th wk). Sturdy $4,500; may stay again. Last week, $6,000.

Uptown, Fairway, Granada (Fox Midwest) (2,043; 700; 1,217; 75-90) "Harry Black and Tiger" (20th) and "White Witch Doctor" (20th) (reissue). Dull $8,000. Last week, "Raw Wind in Eden" (U) and "Saga of Hemp Brown" (U), $7,500.

H.O.'s Boost Cincy Biz; 'Yankees' Robust $8,000, 'Country' Solid at 7G

Cincinnati, Oct. 7.

Hefty holdovers are boosting downtown trade to a favorable degree this week. "Damn Yankees" at Palace and "Big Country" at Keith's shape as solid secondweekers with "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" retaining first-run lead in sixth stanza at the flagship Albee. "Search for Paradise" bids to climb in 44th week as scheduled closing nears. Run of "South Pacific" at the Valley, suburban deluxer, was interrupted Oct. 1 in 23d week by a labor dispute. Owner Lou Wiethe's marquee explanation reads: "Featherbedding by the operators closed this theatre."

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 90-$1.25)—"Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (6th wk). Still plenty solid at $8,500 after last week's $9,500.

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65)—"Search for Paradise" (Cinerama) (44th wk). Perking to $12,000, potent, in announced final two weeks. Last week, $11,000. "Windjammer" (NT) tentatively scheduled to open Oct. 22.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 75-$1.10)—"Oklahoma" (20th) and "Carousel" (20th) (reissues). Okay $6,500. Last week, "China Doll" (UA) and "Fort Massacre" (UA), $6,000.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 90-$1.25)—"Big Country" (UA) (2d wk). Solid $7,000 after $8,600 preem.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 90-$1.10)—"Damn Yankees" (WB) (2d wk). Swell $8,000. Opener was $10,500.

Det. Off But 'Yankees' Socko $16,000, 'Parisienne' Torrid 12G, Both 2d

Detroit, Oct. 7.

Theatre-going pace is slowing somewhat this week but, generally, downtown biz remains sturdy. "Wind Across Everglades" shapes fair at the Palms while "Matchmaker" is only at the Fox. "Tank Battalion" looks oke at the Broadway-Capitol. However, the second week of "Damn Yankees" is socko at the Michigan while "La Parisienne" stays torrid for second round at the Madison. "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" continues to sizzle in sixth week at the Adams. "South Pacific" looms strong in 26th week at the United Artists.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox-Detroit) (5,100; 90-$1.25)—"Matchmaker" (Par) and "Time Lock" (DCA). Mild $12,500. Last week, "Harry Black Tiger" (20th) and "Desert Hell" (20th), $15,200.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,000; $1.25-$1.50) — "Damn Yankees" (WB) and "Handle With Care" (M-G) (2d wk). Socko $16,000. Last week, $19,000.

Palms (UD) (2,961; 90-$1.25)—"Wind Across Everglades" (WB) and "Whole Truth" (Col). Fair $12,000. Last week, "Never Love Stranger" (AA) and "Bullwhip" (AA), $15,500.

Madison (UD) (1,900; $1.25-$1.50)—"La Parisienne" (UA) and "Lost Lagoon" (Col) (2d wk). Hotsy $12,000. Last week, $18,000.

Broadway-Capitol (UD) (3,500; 90-$1.25)—"Tank Battalion" (AI) and "Hell Squad" (AI). Average $12,000. Last week, "How to Make Monster" (AI) and "Teenage Caveman" (AI), $11,800.

United Artists (UA) (1,667; $1.25-$3)—"South Pacific" (20th) (26th wk). Strong $12,000. Last week, same.

Adams (Balaban) (1,700; $1.25)—$1.50)—"Cat on A Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (6th wk). Great $9,000. Last week, $9,500.

Music Hall (SW-Cinerama) (1,205; $1.25-$2.65)—"South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama). Begins tomorrow (Wed.). Last week, "Search for Paradise" (Cinerama) (34th wk), terrific $32,500 in final nine days.

Trans-Lux Krim (Trans-Lux) (1,000; 90-$1.65)—"Case of Dr. Laurent" (T-L) (4th wk). Dropping to oke $4,500. Last week, $6,000.

'Yankees' Fast $13,000, St. Loo; 'Cat' Hep 9G, 6th

St. Louis, Oct. 7.

The big new entry at the wickets this week is "Damn Yankees," fine at the Fox. "Me and Colonel" at the St. Louis looks lean while "White Wilderness" at the Orpheum is only okay. "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" is going into a strong sixth week at Loew's. "Windjammer" is continuing steady at the Ambassador also in sixth. "South Pacific," the holdover champ, is now in a 25th week at the Pageant.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Cinerama) (1,400; $1.20-$2.40)—"Windjammer" (NT) (6th wk). Good $9,000. Last week, same.

Apollo Art (Grace) (700; 90-$1.25)—"Time of Desire" (Indie). Oke $2,500. Last week, "A Man Escaped" (Indie), $2,500.

Fox (Arthur) (5,000; 65-90)—"Damn Yankees" (WB), fine $13,000. Last week, "Kathy-O" (U) and

Chi Spotty; 'Hunters' Bangup $18,000, 'Liane' Wham 32G, 'Gigi' Lusty 14G, 'Cat' Big 23G, 6th, 'Colonel' 21G

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Generally moderate biz is in sight for Loop first-runs this session though a few situations are rated hotsy. Roosevelt's initialer of "The Hunters" expects a bangup $18,000 while first frame of "Liane, Jungle Goddess" at Woods may hit a boff $26,000.

Preem sesh of "Law and Disorder" at the Surf is figured a nice $6,000.

Sock among the holdover are "Me and Colonel" in second round at the Esquire and "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" in sixth stanza at the Chicago. "Certain Smile" is good in Oriental second session. "Damn Yankees" is lively for ditto United Artists round. Garrick's second week of "Wind Across Everglades" is rated soft. Fourth frame of "White Wilderness" at the Loop is nice. "Big Country" in seventh State-Lake stanza shapes oke.

Of the hard ticket pix, "South Seas Adventure" posted a dandy second session at the Palace while "Gigi" at Harris in 13th canto holds strong. "South Pacific" is fine after 28 weeks at McVickers. "Around World in 80 Days" looks great in 79th round at Todd's Cinestage.

Estimates for This Week

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 90-$1.80) —"Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (6th wk). Stout $23,000. Last week, $28,000.

Esquire (H&E Balaban) (1,350; $1.50)—"Me and Colonel" (Col) (2d wk). Boffo $21,000. Last week, $24,000.

Garrick (B&K) (850; 90-$1.25)— "Wind Across Everglades" (WB) and "Bullwhip" (AA) (2d wk). Soft $6,500. Last week, $10,000.

Harris (Todd) (984; $1.25-$3)— "Gigi" (M-G) (13th wk). Nice $14,000. Last week, $16,000.

Loop (Telem't) (606; 90-$1.50)— "White Wilderness" (BV) (4th wk). Hep $7,500. Last week, $9,500.

McVickers (JL&S) (1,580; $1.25-$3.30) — "South Pacific" (20th) (28th wk). Trim $20,800. Last week, $21,000.

Monroe (Jovan) (1,000; 65-90)— "Wild Heritage" (U) and "Slim Carter" (U). Okay $5,500. Last week "Bad Girl" (DCA) and "Wolf Pack" (DCA) $5,000.

Oriental (Indie) (3,400; 90-$1.50) —"Certain Smile" (20th) (2d wk). Good $18,500. Last week, $27,000.

Palace (SW-Cinerama) (1,434; $1.25-$3.40)—"South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama) (2d wk). Hot $31,000. Last week, $34,000.

Roosevelt (B&K) (1,400; 90-$1.80) —"The Hunters" (20th). Nifty $18,-

'Country' Crisp $15,000, Mpls.; 'Yankees' 9G, 2d, 'Cat' Fast 7½G in 6th

Minneapolis, Oct. 7.

The big, important newcomer is "The Big Country," socko at the State. Too many holdovers are slowing the Loop over-all take. "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" is in its sixth smash RKO Orpheum session. Also still good is "Damn Yankees" in its second week at Radio City. "Search for Paradise" and "South Pacific" are chalking up their 32d and 15th weeks, respectively. "Defiant Ones" in second stanza looks big.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (947; $1.50-$2.65)—"South Pacific" (20th) (15th wk). Still a consistent winner at good $8,500. Last week, $9,000.

Century (SW-Cinerama) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65) — "Search for Paradise" (Cinerama) (32d wk). Sturdy $9,000. Last week, $9,200.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 85-90)— "Reluctant Debutante" (M-G) (3d wk). Modest $4,000. Last week, $4,200.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 85-90)— "Thundering Jets" (20th) and "Tarzan's Fight for Life" (M-G). Slow $4,000. Last week, "Camp on Blood Island" (Col) and "Snorkel" (Col) (2d wk), $4,500.

Radio City (Par) (4,100; 90-$1.25) —"Damn Yankees" (WB) (2d wk). Raves for this but only fair $9,000. Last week, $13,000, also a bit under hopes.

RKO Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 90-$1.50)—"Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (6th wk). Easily one of year's b.o. champions. Big $7,500. Last week, $9,000. Stays on.

RKO Pan (RKO) (1,800; 75-85)— "Voice in Mirror" (U) and "Ride Crooked Trail" (U) split with "Haunted Strangers" (M-G) and

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'Yankees' Pacing Pitt, Nice $10,000

Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.

Only "Damn Yankees" on Stanley in second round much this week. However, reissue of "Streetcar Named Desire" at Squirrel Hill is doing very well. Everything else is in the doghouse, with "Reluctant Debutante" particularly disappointing at Penn. Nothing either "Andy Hardy Comes Home" at Harris. "South Pacific" finished strong at Nixon in 25th session.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 80-$1.25)— "Villa" (20th) (reissue). In for only 5 days and won't do more than $3,000. Last week, "Harry Black Tiger" (20th), $3,500.

Guild (Green) (500; 99-$1.25)— "Constant Husband" (Rank). Fine $2,000; will stick. Last week, "Cast Dark Shadow" (DCA) and "Loser Takes All" (DCA), $1,100.

Harris (Harris) (2,165; 80-$1.25) — "Andy Hardy Comes Home" (M-G). Going nowhere and will be lucky to get even $3,500. Last week, "Me and the Colonel" (Col), $5,500.

Nixon (Rubin) (1,500; $1.25-$3)— "South Pacific" (20th) (25th-final wk). Big $11,500, giving picture better than $250,000 on run. It'll be back when there is a break in house's legit bookings. Only came out because stage season is starting.

Penn (UA) (3,300; 80-$1.25) — "Reluctant Debutante" (M-G). Good notices but it doesn't look like even mild $10,000 in 9½ days. Locked booking for "Big Country," brings in new pic Thursday (9) night.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (900; 99-$1.25) —"Streetcar Named Desire" (WB) (reissue). Pleasant surprise with solid $4,000 or over. Stays. Last week, "Law and Disorder" (Cont), $2,000.

Stanley (SW) (3,800; 80-$1.25)— "Damn Yankees" (WB) (2d wk). Fine weekend helped by sneak of "Onionhead" (WB) Sunday night, and better than fine $10,000 looms. Last week, $13,500.

Warner (SW) (1,500; $1.20-$2.40) — "Windjammer" (NT) (4th wk). Taking a little dip, down to $8,500. Last week, $9,500. Group sales and parties are just beginning to jell.

'Colonel' Trim $7,000, Prov.; 'Yankees' 9G, 2d

Providence, Oct. 7.

Weekend afternoon biz took a sharp dive as many sat in front of tv radio sets to view the Series. Top new pic looks like "Me and Colonel," trim at Albee. Majestic on its holdover of "Damn Yankees" shapes snappy. "La Parisienne" did nicely on 10 days at State. Strand is fair with "She Played with Fire."

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 65-80)— "Me and Colonel" (Col) and "Apache Territory" (Col). Trim $7,000. Last week, "War of Satellites" (AA) and "Attack of 50-Ft. Woman" (AA), $4,000.

Majestic (SW) (2,200; 65-90)— "Damn Yankees" (WB) (2d wk). Snappy $9,000 after $14,000 on opener.

State (Loew) (3,200; 65-80)— "Reluctant Debutante" (M-G) and "I Accuse" (M-G). Just started. Last week, "La Parisienne" (UA) and "The Careless Years" (UA), nice $15,0000 in 10-day stand.

Strand (National Realty) (2,200; 65-80)—"She Played with Fire" (Col) and "Kill Her Gently" (Col). Fairish $4,500. Last week, "Whole Truth" (Col) and "Ghost of China Sea" (Col), $3,500.

'Wilderness' Good 8G, Seattle; 'Cat' 4½G, 6th

Seattle, Oct. 7.

Not much that's exciting at the wickets here this stanza with holdovers further bogging down biz. "White Wilderness" shapes as best new pic but it's barely good at Music Hall. Both "Cat on Hot Hin Roof" at Music Box and "Big Country" at Paramount, both in sixth rounds, are doing well despite their long runs. "Tank Force" shapes mild at Coliseum.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (800; $1.50-$2.50)—"South Pacific" (20th) (19th wk). Solid $7,000. Last week, $7,600.

Coliseum (Fox-Evergreen) (1,870; 90-$1.50)—"Tank Force" (Col) and "Buchanan Rides Alone" (Col). Mild $6,000. Last week, "Harry Black Tiger" (20th) and "Villa" (20th), $5,700.

Fifth Avenue (Fox-Evergreen) (2,500; 90-$1.50) — "Tale of Two Cities" (Rank) and "Robbery Under Arms" (Rank). Sad $4,500. Last week, "Gun Runners" (UA) and "China Doll" (UA), $6,300.

Music Box (Hamrick) (850; 90-$1.50)—"Cat on Tin Roof" (M-G). (6th wk). Good $4,500 in 6 days. Last week, $5,700.

Music Hall (Hamrick) (2,200; 90-$1.50) — "White Wilderness" (BV) and "Once Upon Horse" (U). Good $8,000 or close. Last week, "Wind Across Everglades" (WB) and "Ride Crooked Trail" (U), $3,900.

Orpheum (Hamrick) (2,700; 90-$1.50)—"Damn Yankees" (WB) and "Saga, Hemp Brown" (U) (2d wk). Okay $6,000. Last week, $7,200.

Paramount (Fox-Evergreen) (3,107; 90-$1.50) — "Big Country" (UA). (6th wk). Trim $5,000. Last week, $5,600.

'Gigi' Smash 12G In Perky Indpls.

Indianapolis, Oct. 7.

Biz has perked up a little at first-run houses here this stanza. "Gigi" opened big at Loew's to lead city, and looks sure for holdover. "From Here To Eternity" is doing well in reissue run at Circle. "South Pacific" continues at profitable level in 24th week at Lyric. "Damn Yankees" is good for second week at Keith's.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Cockrill-Dolle) (2,800; 75-90) — "Here to Eternity" (Col) (reissue). Fine $9,000. Last week, "Harry Black Tiger" (20th) and "Cattle Empire" (20th), $7,500.

Keith's (C-D) (1,300; 75-90) — "Damn Yankees" (WB) (2d wk). Good $7,000. Last week, $11,000.

Loew's (Loew) (2,427; 90-$1.25) — "Gigi" (M-G). Great $12,000. Last week, "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (5th wk), $6,000.

Lyric (C-D) (850; $1.25-$2.20) — "South Pacific" (20th) (24th wk). Sturdy $9,000. Last week, $9,500.

'TIGER' NSH $10,000, WASH.; 'CAT' 17G, 5TH

Washington, Oct. 7.

New offerings are generally disappointments in a slow week here. "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" is holding strongly in a fifth stanza. "Harry Black and Tiger" is getting a poor reception. "Damn Yankees" still is solid in second week, two houses. "Gigi," with a gradual drop spaced over 15 frames, is down to point that it will be pulled Oct. 15 to make way for "Reluctant Debutante" at the Columbia. "Me and Colonel" is slowing up in fourth stanza at Keith's.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador-Metropolitan (SW) (1,490; 1,000; 90-$1.25)—"Damn Yankees" (WB) (2d wk). Solid $16,000 or near after $20,000 for opener. Stays on.

Apex (K-B) (940; 60-90)—"Indiscreet" (WB) (2d run). Oke $3,000. Last week, "Naked Eye" (Indie) (2d wk), $2,800.

Capitol (Loew) (3,434; 90-$1.25)— "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (5th wk). Doing fine at $17,000 after $18,000 in fourth.

Columbia (Loew) (904; $1.25-$2.50)—"Gigi" (M-G) (15th wk). Falling to good $7,500, following $8,500.

Keith's (RKO) (1,850; 90-$1.25)— "Me and Colonel" (Col) (4th wk). Weakening to $8,000, still okay in final week. Last week, $9,500.

MacArthur (K-B) (900; $1.10)— "Law and Disorder" (Indie) (2d wk). Okay $4,700 after $3,500 last week.

Ontario (K-B) (1,240; $1.25)— "Tale of Two Cities" (Rank). Disappointing $4,500, but holds. Last week, "Arsenic and Old Lace" (In-

Series Bops B'way B.O. But 'Geisha' Grand $47,000, 'Country' Boff at 33G; 'Yankees'-Stageshow Bangup 81G, 2d

Despite four new bills and favorable fall weather, the impact of the World Series will give Broadway first-runs an uneven picture this session. Even some of the new entrants are faring shabbily. However, some holdovers shape as strong spots.

One of the better newcomers is "Barbarian and the Geisha," which looks like nice $47,000 at the Paramount, atttesting to the draw of John Wayne, male star of the film. "Big Country" shapes sock with $33,000 in first week at the Astor.

"Onionhead" is rated a major disappointment, with only $22,000 for opening round at the Capitol. "Windom's Way" also is a lightweight with less than $7,000 in prospect for first stanza at the Odeon.

"Damn Yankees," with stageshow, is holding up with big $81,000 in sight for first holdover round at the Roxy. Still coin champion is "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" plus stageshow which looks to hold with socko $150,000 in third session at the Music Hall. "Defiant Ones," while down considerably from its mighty opening week, still is very big at $27,000 in second Victoria stanza.

"Raw Wind in Eden" looms fair $12,000 in third round at the State, but faring comparatively better than many holdovers.

Newest hard-ticket film, "South Seas Adventure," is perking up to solid $29,000 in 11th session at the Warner where now in 12th week. There is a re-shuffle of many other hard-ticketers, with "South Pacific" going into the Rivoli on Monday (6) after 28 weeks at the Criterion. Latter opened "Old Man and Sea" yesterday (Tues.).

"Around World in 80 Days" finished five days of 103d stanza with a big $30,000 at the Riv. "Bridge on River Kwai," which is due to end its run at the Palace with five days of current (43d) week, held remarkably well at $18,500 for full 42d session. "Gigi," which stayed at $19,300 capacity in 20th round at the Royale, is due to move to the Sutton in about 30 days.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,094; 75-$2)— "Big Country" (UA). First session ending today (Wed.) looks to reach smash $33,000 or close. In ahead, "Vikings" (UA) (16th wk-6 days), $11,000. "Country" opened with a special preem night of Oct. 1. Holding, naturally.

Little Carnegie (L. Carnegie) (550; $1.25-$1.80)—"Matchmaker" (Par) (9th wk). The eighth round concluded yesterday (Tues.) was okay $5.500 after $6,200 in seventh week. Stays on through October, at least.

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$1.70) —"Of Life and Love" (DCA). Opened Monday (6). Last week, "Premier May" (Cont) (3d wk-6 days), fair $3,800 after $5,100 in full second week.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50) —"Onionhead" (WB) (2d wk). First session finished yesterday (Tues.) was modest $22,000 or near.

Criterion (Moss) (1,671; $1.80-$3.50)—"Old Man and Sea" (WB). Opened yesterday (Tues.). In ahead, "South Pacific" (20th) (28th wk), trim $20,000 after $24,200 in 27th week.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80) —"Me and Colonel" (Col) (7th wk). Sixth round ended Monday (6) was solid $9,500. Fifth was $10,000.

Guild (Guild) (450; $1-$1.75)— "Hot Spell" (Par) (3d wk). This session ending today (Wed.) is heading for fine $5,100. Second was $8,000. Stays.

Mayfair (Indie) (1,736; 79-$1.80) —"Wind Across Everglades" (WB) (4th wk). This week ending today (Wed.) still is dragging bottom at a sad $5,000 or less. Third week was $6,500.

Normandie (Trans-Lux) (592; 95-$1.80) — "Rocket To Calabuch" (T-L). Opened yesterday (Tues.). In ahead, "White Wilderness" (BV) (8th wk), okay $5,500, same as seventh week.

Palace (RKO) (1,642; $1-$3)— "Bridge on River Kwai" (Col) (43d wk). The 42d week concluded yesterday (Tues.) was good $18,500. The 41st week, $20,100. "Roots of Heaven" (20th) opens next Wednesday (15) night with benefit for Lighthouse. "Kwai" stays only five days in current (43d) week, fact that it is playing in Brooklyn currently obviously hurting.

Odeon (Rank) (813; 90-$1.80)— "Windom's Way" (Rank) (2d wk). First stanza finished Monday (6) was sluggish $7,000.

Royale (Loew) (934; $1.50-$3)— "Gigi" (M-G) (21st wk). The 20th round ended Saturday (4) was capacity $19,300. The 19th week, ditto. Moves to the Sutton after run is concluded here.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,665; $1-$2) — "Barbarian and Geisha" (20th). First week winding up tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to hit nice $47,000. Stays on, natch! Last week, "Harry Black and Tiger" (20th) (2d wk), $21,000.

Paris (Pathe Cinema) (568; 90-$1.80) — "Crime and Punishment" (Kings) (4th-final wk). Third round ended Monday (6) was fine $6,800. Second was $8,000. "Seventh Seal" (Janus) opens Oct. 13.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 90-$2.75)—"Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) with stageshow (3d wk). This week winding up today (Wed.) is heading for great $150,000. Second was $152,000, a bit below expectancy. Stays.

Rivoli (UAT) (1,545; $1.25-$3.50) —"South Pacific" (20th). Opened here Monday (6). In ahead, "Around World in 80 Days" (UA) 103d wk-5 days) was fancy $30,000. The 102d full week, $39,000.

Rialto (Brandt) (594; 75-$1.50)— "Shameless Sex" (Mishkin) (4th wk). Third week ended Friday (3) was big $9,000 after $11,200 in second. Fourth week, over weekend was running a bit ahead of third.

Plaza (Lopert) (525; $1.50-$2)— "Inspector Maigret" (Lope). Opens today (Wed.). Last week, "La Parisienne" (UA) (10th wk), lean $4.500 after $6,000 in ninth week.

Roxy (Indie) (5.705; 90-$2.50)— "Damn Yankees" (WB) with stageshow (2d wk). Initial holdover week winding up tomorrow (Thurs.) looks like big $81,000. First was $91,000, a bit below hopes. Stays on.

State (Loew) (3,450; 50-$1.75)— "Raw Wind in Eden" (U) (3d wk). Current week ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to hit fair $12,000. Second was $15,000. "Decks Ran Red" (M-G) opens Friday (10).

Sutton (R&B) (561; 95-$1.75)— "Town Like Alice" (Rank) (3d wk). Second session finished Saturday (4) was mild $4,000. First was $5,200. "Dangerous Exile" (Rank) opens Friday (10).

Trans-Lux 52d St. (T-L) (540; $1-$1.50) — "Case of Dr. Laurent" (T-L) (16th wk). The 15th week completed yesterday (Tues.) was big $8,500. The 14th week, $7,500.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,003; 50-$2) —"Defiant Ones" (UA) (3d wk). Second stanza concluded yesterday (Tues.) was great $27,000 or near. First was $40,000, over expectancy. Looks set for run.

Warner (SW-Cinerama) (1,600; $1.80-$3.50) — "South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama) (12th wk). The 11th session ended Saturday (4) was lively $29,000. The 10th week, $26,700. Stays, with "Windjammer" (NT) due to supplant "Seas" when and if.

L'ville Fancy; 'Yankees' Great $8,000, 'Eden' Hot 6G, 'Deb' Fair $8,500

Louisville, Oct. 7.

Mainstem biz is maintaining a healthy pace this week, strong new product being the pull. "Streetcar Named Desire" on reissue at the Rialto is garnering steady trade but "Reluctant Debutante" at United Artists is just fair. "Damn Yankees" at the Mary Anderson, is proving a great draw. "Raw Wind in Eden" shapes solid.

Estimates for Last Week

Brown (Fourth Ave.) (1,200; $1.25-$2)—"South Pacific" (20th) (22d wk). Slowing a bit to good $5,500, after 21st week's $6,000.

Kentucky (Switow) (900; 60-90) —"Raw Wind in Eden" (U). Solid $6,000. Last week, "Matchmaker" (Par), same.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,000; 60-90)—"Damn Yankees" (WB). Going great at $8,000. Last week, "Indiscreet" (WB) (3d wk), $5,500.

Rialto (Fourth Ave.) (3,000; 60-85) —"Streetcar Named Desire" (20th) (reissue). Fine $8,500 looms. Last week, "Harry Black and Tiger" (20th), $7,500.

United Artists (UA) (3,000; 60-90) —"Reluctant Debutante" (M-G). Fair $8,500. Last week, "La Parisienne" (UA), $10,000.

Manhattan Importers Adopt Uncordial Attitude Toward Frisco 'Festival'

Distributors of foreign films in Manhattan are taking a distinctly negative attitude towards the upcoming San Francisco international film festival. They're resisting the idea of allowing their releases to be shown at the fest.

Since some of the best foreign pictures already are committed to distributors, this robs Frisco of a wide potential of product. It appears also to have affected the enthusiasm of some of the foreign industries re participation in the Frisco event and automatically sets up roadblocks for other cities that may wish to stage festivals along the Frisco lines.

Under the rules prevailing for the Golden Gate competition, no film that has already been shown in the States is eligible. This rules out quite a few top releases.

The indies argue that (1.) San Francisco doesn't have stature in the sense that publicity from it is not nationwide. (2.) It's in effect a private "promotion," headed by Irving (Bud) Levin, who has been working very hard to get the fest recognized. (3.) A picture can be "destroyed" by the local Frisco critics.

"I may give Levin a film, and it gets panned. Then what do I do?" asked one of the indies last week. "When I come to Herb Rosener, or one of the other art house operators in San Francisco, he may not want to book the picture. Also, he may tell me that he had a different notion of how to handle it. It just isn't worth taking the risk."

In contrast to Frisco, the European fests like Cannes and Venice benefit from the presence of some 600 international scribes. A picture rapped at these fests may get hurt in Europe, but the shock waves rarely reach the American public. If a film is a success, however, it stands a lot to gain. This, argue the indies, can't be said of Frisco except in a strictly local sense.

There's some resentment, too, that the Frisco showings take in a large group that pays for its admissions while the distributor is expected to simply contribute his film. What could build up the Golden Gate fest is enthusiastic participation from the major American companies. Latter haven't come through, though one—20th-Fox—probably will enter one of its new films.

It's the smaller countries, like India and Japan, which go into Frisco with enthusiasm since the fest serves as an ideal showcase for their little-recognized product. The bigger countries, like France for instance, are still undecided as to the extent of their participation. Size of the French delegation, if one comes, is still in doubt.

'Idle Gossip'—Levin

San Francisco, Oct. 7.

Irving M. Levin, director of the Frisco Film Festival, says rumors that the French, Italians and Germans are sidestepping his Oct. 29-Nov. 11 fete in favor of Mexico City are "just idle tearoom gossip."

Levin was apprised of these rumors from two New York sources last weekend and said:

"I checked with the Italians and they told me they'd put in films before Frisco was recognized, so they certainly aren't going to pull out now.

"I checked with the French, who had previously offered us two films and their reply was to offer a third film, if we wish it.

"I checked with the Germans, who said they are now deciding which two of three films to offer our festival."

Source of rumors may have lain in the fact that Sweden's "Wild Strawberries" is going to the mid-October Mexico City fete.

Levin said "Wild Strawberries" was the only Swedish film offered and that he couldn't take it if it played Mexico City first because the rules under which Frisco fete was sanctioned provide an entry may play nowhere in the Western Hemisphere outside the entry's country of origin before being shown at Frisco.

Under this rule, Levin states he's already been forced to nix possible entry of two U. S. pictures, "Old Man and the Sea," which played Stratford in Canada last summer, and "The Defiant Ones," which is going to Mexico City.

Levin added that the French have told him they'll send a delegation to Frisco—"I've already reserved 10 rooms for them at the hotel"—and the Italians are planning to send a delegation. He said the Germans were trying to send a director, too.

Japan Producers Group Opposes Ministry Plan To Boost Pix Exports

Tokyo, Sept. 30.

The Motion Picture Producers Assn. of Japan (Eiren) decided to oppose plans by the Ministry of International Trade and Industry (MITI) to promote the showing of Japanese films abroad in order to increase picture exports. The ministry will raise its subsidy from $41,666 to $124,999. MITI is also making plans to increase the dollar allocation for importing raw films in proportion to the dollars earned by film exports.

Steps were taken as direct result of impetus from the winning of Golden Lion at Venice film fest by Toho's "Muhomatsu no Issho" (The Rickshaw Man).

Bill drafted by the House Commerce and Industry Committee calls for establishment of a corporation with government and industry funds to select product for export and mediate their marketing. Proposed corporation would cover selection of films to be exported with care not to misrepresent Japan and establishment of a reviewing board.

Product under this heading would include features, shorts, documentaries, information films and newsreels. Industry would bear the greater part of the capital of this corporation with the government making up the difference. Business shall also include purchase and export of Japanese films, dubbing and subtitling, script translations, public relations, etc.

Eiren opposes the bill because it does not feel such a government-industry organization offers much of a solution and because exports are increasing without this added expense.

In 1947, exports of Japanese films amounted to only $30,000. This figure jumped to $500,000 in 1951 when Daiei's "Rashomon" won the Grand Prix at Venice. Riding on the crest of a series of other monster pictures, Japanese films earned $1,400,00 overseas last year from exports to some 30 countries including the U.S., Russia, Red China and Taiwan.

Export goal this year is $2,300,000, with $1,057,000 realized during the first seven months of 1958.

India to Import More Raw Stock as Foreign Biz Rises

Madras, Sept. 30.

India government has finally decided to allow importation of additional footage of raw stock to meet increasing demand of prints for overseas distribution of Indian films. The additional footage for import would be based on the total length of films that would be exported to foreign countries. In recent months, there has been a growing demand for Indian films from the Far East, Middle East and even Rumania, Germany and Czechoslovakia.

The regulars who have been buying Indian films in good quantity are Ceylon, Singapore and the Fiji Islands among others. Ceylon is the principal buyer accounting for an annual revenue of over $200,000, with Singapore second at $130,000.

Decision of the government was disclosed by K. B. Lall, Director General of Foreign Trade. The government has been influenced both by pressure from film exporters in Bombay and Madras and also by reports that Indian films are received favorably. Hence, something should be done to step up their exports to earn a greater amount of foreign exchange.

Arg. Film Producing Biz Revived by Some Loans From Screen Institute

Buenos Aires, Oct. 7.

Argentina's dormant film industry is slightly revived by an injection of Screen Institute loan financing. About six productions are rolling or prepping to shoot. At least half of these are in dimensional systems. A recent crop of releases, due to novice directors, have culled some critical praise and encouraging boxoffice results, particularly Agentina Sono Film's "Procesado 1040" (Prisoner 1040) which is Ruben Cavalotti's second directorial job. "Isla Brava", directed by Mario Soffici, and released at the (Loew) Metro with the Critics' Asso. sponsorship, was released the same night. Both pictures were sold out and attendance justified a second week holdover.

After much wrangling trying to reconcile the ideas of all interested parties, Screen Institute president Narciso Machinandiarena submitted yet another draft film law to leave no single aspect of screen matters unregimented, with a view to overcoming the national screen crisis. Provincial Goverhors in Santiago del Estero, Tucuman and Salta are trying to emulate Peron, and muscle in on screen production. Tucuman's Celestino Gelsi has charged Angel Acciaresi with producing a documentary on Tueuman cane cropping, camera work to be done by Americo Hoss, with Peron's old friend, actress Malisa Zini playing a prominent role.

Much Current Production

Current production activities include "Salitre" (Saltpetre) which Carlos Rinaldie is rolling on location; "La Caida" (The Fall) which Leo Torre Nilsson has been shooting on central city streets; Richard von Schenk is working on "Rebellious River" (Cevi), with a mixed German-Argentine cast; Ariel Cortazzo is adapting "El Asalto" (The Attack), a whodunit adapted from Enrique Silberstein's novel, to be rolled in Guaranteed studios. Hugo del Carril has been searching for a boy and girl under 10 for "Las Tierras Blancas" (The White Lands), which Eduardo Borras has adapted from a Jose Manauta novel. Cinematografia Independencia is catching on to the topical petroleum problem, by asking a screen version of "Esta Sangre es Nuestra" (This Our Hood), adapted from Carlos Alberto Orlando's novel on Patagonia.

A nasty accident occurred to an Argentina Sono Film camera crew working on the Sono Film-Quilicci coproduction, "From the Appenines to the Andes." Of the several injured, camerman Julio Dasso died in hospital.

Orbe distributors plan going into production with Robert Siodmak while Sono Film is mulling a similar deal with Anthony Quinn.

Kurt Land is about ready to start shooting "Evangelina" for a new producton unit dubbed Albor, with the Bariloche lake district as background.

That section of the industry which always hopes that international bigwigs will turn their attention to production pictures on Argentine soil is heartened by reports that Charles Chaplin has purchased real estate and means to settle in Argentina, while Brigitte Bardot is expected here for tele work.

BFPA Chief Tabs Last 12 Months Worst Yet

London, Oct. 7.

The British film industry has gone through the worst 12 months in its history, according to Arthur Watkins, president of the British Film Producers Assn. He said that a great deal of the vacant floor space at British studios, caused by the lack of future film production, had to a large extent been filled by vidpix.

Watkins said the uncertainty which prevailed at the present time in the industry made it almost impossible to forecast the number of productions likely during the forthcoming year.

Berlin's Cultural Fest Lags

Berlin, Oct. 1.

Coming at the tag-end of Europe's festival-loaded summer Berlin's eighth annual event had a lacklustre first week though the Canadian pianist Glenn Gould was standout. In the first seven days five operas from regular repertory, 17 stage plays, of which four were premieres, a Japanese chamber music concert, an evening of ballet and an appearance of Antonio's Spanish Dancers plus the perhaps-inevitable "Die Fledermaus" did not add up to anything memorable.

Festival was disappointed by the cancellation of the Hamburg Deutsches Schausppielhaus which was to have offered "Faust." Illness in cast forced this.

Theatre goers awaited hopefully the premiere of "Kuerassier Sebastian und sein Sohn" by Theodor Schuebel, young (32) German author. This nation badly needs a new playwright, that with Schuebel a new talent would emerge. But his play was not a hit, though not a flop either. Dialog reveals ability, but, in all, play is nothing much.

First festival week brought also the preems of Shakespeare's "Storm," Schiller's "Fiesco" plus two one-act plays by Giraudoux, "Impromptu" and "Apollo of Bellac." Both "Storm" and "Fiesco" emerged as rather lukewarm presentations, mostly resulting from so-so direction, partly inadequate acting, but the Giraudoux pieces rated as definite successes. Willi Schmidt did an excellent staging job, same honor is due to the ensemble headed by Johanna von Koczian and Erich Schellow.

B'way Legit Busting Out All Over W. Germany; Many U.S. Translations

Frankfurt, Oct. 1.

Broadway's busting out all over West Germany. And the main theatre streets of the leading cities might well be named after the New York theatre section because the plays that light up most of the houses for the fall season are German translations of American hits.

Here are some of those opening for the first time in West Germany. "Tea and Sympathy" starts Oct. 7 at the Renaissance Theater in Berlin with Heidemarie Hatheyer in the lead. William Inge's "Dark at Top of the Stairs" is the Christmas production at the Duesseldorf City Theatre, with Miss Hatheyer again in the lead. Samuel Taylor's "Happy Times" opens at the Josefstadt Theatre in Vienna in November. "A Palm Tree in a Rose Garden" starts out at the Thalia Theatre in Hamburg next month. It stars Inge Meisl.

All of these plays are MCA products, represented in Germany by Liesel Frank Mittler, who explains the success of American plays in this manner: "Since over half of West Germany's theatres are subsidized by the city or the state government, the accent is on 'culture' instead of on 'entertainment.' And if a play has been a hit in America, the officials are likely to favor it for here.

"Amusing plays that were performed in America are unlikely to be performed here because the plays must be considered important or to carry a message."

Lack of new plays by German authors she explains logically. "When a theatre is subsidized, it is unlikely to try the work of an unknown young local author. And the German writers today are somehow obscure. They don't believe in taking the time to learn the craftsmanship of playing, and don't take the effort to write and re-write and re-write until a drama is perfect. It's too long a road for them.

"There's just a little start now, with a couple of new German dramatists beginning to gain fame. And the success of the play, 'The Visit of the Old Lady' by Swiss author Friederich Duerrenmatt, which is now running in N. Y., has tremendously encouraged the local playwrights."

'Misquoted': Geo. Devine

London.

Editor, VARIETY:

In your issue of Sept. 10 your London correspondent reported the comments supposed to have been made by Neville Blond, chairman of the English Stage Co., and myself on the subject of John Osborne's new musical play. Both these comments, as published in the London Daily Herald, are entirely misreported. I have attempted to get this put right here in London, to no avail. I would ask you, as a favor, to publish this letter so that the American public can know that neither Mr. Blond nor I said what is attributed to us.

The problem of Mr. Osborne's musical play in a small theatre like the Royal Court, with a very small orchestra pit, is insurmountable.

Metro's Sales Manager In London Raps Irish Censor Cuts, Rejections

Cork, Sept. 30.

Douglas King, Metro's general sales manager in London, here to talk to Cork Film Fest patrons on "Sale and Distribution of Films," had sharp words to offer Irish censor on scissoring and rejecting. It hurts the public by depriving them of entertainment, the exhibitor by restricting the number of pictures available and the distributor and producer. Another criticism for Ireland was that it has the highest rate of tax on cinema-going in the world.

Fest, which had only one American feature pic "Old Man and the Sea," exhibited, had a heavy diet of earnest documentaries in competitive classes. Only star of magnitude to attend was Vittorio de Sica for the screening of the German-Italian co-production, "Cannonen Serenade" (Cannon Serenade), one of only three comedies for the week. Others were Darry Cowl's slapstick opus, "Le Triporteur" (The Screwball), and Padri e Figli" (Fathers and Sons). Germany entered "Traumstrasse der Welt" (Dreamroad of the World), Hans Domnick's 90-minute travelogue on the Alaska-Mexico Highway and in the documentary classification.

British had no entries and no delegation, but Germany, France and Italy put on the pressure with special groups.

George Pattillo, manager of Interstate's Majestic Theatre, has resigned and is quitting Houston for Lake Tahoe to go into biz for himself. Ross Vallone, manager of the Tower Theatre, is being transferred to Majestic as successor. He will be replaced in turn at the Tower by John Ellis, now manager of the Santa Rosa.

'Indiscreet' Given 'O' Tag

Dublin, Sept. 30.

"Indiscreet" (WB), doing capacity biz at Adelphi here in its second week, has drawn an "O" (Objectionable) rating from National Film Institute's reviewing panel. Lengthy comment in the institute's review defends the decision, nod viewed as unanimous. One institute council member commented: "An 'Adult' rating would be okay for the picture, but to disregard the farcical element to such an extent as to give it an 'O' rating will not enhance the institute's ratings with the public."

Of 29 films rated in current reviewing list only "Indiscreet" is rated "objectionable." "Maracaibo" (Par) gets on "objectionable-in-part" tag, 15 others are okayed for adults but only 12 for general audiences.

PIX IN, BUT WHERE'S 'CULTURE'?

John Paul Jones Co. Sues in N.Y.

Charges Harassment by Bronston's Former Associate, Glassman and Attorney

John Paul Jones Productions Inc., producer of "John Paul Jones" which is nearing completion in Spain, last week filed a $500,000 damage suit in N.Y. Federal Court against Barnett Glassman and attorney Thomas J. Todarelli. Action also seeks an injunction to restrain the defendants from maintaining an office that purports to represent the plaintiff, using letterheads bearing plaintiff's name or from interfering with the firm's business in any way.

Head of Jones Productions is Samuel Bronston who has been involved in other litigation with Glassman. Latter, an investor in some of Bronston's earlier films, last spring was awarded a substantial judgment against the producer in N.Y. Supreme Court. Meantime, according to the complaint, the plaintiff corporation has spent more than $3,000,000 in turning out a film based on the life of John Paul Jones. All of these funds, it's claimed, were obtained by loans and investments from sources other than the defendants.

Glassman, suit contends, has been subjecting the Jones corporation to a campaign of harassment designed to force the firm to make him a director and be given credit for production of "John Paul Jones." It's also asserted that Glassman has made threats to destroy the plaintiff's business unless the company and producer Bronston apologize to him and his family for alleged insults.

Directed by John Farrow, picture has been shooting abroad since last April. Cast is headed by Robert Stack, Charles Coburn, Bette Davis and Macdonald Carey. A distribution deal has already been made with Warners. Bronston, at a news conference held in New York several months ago, declared that much of his financing came from "large American corporations who are patriotically inclined."

GERMAN PIX GAIN IN SPANISH MARKET

Madrid, Sept. 30.

Analysis of summer market reveals an unusually high release rate of German product, particularly during the slump month of August. Spain hot-weather exhib custom in the past meant wholesale issue of below grade native features to credit theatre owners toward fulfillment of government's obligatory screen time decree protecting Spanish pix.

When government stiffened protective measure by disqualifying slack season releasing, exhibs turned to German films as a substitute source of profitable screen fare. Of the 30-odd German pix released during the past season (Aug. to Aug.), almost half opened during the past six weeks.

German films made promising inroads during the embargo absence of Hollywood product, particularly following successful returns on "Sissi," trailblazer in 1956. Despite scribe and public praise for German production values, continual repetition of poor-girl-wins-count drained off public support.

Gene Kelly to Direct, Star in Todd-AO Pic

London, Sept. 30.

A British filmusical in Todd-AO, budgeted at around $1,500,000, with Gene Kelly as star and director, has been announced by the Rank Organization. Production is due to start at Pinewood in next year, following three months of rehearsals.

Entitled "Gentlemen's Gentlemen," it will be produced by Benny Fisz and will be the first British film in Todd-AO. Some 20 Rank Theatres have, or are being equipped with the widescreen process for showing "South Pacific."

Roll UNESCO Film

Bombay, Sept. 30.

Indian film-maker J. S. Bhownagary will be associated with Jiri Trnka of Czechoslovakia in production of a cartoon pic to be made shortly on the United Nations Educational, Scientific & Cultural Organization.

Bhownagary said he would also film a documentary short for UNESCO on "Arid Zones" of the world. Now a program specialist with the visual-media division of UNESCO, he was formerly deputy chief producer of the Indian government's films division.

Yank Product in India Brought $650,000 in '57; Imports Up 12% Over '56

Washington, Oct. 7.

Sales of Yank films to India brought bundles of rupees valued at about $650,000 in 1957, a new Commerce Dept. report reveals.

The report, just published, said India's imports of foreign films climbed 12% in 1957 over 1956.

In dollars, Indian imports of 35m film amounted to almost $1,000,000 in 1957, the highest ever —with U. S. pix making up 66% of those bought in India. Britain had most of the others marketed in India.

In the 16m film field, the U. S. had about 45% of India's import business, the report said.

India herself, according to the report, produced 293 35m films in 1957, compared to the all-time high of 296 in the preceding year.

As in previous years, the Bombay region continued to maintain its leading position by accounting for about 43% of the total production. About 40% of the Indian films are in the Hindi language. The others were spread over 11 languages.

India, which expects to set up a government Export Promotion Council for Films soon, earned rupees valued in dollars at almost $2,000,000 in exports of Indian-made films in 1957.

Nine American firms with established Indian subsidiary offices handle the importation and distribution of American product in India.

SOVIETS BEST U.S. AT MEXICAN FEST

Lack of American participation in the cultural program arranged for the upcoming international film festival in Mexico City Oct. 10-28 is a source of serious concern to American film industry executives.

They openly express the fear that, as has happened before, the Soviets will be running away with the show. So far, while six strong Hollywood films are going in, there's virtually no "country" representation, and the film delegation coming from the Coast isn't overly impressive.

While the Yanks so far have planned little more than a slight show put together by the American school the Soviets are importing their Georgian Ballet troupe, and the Italians are bringing the Little La Scala ensemble. "Unless Washington moves we'll end up representing the U.S. on all levels," an American film man said resignedly last week. He added that this was hardly an ideal solution.

Mexican rules permit the showing of films that already have been screened at other international events. It's meant as a sort of cream-of-the-crop rundown. What troubles American observers is that the U.S. has a good deal at stake in Latin America, and its absence at a place like Mexico this month will be interpreted either as a deliberate slap, or as a weakness which will be underscored by the Soviet showing.

Hollywood films to be shown in Mexico include "The Defiant Ones," "The Long, Hot Summer," "The Goddess," "Touch of Evil," "Wild is the Wind" and "Black Orchid." The Russians are showing "Quiet Flows the Don" and "When the Cranes Fly." France is screening "Montparnasse 19," and "Mon Oncle;" the Italians are showing "Giovanni Mariti," "Fortunella" and "El Desafio;" Japan presents "The Rickshaw Man," etc.

Eric Johnston, Motion Picture Export Assn. president, is expected to attend the festival in its final days, coming down straight upon his return from the Soviet Union.

3 Rank Title Changes

London, Sept. 30.

Three title changes have been announced by Rank Organization. "The Freshman" is now to be called "Bachelor of Hearts," "The Lorelie" becomes "Whirlpool" while "Floods of Fear" has been changed to "The Floods of Fear."

Italo Film Biz Skeptical Over Govt. Plan to Reshuffle Show Biz Setup

Rome, Sept. 30.

Italian film industry observers are skeptical over the plananed benefits promised by a streamlining move, now before the Senate which would involve the re-shuffling of several ministerial responsibilities, notably that of the Italo Entertainment office. This would pass from being the responsibility of the "Presidenza del Consiglio" (Council Presidency) to that of the Ministry of Education. Under the same switch, the tourist office would become part of the Ministry of Industry and Commerce.

In the scheme of repartition originated by Prime Minister Fanfani, and Ministers Andreotti and Gonella, the move-over planned for the Entertainment Office, which governs all branches of Italian show business, is somewhat vaguely explained as an emphasizing or "underlinging (of) its prevalent importance in the artistic-cultural field."

Oldtimers here are frankly puzzled by the contemplated move, which many feel is or inevitably implies a down-grading of show biz in this country. Pointed out that only four years ago, under Prime Minister Mario Scelba, the government had even planned to set up a new ministry to handle the fields of Entertainment, Tourism, and Sports alone.

Suggestion has been made that rather than transfer show biz to the Ministry of Education, the switch be made to a more appropriate branch of the government, the Ministry of Commerce, which is closer to the field for practical reasons.

New British Horror Pic

London Sept. 30.

Nat Cohen and Stuart Levy, Anglo-Amalgamated toppers, are to start a new Anglo-American co-production, "Horrors of the Black Museum," on Oct. 20.

Herman Cohen has already arrived here from the U.S. and will act as exec producer. The pic, which will be made at Merton Park Studios, will be lensed in color and CinemaScope. Script is by Aben Kandel and Herman Cohen.

Japanese Player Wins Acting Award at Cork Fest; No Pix Prizes

Cork, Sept. 30.

Top award for best acting performance in feature films screened at Cork Film Festival went to Teiji Takahashi for starring role in "The Ballad of Narayama" directed by Keisuke Kinoshita for the Shochiku of Tokyo. Award by the international jury, headed by John Grierson, was a surprise to Fest audiences who were high on putting Spencer Tracy in "Old Man and the Sea" (WB) or Vittorio de Sica in "Padri e Figli" (Like Father, Like Son) at the top of the list.

No awards are made for feature films at this festival, but the winner of the St. Finbarr statuette for the best documentary was Hans Dominick for "Traumstrasse Der Welt" (Dreamroad of the World), 90-minute documentary of the Alaska-Mexico highway.

A Danish road safety film, "Cyklisten" (The Bicyclist), directed by Henning Carlsen for A/s Nordisk Film, took top place in the cartoon group.

Only American entry in competitive classes to secure a place in the awards list was "Energetically Yours," a cartoon on man's discovery of energy. It was directed by David Hilberman for Transfilm Inc., and sponsored by Standard Oil.

Tim Ferguson, veepee and a charter member of the Texas Drive-In Theatre Owners Association, has been named as the general chairman of the 1959 convention to be held in Dallas at the Hotel Adolphus Feb. 16-18.

ISRAELI SHOW BIZ IN EARLY SEASON START

Tel Aviv, Sept. 30.

The important theatrical preems per usual were held over till after the Holy Day period while film distributors delayed launching major releases. Same applies to the concert season. This year the festival period fell early and thus the theatre, film and concert season was in full swing before the month ended. The summer hiatus was short for another reason, too. The Israel 10th Anniversary Season brought many tourists to the country and the Government Tourist Corp. took care that attractions were shown all through the summer.

Just before the Holy Days, Martha Graham and her Dance Company arrived for their second guest tour in Israel. The Graham tour is under the auspices of the Habimah Theatre, which this month celebrated the 40th anni of its foundation.

The Israel Philharmonic is still on vacation but will start concerts when Artur Rubinstein arrives early in October. Conductor will be George Singer of Tel Aviv.

Only important international picture shown recently was Paramount's "Wild Is Wind," well past its sixth week.

Much commotion in show circles was caused by Ed Sullivan's search for talent in Israel. Ten finalists chosen for the show were slated to appear here in an SRO concert at the Neumann Garden of the Z.O.A. (Zionist Organization of American) House.

Bromhead to Rep Lion Distrib, Prods. in U.S.

London, Sept. 30.

Michael Bromhead, a director of Lion-International, leaves London for N. Y. tomorrow (Wed.) to represent the company in the U. S. Victor Hoare, L-I's managing director, will be following over the weekend for a 14-day visit to introduce Bromhead to the American industry.

Bromhead's transfer is on a permanent basis. His main duties will be to set up deals for British producers in the organization and to supervise distribution.

Rank Sells Off, Tightens Theatre Situation; New British Booking

By HAROLD MYERS

London, Oct. 7.

The booking system for the British film industry will undergo a radical change as a result of a plan being put into operation by the Rank Organization. It will mark a return to the pre-1953 era, with three major outlets instead of the four theatre groups which have been in existence since that date. This should ease the strain due to the declining volume of production in both Hollywood and Britain.

Plan, revealed last week by John Davis, will eliminate one of the two theatre chains within the organization. Instead of separate Odeon and Gaumont-British chains there will be one major group with about 300 theatres, and a minor chain of 80 theatres.

To put the plan into effect, the Rank Organization intends to shutter some 80 theatres, this on top of 30 which have already gone dark. The major circuit will be equal to the Odeon group at its peak and will be available for showing all the current releases. Its booking policy will be more flexible than heretofore and pix will be held for extended runs where returns justify it.

The smaller chain will be used largely for special engagements and roadshow seasons, such as Todd-AO pix. It will also strengthen the 20th-Fox "fourth circuit" outlet.

At a press confab, Davis, declined to give the names of theatres to be closed since it was the intention of the company not to ring down the curtain on any property until it had been disposed of successfully.

Describing the project as "constructive reorientation," Davis said it had been introduced against a background of declining attendances and changing tastes. The decline was not unique to Britain, and in the United States it had been reflected by the cut in Hollywood production from 394 features in 1948 to 290 in the last year.

Davis explained why he believed the new plan would help British production. It was not correct to assume, he insisted, that by eliminating one of its theatre chains it was cutting down on available outlets for British films. In actual fact, the statutory 30% quota had only been compulsory so far as the three major groups—Odeon, Gaumont and ABC—were concerned. The 20th outlet, by virtue of its competitive booking position, had the protection of quota relief and he doubted whether the overall percentage for that outlet was much more than 10%.

Now, by eliminating many of the competitive situations, it was reasonable to asume that the statutory quota for many of the 20th releasing theatres would now be increased—to somewhere nearer the basic 30%. On that basis there would still be three major outlets —all in a potentially healthier position, while so far as their own new major group was concerned, there would be adequate flexibility to retain a film beyond the week, if merited by business. With that background he firmly believed that the producer could only benefit.

Although he has advocated such action as now taken in public for well over a year, Davis is to amplify his Organization's plans at a series of inter-industry gatherings. The first of these will take place on Thursday (9), when he will entertain exhibs from all over the United Kingdom at dinner. A week later (on the 15th) he will hold another dinner for producers, while distribs will be put in the picture by a series of informal meetings.

Yank Films Top Filipinos' Faves

Washington, Oct. 7.

Yank motion pictures enjoy an overwhelming lead in the Philippine market, accounting for a total of 679 of the 773 feature length films shown there during 1957, the U. S. Dept. of Commerce disclosed in a new report.

Imports of British and Chinese language films increased, although the U. S. accounted for 87.8 percent of the total feature film imports in 1957, a slight decrease from the 89.5 percent share of the import market held during 1956. All imported newsreels and practically all short subjects are of U. S. origin.

Six motion picture companies in Manila account for the majority of feature film production in the Philippines during 1957: L. V. N. Productions, 29; Everlasting Pictures, 7; Peoples Pictures and Premiere Productions, 20; Sampaguita Pictures, 21; and Larry Santiago Productions, 6.

There is some exportation of motion picture films from the Philippines. During 1957, a total of 1,049,653 linear feet of films were exported, valued at 105,032 pesos (two pesos equal $1). The majority of Philippine exports go to Hawaii, with minor exports being received by Hong Kong and Indonesia.

Remittances and taxes are still snarled up. On Oct. 2, 1957, the Philippine Collector of Internal Revenue issued a ruling against the major U. S. film companies operating in the Philippines, assessing the group of 3,200,000 pesos in corporate income taxes covering the period from April 23, 1956, to July 30, 1957. This represented a straight 24 percent withholding tax on the income of the foreign corporations. Another assessment by the Collector is still pending for retroactive corporate income taxes for the period 1951 to April 1956, involving another 12 million pesos. The U. S. film companies paid the 3,200,000 pesos under protest and appealed the case to the Court of Tax Appeals. In July 1958 another appeal was made following the transfer of the Collector of Revenue to another position. No date for court action on the tax case has as yet been set. This tax issue arose when the Collector of Internal Revenue, reversing rulings of his two predecessors, held that a straight 24 percent withholding tax was applicable on the motion picture distributors as foreign corporations.

Yank War Pix, Comedies, Oaters Win Favor at Paris B.O.; 'Kwai' Leader

(Dispatch below assumes piquancy against public poll of Dourdin Institute of France (VARIETY, Aug. 13, last) which had all U. S. films low in favor with French, comedies liked only by 8% and war films by only 2% which brings up the old question: how useful are opinion surveys to film showmen?—Ed.)

Paris, Oct. 7.

Yank filmmakers and overseas distributors are looking more carefully at foreign grosses because they loom ever larger in importance with the current fiscal setup. A look at what the Parisians preferred in Yank pix fare at firstrun situations provides some idea of French tastes in American production for as Paris goes so usually go subsequent-runs and hinterland grosses.

Thus far in current season, only 16 of the top 50 grossers were American. Biggest interest seems to be in big-scale war films having plenty of plot and violence.

Thus, "Bridge on River Kwai" (Col) was easily No. 1 here with over 642,985 patrons for its first-run. "Young Lions" (20th) was next at the wickets. Further along came "A Farewell to Arms" (20th) and the French-American "Bifter Victory" (Col). A reissue of Charles Chaplin's "Great Dictator" (UA) also fared well.

There was also a trend here towards suspense, comedy and adventure pix. Even an oater and one musical shaped up nicely. They were "Witness for Prosecution" (UA), "Paris Holiday" (UA), "Pardners" (Par) (Dean Martin-Jerry Lewis team caught on here about the time it split up), the Italo-American "This Angry Age" (Col), "Gunfight at O.K. Corral" (Par) and "Funny Face" (Par).

"Island in Sun" (20th) also hit the list, while its name values (Marilyn Monroe and Sir Laurence Olivier) helped "Prince and Showgirl" (WB). Some pix in Paris can be made by highbrow critical acclaim which can give a production a long run in one house via its subtitled version. Typical of this was Orson Welles' "Touch of Evil" (U) which was last on the list.

Incidentally, Chaplin's "A King in New York" did well on his name. Other offshore pix to score were the Cannes prizewinning Russo pic, "Flying Cranes"; the Italo "Cabiria" and "London Calling North Pole." The remainder of the list was made up French films.

Such hard-ticket vehicles as "10 Commandments" (Par), "Around World in 80 Days" (UA) and Cinerama also have done excellent biz. The Yank blockbusters did much better than the French attempt to get into the act with a new version of "Les Miserables."

'Lady' Set to Debut In Aussie Next Year

Sydney, Sept. 30.

Sam Liff will produce "My Fair Lady" for J. C. Williamson Ltd., with the debut timed for next January at Her Majesty's Theatre in Melbourne. Final casting for the Aussie run would be decided by the shows' U. S. sponsors on get-together with Williamson's executive director, Harold Bowden, now in London.

Roles of Higgins and Eliza had been given to Robin Bailey and Bunty Turner on a London deal. Further casting would be completed after U. S. huddles. Understood that J.C.W. will lift all restrictions on "Lady" musical score here by next December. Lifting of current ban will see heavy plugs for musical numbers prior to the Melbourne preem.

British, U.S. Pix Scribes Agree Vs. Price Cutting By Yank Film-makers

London, Oct. 7.

Subject to ratification, British and American screen writers have agreed on the principle of affiliation to protect their members from price cutting by U. S. producers operating in Britain and Europe.

The blueprint was agreed after a fiveday conference between reps of the Writers Guild of America (East and West) and the British Screen and Television Writers Assn, in which the talks ranged over the whole field of feature films and television. The guild was repped by its eastern and western executive directors, Evelyn Burkey and Michael Franklin, and the British writers, by its full council.

The two negotiating teams also considered and worked out a formula for improving the position of British screen and tv writers who are not as yet covered by minimum terms agreement in their own domestic market.

The talks were a sequel to prelim discussions in Hollywood last month, when Carl Foreman repped the British association and outlined the problems created by undercutting. At those discussions it was recognized that from affiliation would emerge improved working conditions for writers on either side of the Atlantic. That, in turn, would result in improved material, which could only lead to improved business.

British Lion's Trading Loss $299,586 in Past Year; Studio Badly Hit

London, Oct. 7.

A trading loss of $299,586 is reported by British Lion Films for the year ended last March 31 against a profit of $80,278 for the previous year. After various other charges, including depreciation, provision for loss under distribution guarantees, directors' remunerations and payment to a former director, the loss is increased to $943,919, compared with a profit of $48,238 for the previous year.

British Lion Studio Co., which operates the Shepperton lot, showed a loss of $560,652 for the year. As a result, the directors recommend passing the 6% preference dividend.

In his report to stockholders, the new British Lion chairman, Douglas Collins, says the year had been an exceptionally difficult one for the company and the whole industry. There was no indication of any recovery in the volume of admissions and it was expected that the fall in attendances would continue, although it was hoped the decline would not be as rapid as in recent months.

Collins also commented on the deferred stock in British Lion, which was created last April with the approval of the National Film Finance Corp., of which 180,000 shares have been issued to John and Roy Boulting, Frank Launder and Sidney Gilliat, and David Kingsley. The effect of these arrangements, he says, is that the interests of these working directors are now wholly identified with the future success of the company.

The new working directors of British Lion would be responsible for producing approximately one quarter of the films to be distributed in a normal year and the balance would come from independent productions which were usually partly financed by distribution guarantees.

In his report to stockholders of the studio company, Collins said continuing efforts are being made to reduce studio costs and also to attract to Shepperton production of films for tv. Company's feature films would occupy about half of the capacity of the lot. At an extraordinary meeting to follow the annual stockholders session, the name of the company will be changed to Shepperton Studios.

NEW FILM TAGS ON IRISH PLAYS IRK SOME IRISH

Dublin, Oct. 7.

Tags chosen for the first films of Emmet Dalton Productions from the new Irish studios at Ardmore, Bray, already have got the "Irish" up among the Irish. Pictures, which will be given theatre distribution in Britain and Ireland by British Lion Films Corp. and are destined for U.S. tele through RKO-Teleradio, are all based on Abbey plays. The irked Irish, who haven't yet seen the pictures, say that the titles are enough to make them "stage Irish."

Hugh Leonard's "The Big Birthday," which stars Barry Fitzgerald in the film version is now "The Broth of a Boy," Walter Macken's "Home Is the Hero," Arthur Kennedy starrer which was seen in a stage version on Broadway, now becomes "Sins of the Fathers."

George Shiels' "The New Gossoon," which everybody admits needed retitling for an export or film version, will be released as "Sally's Irish Rogue."

Japan Producers to Curb Anti-Nipponese Films

Tokyo, Sept. 30.

The Japanese Motion Picture Producers Assn. (Eiren) is studying means to prevent possible detrimental reflection on local industry and the country in general from foreign shooting in Japan. The question arose after a Taiwanese company filmed a locationer called "Seven Days in Tokyo" which exploited burlesque, Turkish baths, nude photo studios and questionable hostelries.

Also brought to light was fact that the Southeast Asian crews filming in Japan employ local technicians, allowing for the possibility of finished product being mistaken for Japanese films.

Lotsa Yank Films Unspooling But Who-Gets-What and Under Which Spanish Bureau Unsure

By HANK WERBA

Madrid, Oct. 7.

Dearth of Hollywood films in the Spanish market is a thing of the past, at least for the season getting under way currently. Quality concentration of Yank product is unusually high, representing the cream of U.S. film fare barred from Spanish screens during the past three years.

Distribution breakdown was determined last June when a temporary pact between Spain and the Motion Picture Export Assn. gave American companies 18, a similar number to Spanish banners on percentage distribution terms with 22 others available to local releasers via outright peseta purchase.

Commerce ministry, in disagreement with plan revealed by Direccion General de Cine, altered and extended list of 40 features going to Spanish distribs. Additional 12 import licenses were conceded for U.S. indie product contracted six to twelve months back.

Trading directly with U.S. continental managers, Spanish distribs have purchased considerable material for future release.

Of approximately 100 Yank features available to the local market, MPEA members will release only 21.

This is the market status affecting current talks between Mediterranean MPEA director Frank Gervasi and Spanish film authorities, MPEA goal is a 1958-59 pact that will establish an MPEA quota revising allotment percentages to compensate for the handout U.S. companies here received under the interim accord last June. Minimum annual need is six to eight films per company.

Speed and success of present parleys depend on two factors, local sources say. First is continuing ambiguity as to which of two ministries holds final jurisdiction in allocation of import licenses. Other is possible tendency of government negotiators to consider the 100-odd Yank pix now available an adequate 1958-59 quota with no pressing need to speed a pact at this time.

MPEA product is giving the new season a brilliant send-off, but negotiator Gervasi still has to solve the more fundamental problem of survival for MPEA companies in Spain.

Rep Ends British Lion Pact; Signs Eros Films

London, Oct. 7.

Republic Pictures has terminated its fiveyear deal with British Lion, which it negotiated only two years ago, and has concluded a new long-term releasing arrangement with Eros Films. New deal announced by Reginald Armour, Republic International's executive veepee, took effect from last Monday (29) and embraces the United Kingdom and Ireland. It is for five years.

Rep immediately will be handing over to Eros 78 pictures. The distrib will decide which, and how many, go into immediate release. In any event, it has been agreed in principle that they should be spread over a period and not all put out immediately.

In the two years that British Lion handled the Republic product, it released 140 of the Hollywood's productions. The deal with BL was terminated at Republic's own request as it felt that the British outfit, particularly under its new management, was most interested in handling its own British output.

Aussie Senator Urging Govt. Subsidy to Save Native Pix Production

Sydney, Sept. 30.

Senator George Hannan stated in Parliament recently that the Robert Menzies Liberal government should set a blueprint to subsidize the Aussie film industry in order to save it from extinction. He said that pix with a local background could help immensely in publicizing Australia overseas. The senator went on to say that this country was spending millions in South-East Asia through the Colombo plan, but that films would make Australia better known than farm machinery.

"Gina Lollobrigida is better known in Colombo than any diesel locomotive," he added.

"I believe it is a tragedy that our film industry is in danger of extinction unless the government takes positive steps to further it," he concluded.

Govt. Not For Film Subsidy

Canberra, Sept. 30.

Understood in this political centre (Australia's Washington), that the Robert Menzies government will not subsidize local pic production in any shape or form. Belief among the majority of politicians is that the government has more urgent needs to take care of presently, such as unemployment, housing and a terrific downbeat in key exports to the U.S. to worry about than aid for local pic producers. This leaves the problem of a Down Under production upbeat to the overseas producers and any local angels who have survived.

U. S. Units To Rescue

The Hecht-Hill-Lancaster unit will shoot "Summer of 17th Doll" starting next November here. Director Leslie Norman and Cecil Ford, production executive, have been scouting locations here and setting final details. Norman has returned to Hollywood for confabs, with Ford going on to London. John Mills will star.

Stanley Kramer is due here next December to set production on the Nevil Shute novel, "On the Beach," with Gregory Peck, Ava Gardner and Fred Astaire in the top roles. Film will be shot mainly in Melbourne. Independent producer Roger Corman hopes to get his cameras working here next February on "She." Corman looked over this zone for a couple of weeks prior to returning to his Hollywood base.

Locally just now cameras are stilled and there is little chance of any upbeat this year. Even the local tele pix producing market is limited because a majority of this celluloid comes direct from the U. S. in cans.

Cork Film Fest Director Denies a British 'Boycott'

Cork Ireland, Sept. 30.

Although the British, who virtually bankrolled first film fest here three years ago when it was approved by the International Film Producers' Assn., have no feature for screening at third Cork Film Festival, which opened here last week, fest director Dermot Breen denies that Britain is boycotting the event. He says that "there was no suitable stuff available," adding that one feature which was considered wasn't ready for screening, and another "The Horse's Mouth," went to Venice.

Feature side of Fest is non-competitive, and Breen points to the competitive side, confined to documentary, educational and animated productions, which has nine entries from British sources. A total of 54 shorts from 24 countries are on the sked for this week for scrutiny by judges panel of John Grierson, Father Peter Connelly (film critic of "The Furrow"), Etienne Lallier (France) and Karl Klar (Germany).

Of the 14 features set for screening only one is from a major American company, "The Old Man and the Sea" (WB). This has already been on view at both Brussels and Edinburgh Festivals. Columbia has been discussing an exhibit, but the regular sked is now full. "Rome Eternal," lensed by an NBC crew in cooperation with National Council of Catholic Men, in four half-hour segments for tv, is on list as a feature.

James Stewart: 'Indies Not Leading'

Thinks Majors Should Re-Assert Selves—Scorns Broadway's 'Poseur' Actors' Attitudes

By DAVE KAUFMAN

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Hollywood's widely-ballyhooed independent producers have failed to deliver, they've fallen far short of their promises and in most instances haven't come up with quality product, asserts vet star James Stewart. Stewart, currently starring in "The FBI Story" at Warner Bros., declared that as a consequence leadership in the industry must be exercised by the major studios.

Making his remarks at a time when many top stars have formed their own indie companies or show a strong penchant to toil for the indies, Stewart said of the indie operations: "I don't think they have lived up to what everybody said they would do. They're cutting corners and cheating, clipping expenses and shoestringing things. That's at the sacrifice of quality." In contrast, he said of the majors "the reason so many look at the old pictures on tv today is because their quality which holds up even on that damned little screen."

Inasmuch as the indies have not lived up to their advance notices, it's the job of the majors to take over with some strong action, the actor asserted. "I don't think the majors are gone, but the trouble is they're waiting to find out where they stand instead of taking decisive action," he said.

He urged the majors to rebuild contract lists of stars and creative personnel, and uptempo production, to take a more affirmative attitude and action, to rehire publicists and have proper exploitation of films.

The actor remarked he was tired of hearing industryites say "there's nobody qualified to run the major studios today now that people like L. B. Mayer and Harry Cohn are dead." He adds, "This is a lot of nonsense. I don't believe it. There are many good, qualified men around today," he said.

Stewart had some harsh words for Broadway "rebel" thesps who rush to Hollywood only for the quick buck in pix, then go back. He said the industry should clamp down on those performers who come here from N.Y. and "say they will do one picture, and then want to go back to Broadway for a play or to the South Seas to write the story of their life. The studios should tell them 'you do as you're told, to hell with this nonsense.' When I came here from Broadway, I spent my first year just doing tests. Studios should stop signing these kids to non-exclusive contracts; it just lets them get away with it.

"I don't know what happens to them in N.Y., but some mystic apparently taps them on the shoulder and tells them they're anointed and destined for immortality. Studios give these kids their chance, and it should be a 50-50 deal. Yet they look at it with disdain, and say they're only doing movies for money so they can go back east and express themselves artistically, or have four kids.

'Inducements' Legal

Buffalo, Oct. 7.

Buffalo Common Council has directed the Law Department to prepare an ordinance permitting "inducements" to stimulate theatre patronage.

The action was taken following a petition of eight neighborhood houses asking for a change in the ordinances which would permit elimination from their licenses of any prohibition against "give-aways" and to permit prizes and premiums within the state's gambling and lottery laws.

Specially Made TV Trailers Will Hypo B.O.: Levine

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Television trailers—not cards or personal plugs, but trailers specially made for video—are a largely unexplored and extremely important means of selling theatrical pix to the public, according to Boston exhibitor and distributor, Joseph E. Levine.

Levine, prexy of Embassy Pictures Corp., says his company will spend $750,000 to exploit its new wide screen-color Italian import spectacle, "Hercules," and he will spend as much of this budget on tv trailers as on general press advertising.

Levine was here to screen the pic for local exhibitors and to arrange for theatrical and tv trailers, dubbing, etc. He plans to preem the pic in the L. A. area around Easter because "dollar-for-dollar you get your best returns on exploitation pix in this area."

Levine started as an exhib and still retains one theatre, a drive-in, in the Boston area where his Embassy company headquarters. He says the ozoner is "a barometer, a means of keeping my finger on the public pulse."

He got into bigtime distribution with "Godzilla," a Japanese import, and since has made periodic trips abroad scouting likely product. His most successful find to date was the Italian-made "Attila," which he says grossed over $2,000,000 with a $500,000 exploitation budget. Levine concentrates on U.S. or U.S.-Canadian rights for these pix.

It was on the latter that he learned the strength of tv trailers, Levine says. "I wouldn't say they are more effective than heavy newspaper advertising," he says, "but properly done they pull with equal strength."

He plans a tv trailer campaign in the L.A. area that he says "will be four or five times as big as anything ever attempted."

Levine is very high on hitting all ad-pub angles and admits that he often spends far more, up to five times as much, on exploiting a foreign pic as he pays for the rights to it.

He used a technique on "Attila" of pix spreads in Sunday rotogravure newspaper sections that resembled legit pix sections with only the disclaiming line "advt." at the bottom, that he intends to repeat with "Hercules."

"This business of theatrical pix is just beginning," he says, "if theatre men will be showmen and not just real estate operators. There will always be people—plenty of them—who want to go out to shows. But we have to give them shows. And we have to let them know about the shows we do have."

Levine also holds rights to a Japanese pic, "The Mysterians," which he will distribute after he launches "Hercules."

KIRSCH TO KEYNOTE ALLIED IN CHICAGO

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Keynoter for the Allied States Assn. convention here next week (13) will be Jack Kirsch, prexy of Illinois Allied and general chairman of the confab.

Kirsch headed the national group in 1946-47, and has been active in it for over two decades.

N.Y.'s Film & Audio Show

Several Government agencies are represented in the second annual Film & Audio Visual Exhibition, which opened in Manhattan yesterday (Tues.) at the Trade Show Building. Exhibition covers the specialized field of audio-visual equipment, techniques and services in industry and education for conducting training and sales meetings, visual presentations, etc.

Various meetings, lectures and seminars are skedded. The Film Producers Assn. of N.Y. is showing the outstanding films made by its members.

Cukor's Own Shop

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

George Cukor is setting up his own indie outfit for production of both theatrical and television films. Vet expects to launch it actively late next year.

Cukor will direct and act as exec producer on all properties going out under his banner.

NAT'L SCREEN UNMASTS MEMPHIS BALLY-BOAT

Memphis, Oct. 7.

Memphis' Film Row was dealt another belt in the "breadwinner's basket," when the National Screen Service office here was ordered shuttered for keeps beginning Oct. 10. All work hereafter will be handled out of the Atlanta office. Four workers will stay on here to complete operations which include Memphis' office skipper Jack Lustig, salesmen Johnny Goodenough and Fred Roberts and a local shipper.

The rest of the company's 18 will be dropped from the payroll. The office has been here since 1937. This is the second closing film row in the past several months when Republic had a complete shutdown. Other film offices shuttered here in shakeups from New York and Hollywood the Warner office last April and now working on a limited basis; Universal also on strictly skelton staff with literally all work handled out of St. Louis and the RKO office also closed its doors during the past year.

Yanks Steal

That particular situation (which drew many complaints) is changing rapidly.

"A lot of people go to see foreign films because they've got the reputation of being 'shocking' and surprising. Going by a couple of the recent Hollywood releases, we're going to lose that advantage in a hurry," opined Kingsley.

Surprise over situations and dialog in some of the more "daring" American productions is sharp because of the traditional Hollywood reluctance of the past to speak out frankly on the topic of sex. In foreign films, like the Brigitte Bardot opus, the public has been more or less conditioned as to what to expect.

Universal Sees Japan as Precedent For Permit Status Vis-a-Vis France

Biz-Build Builds to Start

The industry's business-building campaign, at least the initial radio promotional end of it, will be set to roll even prior to the start of the Theatre Owners of America convention in Miami on Oct. 23.

This flat prediction came yesterday (Tues.) from Ernest G. Stellings, the outgoing TOA president, in New York. About $165,000 is needed from exhibition to start the ball rolling (the money is to be matched by the distributors) and Stellings said the full amount was now virtually assured.

Pointing to Japan as a precedent, Universal takes the position that it must participate on a fair basis in any individual license allocation which the French may make for the year 1958-59.

What Universal executives are saying, in fact, is: Let the French give licenses to anyone they want, in the long run they'll have to be re-divided on the basis of the Motion Picture Export Assn.'s global license formula in N.Y.

The French are committed to giving the American companies 110 permits for 1958-'59. However, they have reserved the right to assign 40 of these licenses to various companies on the strength of service to the French industry, i.e. outfits that have either produced in France or have acquired French films for distribution.

So far, Jacques Flaud, head of the French Centre National de la Cinematografie, hasn't handed out any of the 40 licenses, though the remaining 70 have been given to MPEA in one bunch. If and when he does, two or three Yank outfits—Universal prominent among them—will be shortchanged inasmuch as they don't produce abroad and tend to stick to distributing their own product.

When a similar situation came up in Japan recently, it was resolved by letting the Japanese assign permits. However, the licenses were then re-divided as before, i.e. as per the global formula.

Universal now holds that the same principle must apply to France, and it has made its position clear to MPEA. The other companies aren't so sure of this procedure. They cannot—individually—shift assigned permits. The licenses have to be put back "on the table" at MPEA and reassigned. This was done in Italy when RKO turned back some licenses it could not use. Whether Flaud would hold still for such a move, which in effect would nullify the basic intent of his "bonus" plan, is open to question. He has already indicated that, next year, he may commit himself only to the issuance of 70 permits, with the remainder to be handed out at his discretion.

Complicating the situation is the fact that neither RKO nor Republic can any longer be considered bona fide producers or distributors, even though import and dubbing licenses are demanded in their name.

Priest-Produced 'Christ' Film Is Eyed by Majors

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Considerable major studio interest is reported in new widescreen, Eastman-color feature, "The Life of Christ," lensed in Spain by Family Theatre, the Catholic tv-radio packager. Understood that 20th-Fox, Columbia, Metro and Allied Artists all have expressed such interest. If deal is made it would be first venture into this field by FT.

Film, produced by Father Patrick Payton, C.S.C., head of FT, and directed by Joseph Breen Jr., is an outgrowth of a new teleseries shot by Breen in Spain. Vidseries, concerned as is most of FT's efforts, with Catholic devotions to the Rosary, has now been edited into 15 half-hour segments for televiewing.

Lauren Bacall to London

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Lauren Bacall, being paged for star roles in Darryl F. Zanuck's "Deluxe Tour," and the J. Arthur Rank film, "Ferry to Hong Kong," left for N. Y. and London over the weekend to discuss the vehicles.

Miss Bacall will confab with Zanuck in N.Y. regarding "Tour," which he is producing for 20th-Fox, and in London regarding "Hong Kong."

Franker He-She Facts in U.S. Scripts

By GENE ARNEEL

The recent past has brought further evidence that Hollywood has become increasingly willing — if not eager — to play around with "strong" themes and story situations. Whatever hesitancy had existed about handling a onetime delicate subject has disappeared; indeed, sexual relationships of the intimate marital type are even being introduced in comedies.

Universal's "Perfect Furlough," starring Tony Curtis and Janet Leigh, pulls no punches in having various of its characters suspecting that Curtis is responsible for the pregnancy of a South American actress. This is played for laughs.

The Metro comedy, "Tunnel of Love," is right out in the open with some business about a wife telling her husband that the time—her temperature charts so state—is at hand for her to conceive.

Consideration of sex is now widespread in the dramatic offerings. In fashioning "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" for the screen, Metro erased the homosexual angles from the original play. But the young husband remains aloof to young wife's nervous invitations to her bedroom.

Paramount has the rights to the upcoming "Mountain Is Young," Han Suyin novel which, according to some readers, outdistances "Peyton Place" in terms of sexy situations. The independent production company headed by Stanley Kubrick and James B. Harris recently acquired a property that's perhaps the most spectacular of all. This is "Lolita," Vladmir Nabakov novel about a 40-year-old man with a passion for "nymphets"—meaning young girls of the 10-to-14 age bracket. He marries a woman for the sole purpose of being with her "nymphet" daughter.

Veteran film reviewers long since have been accustomed to "raw material" in the imports. The Bardot cinematic escapades are merely a continuation of what's been going on in French fare for years.

And now this kind of thing has become more or less a standard commodity in Hollywood. And it brings to the fore considerations of "good taste."

If the judgment of censorship watchdogs is to be relied upon, the West Coast film-makers aren't guilty of any violations. Rare is the Hollywood production that is condemned by either the official blue-pencilers or the Catholic Legion of Decency on grounds of immorality.

Picture people are dealing more and more in "reality." Of this there can be no question. Seen as an influencing factor is television, which virtually from its very start has handled earthy topics without meaningful repercussion.

It's interesting to note though that while the producers aren't being criticized too severely anent the content of their films, the picture advertising is being rapped increasingly. Seems as though it's all right to film "adult" scenarios—but don't brag about it in the paid-for newspaper space.

NATIONAL ELEVATES SEATTLE'S THEDFORD

Los Angeles, Oct. 7.

William H. Thedford, prexy of Evergreen State Amusement Corp., Seattle, a subsidiary of National Theatres, and Northern California Division manager for Fox West Coast Theatres, has been appointed to newly-created post of West Coast Division manager.

Move is a realignment of posts under new John B. Bertero administration, in which M. Spencer Leve is vp in charge of theatre operations. Under new setup, National is combining operations of both Fox West Coast, also a subsid, and Evergreen under a single management.

Thedford, who now will headquarter in L.A., will supervise chain's theatres in California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona and Nevada. In new spot he absorbs former duties of Leve as FWC Southern California division manager.

John Klee, Frisco Bay area district manager, has also been appointed supervisor for Northern California division, handling both posts.

Franciosa's English Offer

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Anthony Franciosa is being paged for the lead in filmization of the A. J. Cronin novel, "Beyond This Place," being produced in England by Maxwell Setton.

Film will roll in December in England.

UA Reports 6 Mos. Net of $1,319,000, Up 10%; 3d Qtr. Gross Sets Record

United Artists president Arthur B. Krim, board chairman Robert S. Benjamin and other top company officials hosted the press in New York yesterday (Tues.) to provide another "progress report"—which means an updating on how gross revenue and net profits have continued on the rise. Press conference yielded at least one quip about the "monotony" of such steady upbeat and perhaps, this, better than anything else got across the message of UA's continuing climb.

Net profit for the first six months of this year went up to $1,319,000, for a gain of 10%. This is equal to $1.23 per common share.

Krim reported a third quarter gross of $23,678,505, thus setting a record for the company, and said he anticipated total revenue of $80,000,000 for all of 1958. UA operates on a calendar basis.

Previous annual high was 1957's $70,008,242.

Last year in a tradepress ad, Krim recalled, UA listed 17 "major" productions among the next season's releases. This promise was fulfilled in detail except that one picture, "Defiant Ones," replaced another, "The Unforgiven."

The next schedule represents a 75% increase in major releases. There are 29 in all, excluding "Around the World in 80 Days," and Krim furnished reporters with a four-page dummy ad listing titles and credits. "This should be the most reassuring news that exhibitors in the country could ask for," commented the chief exec.

UA's negative cost investment in the 1959 lineup was estimated at $55,000,000 by Krim. This covers only the "major" films. Add to this the program entries and the figures go up to around $60,000,000.

Company in '59 will release between 36 and 48 features, with the maximum to depend on the amount the market can absorb. The 36 is the minimum.

Toho's Bally Kick

Tokyo, Sept. 30.

Coveting an overseas success similar to "Rashomon" or better, Toho is giving fullest possible bally to its Venice fest Golden Lion prizewinner, "Muhomatsu no Issho" (Rickshaw Man). With Toho topper Masashi Shimizu on hand during his global tour, the picture was screened last week at the Academy Theatre in Los Angeles. On Sept. 18, Toho held a special showing for a select group of foreigners in a further effort to stir the overseas market.

Company's foreign dept. revealed that the film is thus far sold for distribution in France (Pathe Overseas) and Italy (Dino de Laurentiis) and is considering a flood of offers from other corners including the U. S. Toho's business office also reported that unlike "Rashomon," only a moderate success in its home land, "Rickshaw Man" is boffo b.o. here, having done top biz during Golden Week, a festival of holidays from the end of April through early May when Japanese show biz makes biggest push.

Can't Keep-Up With Staff Switches at Exchanges; Myashrall's Retirement

Albany, Oct. 7.

In several recent kaleidoscopic changes on Albany's Film Row, none came quicker than the one at Columbia which saw Carl Myashrall bow out a week after he reported here from Boston to replace Milton Levins (a transferee to United Artists, in the same capacity), and James M. Moore (of long service with Warners, Paramount and RKO), hired as a sales replacement. Moore had been selling insurance since RKO folded its Albany branch in the spring of 1957.

His industry service dates back to WB, more than 20 years ago. Promoted by that distributor to salesman, he first functioned in that capacity at Boston. Later came sales work for it here; then, for Paramount and RKO.

Myashrall was about to retire, after 10 years as a Boston salesman when he received orders to check in here. Later the company reportedly decided to let the retirement hold. Myashrall was an exhibitor on Cape Cod before joining Columbia.

Staff Shifts In Atlanta

Atlanta, Oct. 7.

United Artists Corp. last week enlarged its Georgia operations by switching its Southern District headquarters from New Orleans to this burg.

William Hames, recently in charge of UA's branches in Charlotte, Atlanta, Jacksonville, Dallas and New Orleans, has been named Southern District manager, with HQ at 191 Walton Street, N.W. in heart of Atlanta's Film Row. Hames has been with UA since 1929 and was named manager of Atlanta branch in 1956. T. D. Touchon is Atlanta office manager.

Eugene Goodman was upped from sales manager in Dallas to succeed Hames as Atlanta branch chief. He started out with UA in 1952 as a film salesman. George Pabst is new branch manager in New Orleans and Alex Mailho is sales manager in Louisiana metropolis.

Phil Dunne's New Pact

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Philip Dunne inked a new writer-director pact with 20th-Fox, calling for two features annually. Initialer will be Anya Seton's "Katherine," skedded to start in early 1959.

Fulton Oursler's "The Greatest Story Ever Told," originally slated for Dunne, now has been dropped from his program following signaturing of new deal. (Studio is waving property at George Stevens.)

FRENCH 'FESTIVAL' WEEK SET FOR MONTREAL

Montreal, Oct. 7.

Montreal's first "film festival" is skedded for the week of Nov. 3 and will show 10 feature films and a selection of shorts during the seven-day period. Festival is in cooperation with Unifrance Films who have promoted similar sessions starting in London in '53, Moscow in '55 and last year in San Francisco.

As with previous festivals, French producers, actors and actresses will make personal appearances during the week. To date only Rene Clair and Jacques Tati are definite for the Montreal showings.

Unifrance Films (a co-operative group of French producers) and the French government are sponsors of festival whose main purpose is to promote and strengthen the foreign markets for their products. In Montreal "Festival du Film au Canada" is under the chairmanship of Guy Roberge, commissioner of the National Film Board. Films will be supplied from local distributors such as France Film, Atlas, United Artists, etc. and of the 10 to be screened two will be world premieres, "Les Grandes Famille" and "Maxime." The film week will start at the St. Denis Theatre on Monday night and then move for balance of week to La Comedie Canadienne.

Pathe Labs to Process For Col, Screen Gems

Pathe Laboratories will process film for Columbia and its television subsidiary, Screen Gems, as part of the deal under which Pathe has acquired the lab facilities and equipment of Col's Hollywood studio. Lab acquisition was disclosed several weeks ago.

Gerald F. Rackett, supervising exec of the Col lab since 1947, will be named a v.p. of Pathe in charge of its Coast lab operations.

Col lab buyout will increase Pathe's productive capacity to more than 750,000,000 feet a year, according to O. W. Murray, Pathe president.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Penn Theatre, United Artists Circuit house in Pittsburgh, was a little put out last week when Guild, small arter in Squirrel Hill, brought in the Rex Harrison-Kay Kendall picture, "The Constant Husband," which had originally played on tv last year, a day after Penn opened the Harrison-Kendall "Reluctant Debutante." Guild management vowed it was unavoidable. "Husband" had been penciled in as its attraction to follow all-British dualer of "Loser Takes All" and "Cast a Dark Shadow," and since last English twinner at Guild played four weeks, house figured to get nearly as long anyway with the new one. But "Loser"-"Shadow" flopped miserably, had to be yanked after one week and Guild had no alternative but to play "Husband" immediately even though "Debutante" was current. If the double feature had come up to as much as partial expectations, "Husband" would have followed the newer Harrison-Kendall co-starrer by at least a fortnight.

Swelled by the addition of a good number of independents, Theatre Owners of Amerika is currently listing the largest membership in its history, TOA execs report. Dues collections, too, are up despite the loss of some circuit houses.

According to TOA, few of its members maintain dual membership in TOA and Allied. TOA has been heartened by the fact that its ranks are being swelled by a steadily rising number of independents. This, they feel, tends to counteract the impression that TOA is totally dominated by the major circuits.

TOA dues are 5c per seat for hardtoppers and 7½c per speaker for the drive-ins. Latter have tended to counteract the loss of theatres shuttered by the circuits.

Top writers for quite a while have been neglecting the screen as a medium for original works. But two—William Inge and Arthur Miller—have recently penned originals. Many in and outside the film biz have deplored the lack of such scripts. John Huston recently said the situation was "a disgrace" and he noted that, by latching on to the ideas of other media, the industry was losing its identity.

Inge has written "Splendor in the Grass," which Elia Kazan plans to direct for Warner Brothers. Title is tentative. Miller's script, which he's peddling, is entitled "The Misfits." Author has become very interested in films since watching his wife, Marilyn Monroe, being directed by Billy Wilder in "Some Like It Hot."

Lack of quality originals is caused by several factors. One is that the companies themselves tend to lean to presold material such as bestselling novels, successful plays, etc. Another is that authors have felt that it's easier to write for television, which pays well for quality scripts but is much less demanding. There's also the feeling that, for the time it takes to pen a film script, a man's better off trying a book.

Once in a while, a novelist will "save money" by writing his own script. Budd Schulberg did this on his "Wind Across the Everglades," which he coproduced with his brother Stuart.

Louis Phillips, v.p.-general counsel of Paramount, who has been the continuing target of Allied States' blasts, stated in New York that Allied leaders have done nothing but "call me names." And these, he added, have had no meaning.

Attorney asserted he can back up with documented proof everything he has charged against Allied. His charges include one that Allied has pursued an inconsistent policy so far as antitrust matters are concerned, as evidenced in part by the exhibition organization's demand at first that theatres be split from production-distribution and subsequently its pitch for the right of previously-affiliated circuits to segue back into production.

Allied has accused Phillips of being the author of various unfair distribution practices. Singled out was the Par method of licensing "Ten Commandments" on a per-admission royalty basis. Both the Department of Justice and the courts have ruled in favor of the "Commandments royalty procedure, commented Phillips.

Station WCCO, Minneapolis, once owned by the Columbia network but now a local entity, has acquired the largest film theatre in the northwest, the 4,100-seat Radio City. Cinema cost $2,000,000 to erect 30 years ago, when that was a truly impressive sum, and has until recently been flagship to the regional successor circuit to the old Publix adjunct of Paramount Pictures. The sad immediate fate of the house is to be razed for a parking lot. WCCO's television studios are in the theatre building but its radio plant is located elsewhere.

The rumors persist about Republic—and along with them the denials. Latest "intelligence" heard on both Coasts was that Rep president Herbert J. Yates was about to sell off the Consolidated laboratory subsidiary to William Zeckendorf. Also heard was that Yates was to peddle his controlling stock in Rep. Acknowledging the circulation of such reports, a Rep director asked Yates about them at a New York board meeting last week. No deal of any kind, said Yates in effect.

In the light of the laborious dickerings of the Motion Picture Assn. of America with the Soviet Union, under prod from the U.S. State Dept., it is provocative to read the following opening paragraph by Father Richard Ginder in the Catholic periodical, "Our Sunday Visitor." Quote:

"During the last 25 years, the United States has had 3,400 meetings with the Communists, including Teheran, Yalta, Potsdam, Panmunjon and Geneva. The negotiators spoke 106 million words (700 volumes). All this talk led to 52 major agreements, and Soviet Russia has broken 50 of them."

Austin, Forest Hills, To 'Answer' in 45 Days Or Face a Dismissal

N. Y. Federal Judge Archie Dawson last week refused to dismiss a suit brought against the principal distributors and other defendants by the Austin Theatre, Forest Hills, N. Y. Dismissal of the complaint, which asked $1,080,000 in damages, had been asked on grounds that the plaintiff had failed to provide the necessary information. Austin's charge is based on antitrust grounds, the specifics concerning availability of product.

However, there's still the possibility of the case being thrown out. Jurist gave Austin an additional 45 days in which to supply answers to defendants' pre-trial questions. This amounts to the info which Austin has yet to provide.

U PREEMPTS CURTIS, STALLS KRASNA'S PIC

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Norman Krasna, set to start "Who Was That Lady?" for Columbia Pictures next month, has been forced to postpone takeoff due to Universal pre-empting services of Tony Curtis who is the star.

U has cast Curtis with Jeff Chandler in "Operation Petticoat." "Lady" now has a February starting date.

A TOURING SHOWMAN LANDS

Albany, Oct. 7.

Wesley Teeple, one-time assistant manager of the Rivoli in Schenectady, manager of the no-longer Albany in Schenectady, and active in theatre promotion from Jamaica, West Indies, to Hawaii and Hong Kong, has been appointed manager of Lamont's Riverview Drive-in at Rotterdam Junction.

He succeeded Mearl Rose, of Poughkeepsie, who resigned.

Drive-In

lich declared, could go hand-in-hand with drive-ins on the sites. While Ehrlich, whose New York firm specializes in construction of shopping centres and housing developments, says he conceived the idea of incorporating open air theatres on rooftop parking areas, exhibitor Reade appears to have had a simultaneous thought.

"Opening of the Dover Drive-in," Reade argues, "proves my point that a non-productive area in off-hours can be utilized for income-producting purposes. Five years ago I sent a brochure to builders, developers and real estate investors suggesting use of parking areas in shopping centres for drive-ins. Out of Mr. Ehrlich's response came the Theatre in the Sky."

Reade, who revealed that he's negotiating with another shopping centre developer for a similar drive-in in the metropolitan, N. Y. area, cited the Belmont Park, L. I., racing plant as an instance of wasted space. "There," he observed, "it's necessary to have a huge parking area or people wouldn't come. What do they do with the rest of the year? (Reference is to the non-racetrack season.) Why, it's idle. There's no reason why a drive-in couldn't be built there."

Cite Technical Problems

Development of the world's first "second-story drive-in," Reade added, wasn't without its technical problems. While declining to pinpoint the cost of the operation, he conceded that the expense was "enormous." Ozoner, which originally was slated to open a month ago, was delayed primarily due to difficulties experienced with a new wireless speaker known as WISP.

As explained by Reade executive v.p. Edwin ("Pete") Gage most of the sound waves from the booth amplifier were being absorbed by the steel structure holding up the deck's concrete surface. Solution, which wasn't immediately hit upon, utilizes the steel framework itself as a partial grid, along with a wire "loop" buried just below the ramp surface. The speakers pick up the sound by an induction method.

With no speaker posts, obviously portable in-car heaters are required too. These are of the propane type, costing about $30 per unit. Both speaker and heater must be turned in to an attendant at the exit. While the portable nature of such equipment would seem to contribute to thefts and vandalism, Reade officials discounted this.

Opening bill, "The Hunters" (20th) and "Kathy-O" (U), was clearly visible not only to the car patrons but to passersby on adjacent streets. It's a wonderful trailer. Sound, of course, can't be heard by the cuffo viewers. Admish is 85c per adult with children free.

Mrs. Roosevelt Chides Irene Dunne For Not Knowing 'Human Rights'

Washington, Oct. 7.

Two lady peacemakers are at war today over the right-to-work laws.

Eleanor Roosevelt issued a public attack, via the National Council for Industrial Peace, in which she said: (1) Irene Dunne has a warm heart, (2) Irene Dunne is a renowned actress, (3) Irene Dunne is a champion of human rights, BUT, (4) Irene Dunne doesn't know anything about the right-to-work laws.

Both Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Dunne have sat in the United Nations as U.S. delegates, and Mrs. Roosevelt had a key role in drafting the Universal Declaration on Human Rights in 1948.

She reminded Miss Dunne of this in her statement today.

"The right-to-work proposal has as its aim the destruction of human rights," Mrs. Roosevelt said. "Its sole purpose is to enact into law a compulsory open shop that would destroy the democratic rights of management and a majority of workers to bargain collectively for wages, working hours, and other conditions of employment."

The former First Lady continued with the hope that Miss Dunne "will acquaint herself with the real aims of this fraudulent proposal, and in so doing, will come to realize that she perhaps unwittingly has allied herself with those who seek to enslave the American worker instead of providing him with the freedoms of the United Nations Declaration on Human Rights."

Miss Dunne is chairman of a committee which is working to put across a right-to-work proposal in the California November election. She previously was scolded for her activities in a public statement issued by George Meaney, AFL-CIO president.

Progress Footnote

Dover, Oct. 7.

Opening of the Walter Reade Drive-In Saturday (4) in the new Dover Shopping Center stirred memories of local residents. For razed by the development was the Ulmer Iron Works, a landmark in the centre of town that dated back to Revolutionary times. Many of the cannonballs used by Washington's Continental Army, historians say, came from the Ulmer foundry.

Ulmer works flourished for centuries, but closed about 10 years ago. Where filmgoers watched "The Hunters" (20th) and "Kathy-O" (U) on the ozoner's king-sized screen over the weekend, there also was some mighty good fishing as recent as five years ago. Nostalgically inclined patrons recalled that a pond and a small creek once occupied the site where the open air theatre stands. Stream was diverted to make the development possible.

CALL IN 'THE STICKS' FOR HYMAN ADDRESS

Sioux Falls, S. D., Oct. 7.

In the hope that small-town exhibitors will be dissuaded from any belief they're the "forgotten men" and to try to make them believe that their welfare is at heart, too, and considered essential if the industry is to enjoy complete health, United Paramount Theatres for the first time is holding one of its big hoopla sessions in the grass roots.

Exhibitors from all the surrounding small towns have been invited to attend the meetings here today and tomorrow (7-8) presided over by E. L. Hyman, head of United Paramount, and Bernard Levy, his assistant.

It's designated as a boxoffice boosting meeting and the participants include United Paramount's western affiliates' toppers.

Among those present are all of the officials of the Minnesota Amusement Co. (Minneapolis) and the Tri-State (Des Moines) circuits and their theatre managers; and affiliated circuit toppers, Earl Long, San Francisco; George Aeurilius, Arizona, accompanied by Robert McCracken, his assistant; John Kreir, Salt Lake City and Woodrow Praught and E. Don Allen, Tri-State circuit co-directors. Representatives from the Minneapolis and Sioux Falls film exchanges also are present.

'Good Nite Irene'

Ralph Bellamy, president of Actors Equity, sent a wire yesterday (Tues.) to Irene Dunne requesting that she "reconsider" her stand in support of the right-to-work laws. The wire, which was endorsed unanimously by the union's council, stated, "Equity is fighting to defeat the right-to-work movement, which would negate the benefits it has acquired over the past 40 years.

"The greatest figures in the theatre have given of their time and effort to preserve these benefits, which are in the form of basic minimum salaries and working conditions. If right-to-work laws prevail all the principles for which the great historic names of the theatre risked their careers in 1919 will be handed back to the union-busters. Equity and its 10,000 members have everything at stake. Even (Nelson) Rockefeller, the present Republican candidate for Governor of New York, has strongly opposed this undemocratic proposal. We implore you to reconsider."

Washington Documentary Producers, Rolling $200,000 Whodunit Feature

Washington, Oct. 7.

A Washington motion picture company is making a try for the big time. National Film Studios, who have spent six years filming documentaries and television episodes in their studios here, will undertake its first feature-length theatrical motion picture, shooting, as of next Monday (13). By the end of the year, they hope to have the film in the can and ready for distribution.

"Dead to the World" is the title of the mystery thriller, adapted from the novel, "The State Department Murders" by Edward Ronns. It revolves around adventure and violence in a Capital milieu where a State Department security officer has been accused of treason.

Coproducers of the $200,000 production are Harold A. Keats of Washington, National's president, and F. William Hart, its vice president and managing director.

"We've got a Grade B budget, but we think we've got a Grade A sleeper," Stan Allen, promotion director, told VARIETY.

Director will be Nicholas Webster on leave from Filmways Inc., New York commercial producer. He's completing casting of the 35 speaking roles.

Most of the filming will be in the old Carolina Theatre in Lincoln Square which has been converted into National's sound studio. Locations shooting is scheduled during October and November at nearby Chesapeake Bay beaches, the U.S. Capitol, and the former Sumner Welles mansion at Oxon Hill, Md.

The shooting script was prepared by John Roeburg of New York, who has written "Inner Sanctum," "The Vise," and some of the William Gargan mystery series.

Memphis Tent's Child Care

Memphis, Oct. 7.

Variety Club Tent No. 20, which recently completed its building for Convalescent Children has renamed the home and also added other equipment and a remodeling program. The home is now known as the Variety Club Children's Heart Institute.

The name was changed because institute's program has expanded in also caring for youngsters with rheumatic heart diease and providing convalescent care for youngsters.

Wall Streeters

or the potentials of "Ben Hur" or any admittedly improved Metro film product, but on the investors' gamble that the Green-Newman pattern will prevail.

Vogel opposes any liquidation, and particularly can't see the economics of a film company without a film production studio. Green-Newman point to the United Artists pattern of engaging independent production facilities, when and if, and not being burdened with a heavy loss millstone like the Culver City studio.

Newman has left for Europe for a month—and expects a detailed report from the committee in November, when he gets back, to further the separation of the film end from the real estate company. They argue that the divorcement is "long overdue anyway," by court order, and that "years have gone by without anything being done," meantime pointing to the heavy insurance debt.

The Next Big One... SAMUEL GOLDWYN'S "PORGY AND BESS"

Picture Grosses

'Country' Rich $15,000, Cleve.; 'Defiant' Wham 26G, 'Yankees' 12G, 2d

Cleveland, Oct. 7.

"Defiant Ones" is proving so strong at the Hipp this stanza, where it's getting the biggest take of its season, that it is hurting other newcomers. However, "Big Country" still is nice for initial round at the State and "Damn Yankees" looms solid in second session at the Allen. "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" shapes excellent on moveover to the Stillman and sixth week downtown. Both "South Pacific" and "Search For Paradise" are improving over the preceding weeks, the latter boasting a sharp spurt in its seventh frame at the Palace.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (S-W) (3,800; 75-$1.25)—"Damn Yankees" (WB) (2d wk). Fine $12,000. Last week, $18,000.

Continental Art (Art Theatre Guild) (850; $1.25)—"Poor But Beautiful" (Indie). Average $2,200. Last week, "Light Across Street" (Indie), $2,100.

Heights Art (Art Theatre Guild) (925; $1.25)—"Case of Dr. Laurent" (Indie) (2d wk). Oke $2,300. Last week. $3,700.

Hippodrome (Telem't) (3,700; 90-$1.50) — "Defiant Ones" (UA). Great $26,000. Last week, "Harry Black Tiger" (20th), $8,000.

Lower Mall (Community) (500; 70-90)—"Time of Desire" (Indie) and "Miss Julie" (Indie). Oke $2,600. Last week, "Diary Bad Girl" (Indie) and "Slaves" (Indie), $2,400.

Ohio (Loew) (1,244; $1.25-$2.50) —"South Pacific" (20th) (25th wk). Pushing to hep $9,000. Last week, $8,000.

Palace (SW-Cinerama) (1,523; $1.25-$2.40)—"Search For Paradise" (Cinerama) (7th wk). Improving to big $16,000 after $11,800 in sixth week.

State (Loew) (3,500; 70-90)—"Big Country" (UA). Extra-nice $15,000. Last week, "La Parisienne" (UA), $7,500.

Stillman (Loew) (2,700; 70-90)—"Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (m.o.) Excellent $9,000 for sixth week downtown after $9,500 last week.

'Adam' Dandy $12,000 In Buff; 'Country' 10G, 2d

Buffalo, Oct. 7.

The boxoffice shapes uneven here this stanza with weakness developing in some of holdovers. In fact, many locations fail to reflect any fall upbeat thus far. "Adam and Eve" shapes as top newcomer, being dandy at Lafayette. "Big Country" looms okay at the Buffalo in second round but "Damn Yankees" is tapering to a modest figure in second Center week. "Me and Colonel" is only fair opening week at Paramount. "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" still is nice in sixth stanza at Teck.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,500; 70-$1.25)—"Big Country" (UA) (2d wk). Okay $10,000. Last week, $14,000.

Center (AB-PT) (3,000; 70-90)—"Damn Yankees" (WB) (2d wk). Modest $6,500. Last week, $9,500.

Century (UATC) (1,410; $1.50-$3)—"South Pacific" (20th) (20th). Sturdy $7,000. Last week, ditto.

'GIGI' GUSTY $7,000, OMAHA; 'HOBO' OK 4G

Omaha, Oct. 7.

Biz is spotty at downtown first-runs this session with summerish weather hurting the weekend. However, "Gigi" is great at State. "Attila" looks mild at Orpheum. Brandeis reopened satisfactorily with "Littlest Hobo." Second stanza of "Damn Yankees" is sluggish at the Omaha.

Estimates for This Week

Brandeis (Cooper) (1,100; 90)—"Littlest Hobo" (AA). Okay $4,000. Last week, shuttered for remodeling.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,066; 90-$1.25)—"Damn Yankees" (WB) (2d wk). Striking out at $4,000. Last week, $6,500.

Orpheum (Tristates) (2,980; 90-$1.25)—"Attila" (Indie). Mild $7,000 or near. Last week, "Wind Across Everglades" (WB), $4,000 for days at 75c-90c scale.

State (Cooper) (850; 90)—"Gigi" (M-G). Great $7,000. Last week, "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (3d wk), $4,000.

'Yankees' So-so $10,000, Frisco; 'Days' 13G, 93d

San Francisco, Oct. 7.

Frisco first-runs are weak currently, with reissues in two important houses. Best of these is "Streetcar Named Desire," an oldie playing the Fox, where only a fair take is in prospect. "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" looms good in sixth week at Warfield but "Damn Yankees" is only so-so at Paramount in first holdover round. "Big Country" shapes okay in sixth stanza at the United Artists. "Around World in 80 Days" still is great in 93d session at the Coronet.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,859; $1.25) —"Bend Of River" (U) and "World In His Arms" (U) (reissues). Slow $9,000. Last week, "War of Satellites" (AA) and "Attack 50-Foot Woman" (AA), $10,000.

Fox (FWC) (4,651; $1.25-$1.50)—"Streetcar Named Desire" (20th) and "Seven Year Itch" (20th) (reissues). Fair $9,000. Last week, "Harry Black Tiger" (20th) and "Sierra Baron" (20th), $9,000.

Warfield (Loew) (2,656; 90-$1.25) —"Cat On Hot Tin Roof" (M-G) (6th wk). Good $9,500. Last week, $8,700.

Paramount (Par) (2,646; 90-$1.25) — "Damn Yankees" (WB) and "Space Children" (WB) (2d wk). So-so $10,000. Last week, $15,000.

St. Francis (Par) (1,400; $1.25-$1.50)—"Whole Truth" (Col) and "She Played With Fire" (Col). Slim $6,500. Last week, "Me And Colonel" (Col) (2d wk), $9,000.

Orpheum (SW-Cinerama) (1,458; $1.75-$2.65) — "Search For Paradise" (Cinerama) (30th wk). Okay $13,000. Last week, $10,000.

United Artists (No. Coast) (1,207; 90-$1.25) — "Big Country" (UA) (6th wk). Good $7,000. Last week, $7,200.

Stagedoor (A-R) (440; $1.25-$3.00) — "Gigi" (M-G) (13th wk). Fine $9,500. Last week, $10,500.

Presidio (Hardy-Parsons) (774; $1.25-$1.50)—"Law And Disorder" (Indie) (2d wk). Oke $2,800. Last week, $3,000.

Vogue (S. F. Theatres) (364; $1.25) — "Deadlier Than Male" (Indie) (2d wk). Fair $2,200. Last week, $3,000.

Subsidy for Films? May Come to It!

Mark Robson, Noting British Precedent, Feels U.S. Should Keep Picture Industry Healthy

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Study of the British subsidy plan for motion picture producers, while he was in England recently for direction of 20th-Fox "Inn of the Sixth Happiness," convinced him of the particularly valuable merits of such a program, declared Mark Robson, just returned from London. Subsidy, via the British system, is paid in a percentage base on pic's success after release.

Consequently, director points out, it's time that American producers start thinking in terms of Government subsidies for their own industry. In addition to being a means of self-preservation, he says, it would also insure that a strategic industry—films—is maintained at peak strength and efficiency.

The British have established film subsidies, Robson reports, because they recognize, from their own wartime experience, the vital importance of keeping motion pictures at top of capacity. Producers do not come under governmental supervision under plan, which rewards the successful rather than underwriting the chronically unsuccessful, according to director.

"American motion pictures are a strategic part of our American industry, our culture and our economic life and well-being," Robson stresses. "We subsidize the farmers, the shipowners, the airlines, oil and gas and other services. It is not illogical to think in these terms for motion pictures."

Robson returned to Hollywood from almost a year abroad, preparing or shooting "Inn of the Sixth Happiness," Buddy Adler production for 20th-Fox. Robson has had considerable experience filming abroad, "Inn" being his fourth foreign-based film. It is his second pic under his current Fox contract, which has two and one-half years to go. "Peyton Place" having been his first.

Robson says Fox executives who screened "Inn" in New York gave it the best score of any pic since "The King and I," the previous champ." It will be a Christmas release from Fox, together with Darryl F. Zanuck's "The Roots of Heaven," and George Stevens' "Diary of Anne Frank."

Pic, starring Ingrid Bergman and Curt Jurgens, is now being scored in London and when finally edited will run around two and one-half hours, Robson says.

'Barkerettes' Auxiliary To Albany Variety Tent

Albany, Oct. 7.

Organization of an Albany Variety Club Barkerettes unit is on the agenda of Tent 9. So Chief Barker Samuel E. Rosenblatt stated in a letter to members on the first fall meeting in the new quarters, 326 State Street, Monday night (6).

Rosenblatt urged full attendance and the voicing of "Objections, criticisms, recommendations, ideas . . . this is your Right and Privilege. Exercise That Right."

Other items on the agenda for the coming months are: nomination and elections of Crew and Officers; dedication of the new clubrooms; an anniversary affair; bingo.

The formation of a woman's auxiliary was discussed by Chief Barker Samuel E. Rosenblatt and crew members, with International Chief Barker George Eby, during the latter's recent official visit. Eby reported that such groups had been of substantial aid to the male barkers, in Variety Club charitable projects of several cities.

Rosenblatt pointed out that the launching of such a local unit had been under way for sometime. He added that the new rooms, in location and appointment, were ideal for the use of members' wives, in the afternoon.

Rosenblatt also mentioned to Eby that the Club had plans for weekly bingo. This was listed in the former's letter, last week, as another item on the agenda.

Govt. 'Protectors'

American cultural exchange deal. The industry was virtually pushed into selling films to the Russians, and the Government is expected to urge on American exhibitors to play the Soviet features that will become available if Eric Johnston signs a deal in Moscow. As a matter of fact, Johnston is talking to the Russians not as president of the Motion Picture Export Assn., but as a special State Dept. representative.

In another area, the International Media Guarantee Program, films are going into Poland, Yugoslavia and several other countries because Washington is pickiing up most of the tab. However, the Government has a very specific say-so in what films can or cannot be sent. It's this aspect of government which has some in the industry worried.

"You take something from the government and, immediately, government wants to be in on running the show," was one comment in N. Y. last week.

Those who weigh "protection" against the possible consequences (with an eye on the effects of divorcement and other consent decree dicta in the States) tend to counsel caution. They note that governmental subsidies abroad have not necessarily resulted in either greater volume of production or more prominent quality. Instead, the government partnership, while beneficial in some areas, has robbed the industries of their vitality.

The crutch, however generously offered, or even ardently sought, generally turns out to be a bit stick.

Crimp in Cabled Football Patronage; Politician's Harassment Tactics

Detroit, Oct. 7.

Legalistic wrangling all but killed a cable-television presentation of the Michigan-Michigan State football game (4) in five Michigan cities and one in Ohio. Attendance was approximately 7,000 fans, while total capacity of the theatres and arenas was about 43,000. Gross was approximately $17,000 of a possible $105,000. Tickets ranged from $3 in the Detroit area to $2 outstate. Picture quality was good, but there was some difficulty with the sound for the first 10 minutes in the Detroit area.

Just four days before the game, a Circuit Court judge dissolved a temporary restraining order which had blocked the sale of tickets. Judge Theodore R. Bohn also refused to grant a permanent injunction against the telecast which had been demanded by State Representative John J. Fitzpatrick, a long-time foe of pay-as-you-see-tv.

Judge Bohn ruled against Fitzpatrick on the basis that the legislator had failed to show he would "suffer damage" if the telecast was allowed. "It is a principle of equity," Judge Bohn said, "that an injunction should be dissolved if it is shown greater injury will result from its continuation than from its dissolution."

Sponsoring organizations — including the GiantView Closed-Circuit Television Network and C. W. Smith Enterprises—had advised Judge Bohn that they had spent about $30,000 promoting and arranging for the telecast.

Judge Bohn suggested that the case should be heard later for arguments on the jurisdictional and constitutional questions which Fitzpatrick raised. In 1951, Fitzpatrick was instrumental in getting the State Legislature to pass a law prohibiting state institutions (both Michigan State and the U. of M., are) from telecasting events on a closed circuit unless they also are made available on home receivers.

"I am in sympathy with the principles of open tv," Judge Bohn said. "And, I would like to see the game made available to the home viewer. However, the National Collegiate Athletic Association has ruled against that. It was only after that denial that arrangements were made for the closed circuit telecast. While I am not in accord with NCAA policy, I do not believe the game should be denied those who want to see it in theatres."

Lawyers representing the universities and the theatres argued that Fitzpatrick had no right to bring a citizen's suit on the constitutional powers granted the university's governing boards which had approved the closed-circuit telecast. However, Fitzpatrick's attorney said, "We must assume the 1951 statue covering tv by state institutions is legal until ruled otherwise." It was at this point that Judge Bohn suggested that the merits of the case be argued in court later.

Ezell's 38 Drive-Ins

Dallas, Oct. 7.

The drive-in operation by Claude Ezell and Associates has grown to 38 theatres, making the company the largest operator of ozoners in Texas and one of the largest in the nation.

Al Reynolds, veepee in charge of theatre operations for the company, confirmed acquisition of six of the seven drive-ins operated by (C. D.) Leon Theatres of Abilene.

Two of the ozoners are here, the Denton Road and the Hampton Road. The others are in Fort Worth, Abilene, El Paso and Sherman.

'Adam and Eve' (As Was) Just Naked Indecency, Catholic Sheet Decries

Albany Oct. 7.

"Adam and Eve," whose "sex-angle" advertising was editorially denounced by The Evangelist, official weekly of the Albany Catholic Diocese, produced for the Stanley Warner Strand one of that first-run's best business weeks in the past 10 months. Industry circles credited the promotion with playing an important part in the patronage attracted. The picture, based on the biblical account of the origin of man in the Book of Genesis, was moved to the Ritz for a second week.

The Evangelist, which also criticized the two local newspapers for accepting the copy, asserted, "Whatever the picture has to offer in reverence was squashed by the use of posters and ads that accentuate naked bodies and carry just the 'right' touch of spicy phraseology, in an attempt to fire the imagination."

Cincy May Clip B.O. Tax

Cincinnati, Oct. 7.

City Council is considering an appeal to waive tax on admissions up to $1.05 in conformity with Federal reduction effective Jan. 1. Since 1953 the Cincy tax on admissions started at 91c.

Request for the cut was made by spokesmen for theatres, Cincinnati Garden and the Reds' ball club. It was referred to the city finance director to learn how much the reduction would nip from present revenue.

Amusement representatives contended that Cincy should eliminate amusement taxes as are other large Ohio cities.

EXHIBITOR PRAISES A DISTRIBUTOR (PAR)

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Not all exhibs have a hate-complex when it comes to distribs. Take the case of Bill Forman, of Pacific Drive-In Theatres, who unexpected offered thanks for George Weltner's message at luncheon tossed for theatremen at Ambassador Hotel by Paramount global sales vp.

Weltner had been carrying Par's 'Enthusiasm in the Pix Biz Future Drive" to local exhibs with a two-pronged message: (1) Barney Balaban's unequivocated faith in the film industry in general and Par in particular, and (2) Par's expected big-star, big-budget releases in 1959.

Unusual in these days of general name-calling between exhibs and distribs, Forman rose as Sidney G. Deneau, Par western division manager, was adjourning meet, and lavishly praised Par's production plans.

Attended by 100 exhibs, trade and lay pressmen and Par studio execs, session was the third in a global series in which Weltner is relaying the message of Par's confidence in continued and big production plans to exhibs and filmbuyers.

'Insider' Stock Transactions

Washington, Oct. 7.

Spyros P. Skouras more than doubled his common stock holdings in 20th Century-Fox Film Corp. during August, the new Securities and Exchange Commission report on security transactions between Aug. 11 and Sept. 10, reveals.

Prexy Skouras exercised an option and bought 12,800 shares, making his common stock holdings total 22,800, the SEC said. In a delayed report, SEC said James A. Van Fleet, a company director, disposed of 1,500 common shares in June, leaving him holding 500 shares.

Decca's U Buy

Decca Records Inc., also in June, but disclosed in the new report for the first time, added 1,800 shares of common stock in Universal Pictures Co. for a total ownership of 763,785 shares.

Matthew Fox Activity

Other information contained in the SEC report:

Matthew Fox acquired 75,140 shares of $1 common stock in Television Industries Inc., during June and July. Earlier, Fox had disposed of his ten-cent common stock, which went out in a 10-for-one reverse split. During May, Fox had purchased 32,900 shares of this cheaper Television Industries stock and in June sold his entire holdings of it, 648,400 shares.

Trans-Lux Shares

Considerable buying activity was reported in Trans-Lux Corp. common stock, as follows: Harry Brandt raised his ownership to 161,600 shares, adding 17,200 new shares; Marathon Pictures bought 200 shares; the G. Brandt and H. Brandt Foundations purchased 1,200; and "associates" of Harry Brandt acquired 700 shares.

Re National Telefilm

E. Johnny Graff purchased 2,000 shares and sold 700 shares of common stock in National Telefilm Associates, leaving his ownership at 3,200 shares.

Omens In Loew's

Benjamin Thau sold 11,300 shares of common stock in Loew's Inc., and Jerome A. Newman and Graham-Newman Co. bought 300 shares in the company.

Abrams' Emerson Buy

Benjamin Abrams added 100 capital shares of Emerson Radio and Phonograph Co., making his personal holdings total 261,766 shares, while the ownership of stock of his trusts and foundations amount to 94,230 capital shares. Percy M. Steward sold 900 shares of common stock in Allen B. DuMont Laboratories Inc. (now Emerson-owned) leaving him owning 100 shares. Frederick H. Guterman divested himself of all his DuMont common, 500 shares.

Cinerama Echo

The Stanley Warner Cinerama Corp. disposed of 169,370 common shares of Cinerama Inc., exchanging them on a share-for-share basis for shares of Cinerama Production Corp. SW-Cinerama continues to own 605,836 shares of Cinerama Inc., common.

William Zeckendorf increased his collection of Webb and Knapp Inc., common stock with 4,100 additional shares. His total now is 4,901,615 shares.

Pending This Fall Before Top Court

By JAY LEWIS

Washington, Oct. 7

Amusement media has a lot at stake during the fall season tryouts at the U. S. Supreme Court. Some cases are big money deals, others have limited economic import. But all bear watching, because High Court rulings have a way of creating lasting impact.

While some are already dated for argument, most are waiting for hearing. In any event, the Supreme Court has to look them over and take some kind of stand, even if it's a simple rejection of an appeal.

A sampling shows that predominating are Federal Communications Commission rulings and follow-ups of the classic Paramount Pictures' anti-trust decision. In the FCC category, the de-intermixture row stands out.

Sangamon Valley Television Corp. is taking exception to an FCC proposal (in line with its de-intermixture policy) stripping Springfield, Ill., of its only VHF outlet and giving it to St. Louis. Sangamon sees this as a violation of a section of the Communications Act requiring FCC to make a "fair" allocation of radio frequencies among the states. It seems that Missouri, according to Sangamon, already had 17 VHF's, and depriving Illinois of the Springfield outlet would leave more populous Illinois with ten. A High Court decision in favor of Sangamon could upset FCC's de-intermixture policy—limited as it is.

Another de-intermixture tangle—perhaps with a more interesting twist—involves WIRL, Peoria, Ill., which has brought suit to get Channel 8 in that city. WIRL spent four years and about $50,000 before FCC finally awarded it a construction permit. Hitch was that three days before the final FCC decision, (which came Nov. 13, 1955), some Commission rule-making took place which took Channel 8 from Peoria and switched it to Davenport, Iowa. WIRL was given a UHF outlet instead, but found this hardly satisfactory. Again, FCC's action was challenged as doing violence to the Communications Act. But, as lawyers will, some other issues were tossed in.

One of the more intriguing was whether Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D., Okla.) "through his influence, power and prestige" was instrumental in removing from Peoria his only VHF competition. Kerr happens to be principal owner of WEEK-TV (a UHF channel). This case could be a real hot potato.

Eagle Lion

A top motion picture case (already slated for argument this October) is the suit by Eagle Lion Films against Loew's and RKO theatres. Here, the Justice Dept. has already stepped in. Eagle claims that the lower courts were mistaken in tossing out its anti-trust claim, which was based on the allegation that independent distributors didn't have access to first neighborhood run houses in the New York area controlled by the two defendant outfits.

Eagle cited the Paramount decision in support of its charge of conspiracy. The lower courts ruled this case didn't apply. Justice thinks it does. And, in its "friend of the court" filing, the Department wants some kind of overall determination of exactly what issues were decided in the Paramount case, or—in other words—some kind of guide for future litigation based on the all-important Paramount dictum. Eagle, incidentally, is after 15 million dollars damages plus attorney fees for injunctive relief and treble damages for allegedly being discriminated against by Loew's and RKO circuits.

The Lady Not Lewd

"Lady Chatterley's Lover"—the film version—may have its day in the Supreme Court, in a test case involving New York state's censorship provisions. The feature was banned from that state because of purported representation of adultery as "something desirable." Not so, claims Kingsley International Pictures Corp., the distributor, which states that the relations between Lady Chatterley and Mellors not only reflects "true" (if not legal) marriage, but the screening—and subsequent banning—by the state Education Department violates freedom of speech and expression, under the First Amendment.

Another Paramount offshoot centers around the long-dark Grove Theatre in Elgin, Ill. American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres believes it has a right to reopen the house because one of its other properties in Elgin—the Rialto—burned down. Circuit is appealing from Southern New York Court order as a result of the Paramount case, to get rid of Grove and not buy it back without prior court approval. AB-PT court approval is not necessary. The Supreme Court, if it wants to, can decide this one.

Blue Law Appeal

"Blue" laws of hoary vintage are under challenge by a drive-in theatre of Antrim Township, Pa., which asks a review of the state's local option plan which forbids film showing on Sunday—if the local residents are of such an inclination. Antrim decisively went on record against Sunday exhibition, but a fellow named Grochowiak, manager of the State Line Drive-In Theatre defied the ban, partly because one of the films he projected that Sunday night was also being shown at the same hour over local tv.

Since no cops were intruding themselves into people's homes to see that no films were being fracturing the Sabbath, Grochowiak, thinks there's discrimination involved. But, more important, Grochowiak's attorneys reason that it's high time the Supreme Court review a Sunday law case, which—according to them—has not been argued before the Justices in an instance involving state encroachment on private freedom of expression. The High Court in the past has been chary of interfering with Sunday laws, normally viewed as within the province of states' police powers and thus not in the purview of the federal bench.

'As Yet' No Toll Terms in Frisco

San Francisco, Oct. 7.

Up to now, no agreement exists between Skiatron and the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co., says C. Lyn Fox, president of the California Public Utilities Commission.

Fox delivered this assurance last week to State Assemblyman Louis Francis, chairman of an Assembly subcommittee which last year investigated toll-TV. Francis has asked the Public Utilities Commission to deny approval of a reported Skiatron-PT&T agreement until the State Legislature has a chance to pass what Francis believes is necessary legislation.

But Fox told Francis that "when and if any petitions are filed with the commission, we will not only give your request the most careful consideration, but we will advise you of all developments as well."

The phone company already has said that if it comes to agreement with Skiatron on engineering studies now being discussed, it will seek commission approval before going ahead with the work.

LEW WAID'S OWN SHOP

Republic Salesman States Righting From Dallas

Dallas, Oct. 7

Cameo Pictures Distributing Co. has opened offices here headed by Lew Waid, as prez. The firm has franchises on some 260 feature pix including product from RKO, Lippert and IFE.

Waid has been with Republic for the past 15 years as salesman, booker and office manager. Frankie Weatherford is secretary, Tilly Kelly, inspector, and Jimmy Ezell, shipper.

Meantime, Robert Hartgrove and L. N. Crim Jrr. have discontinued distribution of motion pictures and have closed their Exhibitor Pictures Co., distribution service here. Will devote their time to exhibition alone.

NO MORE SPECULATION IN SPEC

The Magic Number—40

The general assumption is that for a new tv show to open as a big Trendex hit requires a 40% share of audience, thus giving it a comfortable more-than-third of the total viewing public. That being the case, there are only half a dozen or so new programs that have turned the trick since the season was launched.

Garry Moore did it on his last week's CBS-TV preem. Others in the 40% share bracket included "Wanted—Dead or Alive" (CBS); "The Rifleman" (ABC); the new Ann Sothern Show (CBS); the Lucille Ball-Desi Arnez premiere Monday (5) on "Desilu Playhouse" (CBS) and Jackie Gleason (CBS).

NBC has still to come up with a premiere in the charmed circle; has more than a good chance of cracking it with tonight's (Wed.) Milton Berle bow.

Advertisers Doing Their TV Yule Shopping Early With Participation Deals on Networks Pouring In

National advertisers are currently hanging up their stockings in preparation for Christmas and, just to make sure the stockings are full by the time the Yule season arrives they are investing heavily in network television. The Christmas advertising drive is on with orders pouring into the webs daily for participation, spectaculars and even one-shot appearances on regularly sponsored network programs.

Most of the business has been placed on a bits and pieces basis but one agency, Grey, has lined up five clients for the Xmas push. Repped by the agency, Ideal Toy, Westinghouse, Van Heusen, Samsonite and Necchi have inked for participations in the Shirley Temple pix to be telecast over the NTA Film Network starting this month and winding up with the Yule season.

Most of the network time bought for the holiday season has been purchased by the gift companies. There is nothing new in this television approach by advertisers who gear their network tv approach to their sales drives. Some of the smaller advertisers, who can't afford network tv on a year-around basis, shoot the whole of their advertising budget at this time.

A partial list of the Christmas buying by national advertisers would see Polaroid buying five one-half hours on Steve Allen on NBC-TV Sundays, from Oct. 19 through Dec. 14. Zenith has bought into the Allen show for three half hours on Sept. 28, Oct. 19, and Nov. 2. North American Phillips Co., makers of Norelco shavers, has also inked into the Allen program taking three half-hours on Nov. 16, Nov. 30 and Dec. 14.

Bulova has bought into the NBC-TV News, 6:45 p.m. to 7, from Nov. 3-Dec. 15. Bell & Howell will also pick up part of the tab on the News Nov. 7-Nov. 21. Bulova has also signed to sponsor NBC-TV's "Dragnet" on alternate weeks starting this month and running

Stanislavsky Method

Mel Blanc, who does voice imitations, flew in from the coast for a "guest shot" on the Garry Moore CBS-TV show next Tuesday (14). Principal reason for the 3,000 mile flight is because Blanc's talents are vital for a takeoff of westerns which Moore and Andy Devine will be doing.

Blanc's chore will be to neigh and ninny like a horse!

When Is a Guest 'Special'? Poses A TV Problem

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

What ever happened to the good old practice of star and feature billing, with the only disputes the type size and position?

The "special" billing trend in tv is now reaching rampage proportions, and there'll undoubtedly be more disputes and cancelled appearances because of it than ever before. Jane Powell dropped out of the opening Eddie Fisher show because of a billing hassle over the similar billing accorded Jerry Lewis. There was a flurry at ABC when the web's advertising staff had to do some last-minute corrections to fulfill a "special guest star" billing clause in Dean Martin's pact for the Bing Crosby special, even though Martin himself didn't raise any fuss.

Glance at some of last week's shows tell the story. On the Dinah Shore preem, Art Carney was billed as "special guest star," so Gwen Verdon got "extra-special guest star" billing. On "Wagon Train," William Bendix got "guest star" billing, so Ernest Borgnine got the "special guest star" bit. "Playhouse 90" as a standard practice goes in for oddball billings; last week's stanza had Charles Bickford with the "guest star" label.

'20th Century's' 2-Part 'Red Sell'

Soviet propaganda will form basis of two-parter for the opening of CBS-TV's "Twentieth Century" series which bows in for the second season on Sunday, Oct. 26. Series, as in past, will be sponsored by Prudential Insurance.

Two-part report will be tagged "The Red Sell: The Propaganda Mill" on Oct. 26 and "The Red-Sell: Report from the Targets" on Nov. 22. Special film footage, obtained for this report, will be seen.

Part II, in addition to Walter Cronkite as narrator, will have five newsmen participating: Peter Kalischer, Austin Goodrich, Arthur Bonner, Richard Hottelet and Frank Kearns.

Later in the season, program will concern itself with studies of Knute Rockne, Peron and Evita, the super-secret X-15, Woodrow Wilson, Hungarian revolt and Russo-Finnish War.

Bigtime Payoff For CBS-TV's 'Perry Mason' On Piecemeal Sales

Life in the CBS-TV sales office appears to be brighter as result of the recent idea of piecemeal sponsorships in the web's "Perry Mason" series.

This week CBS-TV firmed up alternate weeks, one-third sponsorship deals with Gulf Oil and Hamm Brewing Co., effective Nov. 1.

Other clients on the show now include Sterling Drug, Parliament Cigarets, Van Heusen Shirts, Colgate-Palmolive plus a batch of short term deals (Elgin, Prestone, Ford Trucks, etc). This places the Raymond Burr. "Perry Mason" series in the virtually SRO category.

CAN'T GO WRONG WITH 'SPECIAL'

By GEORGE ROSEN

The tv spec has come a long way since the days (back in '50) when it was just a gleam in Pat Weaver's eye. By '54-'55 it had already become a dirty word, so troublesome, so cost-per-thousand headachy had it become. Today they're no longer called specs but "specials"—and they're the hottest items on any network agenda, a surefire invitation to a Top 10 rating.

In the brief three-week span since the new season started, only one thing has been established—the emergence of the "special" (but under cirmumstances differing radically from the days when they were even calling it "Pat's Folly") as the only sure and certain trend to develop. On the week-to-week bread & butter programming fare, nothing yet has come up to electrify the audience (although no fair evaluation can be forthcoming for at least another three weeks, when all the program chips are down). But this much is certain—a lot has happened since those early spec days and the pattern has now been evolved to preguarantee a surefire rating on today's "specials."

Nearly half a dozen "specials" have been exposed to the public since the '58-59 season got under way, and in each instance champ ratings were delivered. The "Miss America Pageant" on CBS-TV was No. 1 on both the Trendex and Nielsen charts. Du Pont's Show of the Month "Harvey" presentation on CBS-TV, with a fat 28.9, smashed the opposition. Big Crosby's ABC-TV "special" last week walked away with all the laurels, copping a 27.4 Trendex. Bob Hope's "special" for Buick blasted the competition. This week's premiere of "Desilu Playhouse" on CBS (a Lucy-Desi "special" with Maurice Chevalier) hit the Trendex jackpot: 29.0. Meriting the "special" tag was the premiere of "Playhouse 90" ("The Plot to Kill Stalin" with its all-star cast) and it went to the top of the Thursday night Trendex class.

Not that today's "specials" are more distinguished than the product of the Weaver era. The difference lies in the fact that the networks have since learned how to schedule them; have studied and restudied the difference in audience composition with result that a CBS today knows precisely where to slot its upcoming "Wonderful Town" "special" with the payoff already in the bag—Top 10.

With what the networks have since learned, those early-day $150,000-$200,000 specs that could do no better than a 10 or 11 on the Trendex would be crashing the Top 10 barrier today. Same show—but hardly the same time.

Today a network knows better than to slot a "Producers Showcase", with such adult entries as "Darkness At Noon", "The Women" and "Yellow Jack," in an 8 p.m. segment when kids are yammering for a "Restless Gun." "Audience composition" is the guide to '58-'59 scheduling so that a "Harvey" will show up late in the evening; ditto for a Bing Crosby "special" with its non-juve

Stations in South Adopt 'Hands Off' Policy on Negro Integration Issue; Too Much Sponsor Moola at Stake

Radio and television stations across the country are on an editorial kick, feeling that local coloration of the news will build audiences and hypo ratings. The one exception to the on-the-air editorials is the area below the Mason-Dixon line where southern broadcasters, with but few exceptions, do not wish to tangle with the touchy Negro integration problem. The reason for the most part doesn't get into the moral question, although this is true in some cases. Rather it is one of simple economics. Broadcasters do not wish to arouse the ire of the hefty Negro market which accounts for between 40 and 60% of the buying done in the southland.

Local newscasters have been warned to "write it straight and to present the facts only" without benefit of personal feeling. In other instances, on the hot integration question, tv reporters are limited to reading the wire services only and are banned from expanding on touchy issues.

Typical of the law laid down to local announcers is that of stations WAVY and WAVY-TV, Portsmouth, Va. Tidewater Teleradio, owner of a group of stations including WAVY, gave the announcers the "word" in a four-page declaration dealing with how to handle news reporting of the present integration problem. The document states that "Tidewater Teleradio and its news representatives will not editorialize, give an opinion, or predict any future development relative to the integration issue."

The memo goes on to say that the newsman will report factually the news as it occurs and sources of this news will be from the AP wire service, and in the form of direct factual reporting, as the story is covered by our station representatives. Tidewater memo states further that in interviews of school officials and members of local and state government, "they will be handled so that no side or definite stand will appear to result from the questions asked by our newsmen."

A fear on the part of stations in the Dixie belt that national advertisers will yank their money out of any station whose editorial policy will reflect on the product, is one of the factors keeping the stations on a "hands off" policy. The second consideration is the station

ABC to NBC: 'Thanks'

In a telegram to advertisers, NBC special program sales plugged the "tremendous result" achieved on rival ABC by the Bing Crosby special of last week in which Dean Martin appeared rather prominently as guest star. Telegram was sent to attract advertisers to NBC's Nov. 22 Dean Martin show on which Crosby will be reciprocal guest.

NBC, pointing out that the ABC show "was a smash success" despite an allegedly poor time period, asked advertisers to "imagine what this Crosby-Martin combination can do for you . . . immediately following and inheriting the great Perry Como audience."

ABC execs thanked NBC.

NBC-TV Resolves Residual Fee On Foreign Repeats

NBC-TV agreed to pay members of American Federation of Television & Radio Artists a maximum of 45% of original live television fees for any program that is repeated, either by kinescope or tape, on foreign television. Settlement was expected yesterday (Tues.), after months of difficult negotiation.

It remains for ABC-TV and CBS-TV to come to agreement with AFTRA on the foreign payments for shows made in the U.S. The two networks have not yet issued word whether they'll make these replay payment discussions part of the bi-annual contract talks which began Sept. 22. NBC agreed to a two-year deal expiring in September, 1960, or at the expiration date of the regular 1958-60 contract, depending on which terminates later. Once the three webs are signed, the returns for actors —due to tape enabling wide replay —are expected to be several millions each year.

In addition to the pact, which divides world television in five regions (not counting the U.S.), NBC agreed to pay these new fees retroactive to June, 1957. Considering the fact that NBC has already sold kinescopes of such shows as Perry Como, "Festival of Magic," Dinah Shore, the General Motors 50th anniversary special and Steve Allen outside the U.S. and Canada, it has been estimated the network will have to pay close to $1,000,000 in retroactive residuals to the actors of those shows.

However, the replay pact contains a proviso, which enables high-priced talent to "waive" extra foreign payments. Idea is if the performer was paid enough over AFTRA scale in the first place, the network could possibly escape additional payments. In the future,

CBS-TV in Clean Mon. Nite Sweep

With all the new Monday night entries now accounted for, CBS-TV this week accomplished one of those "hey, look at us" feats which was a throwback to a half-dozen years ago when Columbia on Mondays was supreme. In short CBS swept the whole evening, 7:30 to 11, on the overnight Trendex tallies.

Here's the scorecard:

At 7:30 ::Name That Tune" registered 13.7 as against NBC's 8.7 for "Tic Tac Dough"; at 8 "Texan" got 19.6 as against 19.5 for "Restless Gun"; at 8:30 "Father Knows Best" copped at 23.3 as against 21.9 for "Wells Fargo"; at 9 Danny Thomas got a whopping 29.3 against 17.1 for NBC's "Peter Gunn"; at 9:30 the new Ann Sothern Show snared a 28.6 against 18.3 for NBC's "Alcoa Playhouse," from 10 to 11 "Desilu Playhouse" Desi Arnaz & Lucille Ball, with Maurice Chevalier as guestar) walked off with a 29.0 average for the full hour as against Arthur Murray's 15.3.

ABC-TV's 'Gee Whiz'

If ABC-TV is doing some fancy crowing since the start of the new season, it's because the Trendex ratings on the network's commercial nighttime entries indicate a shift in viewing habit. Even though the new semester is still in its infancy, those Trendex figures for the Sept. 30 to Oct. 5 period cross-the-board (ABC excludes Monday where it is admittedly weak) suggest that a definite trend could be in the making. Or so ABC would like to believe at this stage of the game.

Based on the 27 half-hours of commercial periods tallied in the the 7:30 to 10 p.m. area (and up to 10:30 on Wednesday) ABC says the cumulative scorecard reads: ABC, 17.8; CBS, 17.2; NBC, 15.5. That would be quite an upset based on last year's figures this time for the same 27 segments: ABC, 12.7; CBS, 18.8; NBC, 16.6. Says prexy Ollie Treyz: "This is the year we make it."

WHAT HAPPENS TO OREN HARRIS & CO. AFTER JAN. 5 A BIG QUESTION MARK

Washington, Oct. 7.

The final decision hasn't been made yet on whether Rep. Oren Harris' subcommittee inyestigating Federal regulatory agencies (including the Federal Communications Commission) will function after January.

But, Rep. Harris (D. Ark.) told VARIETY in an exclusive interview that the future life of the subcommittee, as such, is beside the point.

The House Committee, which he also heads as Chairman, will keep a closer eye than ever on the operations of FCC and all other federal regulatory agencies in the future whether the subcommittee continues or not. The Commerce Committee has authority to probe any regulatory agency anytime.

Important, however, is the fact that if the subcommittee (technically known by the misleading name of the House Legislative Oversight Subcommittee) dies, its staff of investigators goes with it. These gents have, in their 1958 tenure, been interviewing people, going over company books and—in one abortive incident, disclaimed by the subcommittee—inserted a bug under a rug. It was Bernard Goldfine's rug.

The decision on the life of the subcommittee, which has rocketed into herculean political significance (collecting the heads of Sherman Adams and Richard A. Mack), is obviously not for Harris to determine.

It belongs to the Democratic and Republican leaders of the House. House Speaker Sam Rayburn, in other words, will decide when Congress reconvenes whether a Democratic fight should be made for it, and House Minority (GOP) Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr. (R, Mass.) will decide if a Republican fight should be made against it.

Harris, a lawyer who likes to be careful with facts, has instructed his staff that the subcommittee's legal life now ex[illegible] only to Jan. 3. He has not said an effort won't be made to con[illegible] it longer. Neither has he said an effort will.

"I am certain," Harris told VARIETY, "that much closer attention will be paid by the Commerce Committee in the future than has been in the past to all regulatory agencies. And, I am equally certain that the Commerce Committee will have closer cooperation from these agencies."

In other words—investigating subcommittees or no investigating subcommittee, watch out!

Competitive Threat Cues Major NBC-TV Daytime Promotion

Facing tough daytime competition from rival networks and particularly alerted to ABC-TV's "Operation Daybreak," NBC-TV is launching a high-powered promotion contest among station promotion-publicity managers and station managers for the 12 best local campaigns promoting NBC-TV's daytime program lineup. Winners will garner $25,000 in cash and 12-late model RCA-Victor color tv sets.

For the purpose of the contest, which starts next Monday (13) and runs until Nov. 7, stations will be grouped into two categories and identical lists of prizes will be awarded in each category. Categories are all NBC-TV basic affiliates and all NBC-TV optional affiliates. NBC-TV's o&o stations are not eligible.

First prize will be $5,000; second, $3,000; third, $2,000; fourth, $1,500; fifth, $750,and sixth, $500. Managers of the winning outlets will get the color tv receivers.

To hypo interest in NBC's daytime schedule, the network also will cooperate with extensive promotion for the 12 shows in question: "Dough Re Mi," Gene Rayburn; "Treasure Hunt," Jan Murray; "Price Is Right," Bill Cullen; "Concentration," Hugh Downs; "Tic Tac Dough," Jack Barry; "It

GODFREY DAYTIME LURES U.S. STEEL

Arthur Godfrey's daytime CBS-TV stanzas which drew a wide assortment of clients during its year on the air came up this week with a real titan as United States Steel signed for Friday quarter-hour sponsorship.

Steel, of course, is no stranger to the web's nighttime schedule with its full-hour "U.S. Steel Hour" for several seasons and last season it also had an airing on Richard Hottelet's ayem newscasts.

But Steel's buy of the Godfrey show is definitely in the category of off-beat sponsorship for the big-time client.

British ABC-TV's 700G Studio Buy

London, Oct. 7.

British ABC-TV is planning a large migration to Teddington Studios. The web has reportedly clinched a deal with Warner Bros. for the purchase of the studios at a price believed to be in the region of $700,000.

It is understood that most of the company's administration staff will be moved to Teddington and the operation is being handled by Ron Dickenson, the recently appointed controller. Initially it was understood that the studios would be used as a live program outlet, but there is now rumor that it will also be used for vidpix production. Howard Thomas, ABC-TV's topper, is prepping talks with industry union officials.

For several years past, Teddington has been leased to the Hawker Aircraft firm. The programmers already have tv studios in Birmingham and Manchester.

Studebaker News Buy on MBS Net

Studebaker, via D'Arcy, has bought a shortterm campaign on Mutual for 109 participations in net's five-minute news shows. Campaign for the automaker's new car will stretch from Nov. 8 to No. 23, with heavy emphasis on weekends. Buy involves about $45,000.

On the organizational level, publisher David W. Hearst and MBS exec v.p. Blair A. Walliser have been named directors of MBS. This raises the number of board members to 11.

Hearst is publisher of the Los Angeles Herald Express and is a director of Hearst Consolidated Publications and Hearst publishing Co. Walliser joined Mutual earlier this year as administrative v.p. and was named exec v.p. and general manager on Sept. 11, the day Hal Roach Studios bought out the Armond Hammer group. Alexander L. Guterma, new prez of Mutual, also is a member of the board.

Other MBS board members include former Michigan Governor and Detroit banker Murray D. Van Waggoner; Joseph Gordon of Minneapolis; Jack Rapoport, Garland L. Culpepper, Jr., Robert J. Eveleigh and Hammer, all of N. Y., and Robert F. Hurleigh, of Washington.

Chrysler Seeks Own Rating on Astaire Via Ntl. Audience Board

Leo Burnett, in an effort to get an evaluation deeper than mere rating returns, has requested the National Audience Board and the several hundred laymen who review for it to once-over the Chrysler sponsored Fred Astaire spec on CBS-TV Friday (18).

Request is the first from an agency or sponsor to NAB to catch a program on the air. Chrysler is interested in Astaire and his hoofing sidekick on the show, Barrie Chase, for further specs.

Questionnaire NAB is distributing to its participating organizations (including women's clubs, legion auxiliary groups, scout council executives, et al.) asks if the viewers would care to see Miss Barrie on further programs, whether the production work is of high calibre, whether the show is offensive in any way and if it is on the whole, entertaining.

Barry and Enright Relinquish Production Reins on TV Quizzers

The tv quiz hanky panky goings-on are continuing to occupy the attention of the New York County grand jury and District Attorney Hogan's office but a spokesman for the latter said they had no intention of quizzing Orson Welles who had reportedly been approached by a quiz show with assurance that he could make $150,000 in nine weeks and perhaps as much as $200,000 "if the show's good."

Meanwhile NBC had taken over direct production responsibilities of "Twenty-One" in order that Jack Barry and Dan Enright would have more time to devote "to disproving the unfounded charges against the integrity" of their programs.

In addition to "Twenty-One" the other Barry & Enright shows are "Tic Tac Dough," "Concentration" and "Dough-Re-Mi." NBC bought the shows from the packagers last year for a sum said to be from $2,500,000 to $4,500,000.

Roger Gimbel, exec producer of NBC daytime shows, will take over all responsibility of "Tic Tac Dough," "Concentration" and "Dough-Re-Me." The nighttime shows, including the hot-potato "Twenty-One" will be handled by Joe Cates, who was the original producer of "The $64,000 Question" and "The $64,000 Challenge." Barry, it was understood, would continue as emcee of "Twenty-One" but would relinquish his emceeing of the daily "Tic Tac Dough."

Hogan this week also revealed that his office was getting a good deal of mail criticizing the video quizzers. He observed that the mail was running higher than on any case in his 17 years in office. Approximately 75% of the communiques lambasted the quizzers, he added.

Slim Pickin's On Election Coin

Washington, Oct. 7.

The tv-radio networks needn't look to the political parties for anything more than piddling purchases this Congressional election year.

It's strictly a local show in the election sweepstakes of 1958 when 435 Congressional seats and 34 Senators are chosen.

So far, Republican campaign official Robert Humphreys has only scheduled to buy time on four regional networks when President Eisenhower urges the U. S. to give him a Republican Congress. Plans could change, but haven't yet.

Democratic pressman Sam Brightman says no national tv purchases are anticipated.

This is a far cry from the $2,000,000 budgets of both parties in the 1952 and 1956 presidential campaigns.

Despite the lack of interest in national tv time for Congressional years, reports to Waashington indicate that tv is being used extensively on the local level.

Ex-New Yorkers File For Virgin Is. Channel

Washington, Oct. 7.

The Virgin Islands are at long last being wooed by television entrepreneurs. The first application for a tv outlet in the U.S. Caribean possession was announced Monday (6) by the Federal Communications Commission.

The Island Broadcasting Corp., made up of two former New York broadcasting men, filed papers for channel 10 at Charlotte Amalie, St. Thomas. Fifty-fifty stockholders are Robert Moss, once a radio supervisor and freelance producer, and Robert E. Noble Jr., ex-sales manager for WABC Radio in New York.

TV SPARKS A NEW CHI FIRE

Fun With a Trendex

With the return of "Real McCoys" to the Thursday night 8:30 period, NBC-TV's "Twenty-One" is really getting it, but good, on the Trendex returns. "McCoys" more than doubled the quizzer, with CBS-TV's "Derringer" winding up in the middle. In the preceding 8 to 8:30 slot, Ed Wynn, with a lowly 12.4, took a beating from CBS' "December Bride" (15.9), with ABC's "Zorro" out in front (17.4). From 7:30 to 8, the big noise is "Lucy" (reruns), topping NBC's "Tic Tac Dough" and "Leave It To Beaver." At 9 o'clock, Pat Boone (ABC) runs off with the laurels, with NBC's "Behind Closed Doors" taking a drubbing (8.6). CBS' "Zane Grey" was only slightly behind Boone's 20.8. Thursday up to 10 o'clock is ABC's night—averaging out 17.4, with CBS at 17.1 and NBC at 12.4.

Jackie Gleason on his preem show Friday (3) just managed to get past ABC's "Walt Disney Presents," 23.1 to 21.6, with NBC's "Ellery Queen" a poor third (8.8).

Dinah Shore in her season's preem Sunday (5) found it rough going over the 9 to 9:30 Trendex course with "GE Theatre" topping her, 25.0 to 20.3, with ABC's "Colt .45" settling for a 12.1. In the 9:30 segment Dinah bounced back, topping the Hitchcock preem, 23.6 to 22.8, with ABC's Canadian-emanating "Encounter" live dramatic show trailing with a lowly 4.2.

"Maverick" edged out Ed Sullivan 8 to 8:30 by a score of 23.3 to 22.0 with Shirley Temple's "Hiawatha" getting a 14.8. In the previous 7:30 segment, Jack Benny was the big noise, his 25.4 trouncing "Maverick's" 17.1 and NBC's "Northwest Passage" (9.0). The 8:30 to 9 score: Sullivan, 29.4; Shirley Temple, 17.3; ABC's "The Lawman," 15.9.

It continues virtually neck-and-neck on the two Perrys (Mason and Como) with CBS' "Perry Mason" on Saturday copping 23.8 in their 8 to 8:30 overlap and Como coming out slightly ahead, 27.7. In the preceding 7:30 segment, "Mason" had it pretty much to itself with a 19.6 as against Dick Clark's (ABC) 13.6 and NBC's "People Are Funny" 13.4.

WPAT Waited at the Altar Long Time But the 'Wright Way' Has Paid Off

By JO RANSON

The radiantly clean, highly antiseptic WPAT, 5,000-watter in Paterson, N. J., isn't standing pat or resting on its constant laurels as one of the leading indie outlets in the country dedicated to the principle that one doesn't have to louse up a station in order to make a buck.

Operating on the extraordinary theory that one can make fervent friends of both listeners as well as Madison Ave.'s time buyers by offering good music sans song identifications, phoney disk jockey seminars or other crudely spoken interference and limiting the number of commercials, WPAT under the tutelage of Dickens J. Wright, appears to be heading toward a lotus land rich in listenable music and clean commercials.

Wright, who came up the hard way in broadcasting from a time salesman for old WHN and sales exec at CBS and ABC, to present prexy and general manager of WPAT, puts it thusly: "Madison Ave. has finally discovered us. It took six years of sweating before they decided to buy us in bulk, so to speak. Since last year, particularly, the sailing has been easier but believe us, we waited at the Dickens J. Wright and four others paid $300,000 for WPAT in 1954. It was a nondescript minor-league commercial bag when Wright and his backers took over the Paterson, N. J. operation.

Last week, WPAT's owners reportedly were approached by a group and offered $3,000,000 for the license with a request that Wright stay with the company at a fixed compensation plus a hefty share of stock. The offer was turned down.

Catholic Church Blasts Italo TV

Rome, Oct. 7.

The Catholic Church has taken another sharp blast at Italian television, accusing it of too often betraying the "sanctity" of the home in both content and costuming. Criticism is contained in a long front-paged editorial in the official Vatican daily, Osservatore Romano.

After outlining the "family" aspects of television viewing in the home and the inability of Italian audiences to "choose" their tv fare, the Catholic organ went on to criticise the large number of local shows which had to be preceded by an announcement that they were "suitable for adults only"—which in itself, the editorial said, created a bad situation in home circles by forcing certain members of each family group to leave the room.

Blast also centered around increased local televising of musical shows and other variety programs

Bar Stand-Ins When Politicos Get Equal Time

Washington, Oct. 7.

A man must speak for himself when he gets equal time on political broadcasts.

The Federal Communications Commission has ruled that no candidate can use a stand-in or spokesman as a substitute when he is getting equal time under the provisions of Section 315 of the FCC Act.

In taking this position, the FCC reversed its own staff which has previously held that a candidate could use his "equal opportunities" in any manner that he chose. Worried about the bedlam which would ensue, the National Association of Broadcasters protested the staff ruling and asked the Commission to reconsider.

NAB feared that the broad interpretation of the staff would multiply demands for equal time.

The issue arose when J. E. Garner, a news-broadcaster for station KFPW in Fort Smith, Ark., declared himself for reelection to the state legislature.

His opponent, D. L. Grace,

WEBS ACCUSED IN SHOW AXINGS

Chicago, Oct. 7.

The rampant raids on live tv programs here in recent weeks, cutting them down in favor of celluloid or network feed, has precipitated rash action by the local chapter of American Federation of Radio and Television Artists in the form of a complaint to the Federal Communications Commission. Borrowing ammunition from the fearful Barrow report, the AFTRA petition asked for an investigation of network string-pulling at the o&o stations.

Complaint was sent also to the Interstate Commerce Commissions of both the House and Senate.

Forthwith, politics got into the act, the first voice aligning itself with the talent union. Illinois Sen. Paul H. Douglas last Friday (3) dispatched a telegram to Gen. David Sarnoff protesting the alleged network-inspired deletions at WNBQ and thumping for expression of the midwest point of view on the networks.

In the background, too, are the two technicians unions, NABET and IBEW, hovering as storm clouds over the controversy, their concern being, of course, that engineers and technicians get the axe along with talent everytime a live show is deleted.

A brief rundown of the lately cancelled shows on the o&o stations: "Bingo At Home," "Commander Five," and the shows of Clifton and Frayn Utley, Norm Barry, Dorsey Connors and Jack Angell at WNBQ; "Jazz In the Round" and the strips of Irv Kupcinet, Jerry Dunphy and John Harrington at WBBM-TV; and several daytimers at WBKB to make room for the new ABC-TV daylight lineup. A number of the shows were sponsored, and all of them were erased in favor of filmed shows or optional or mandatory network entries.

TV Bingo Roars Up Aurora (Ill.) Borealis

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Bizarre happenings in the town of Aurora, Ill. (pop. 60,000)—to wit, the firing of a police chief, suspension of the entire police force, and the contested appointment of a shapely female pressagent as the new chief—all concatenated as the result of Mayor Paul Egan's objection to "National Bingo," a show beamed out of Chicago on WNBQ.

It all started when the quixotic mayor, who has made the headlines several times before for similar deeds, ordered his police chief, Donald Curran, to arrest execs of two Aurora gazettes for accepting advertisements of the Bingo show placed by its sponsor, National Tea Co. When Curran refused to obey the order, Egan fired him. Egan, by the way, deems bingo, even the video version, a form of gambling, and since he is powerless to black out the telecast from Chi he endeavored to put the clamps on the local press for plugging it.)

Next development was that the Aurora City Council refused to recognize the firing of Chief Curran, so Egan suspended the entire 26-man police force for continuing to obey their top officer. In place of Curran, Egan "appointed" Patti Counts, a pressagent for several Chicago niteries, whose qualifications are that she had several courses in sociology at school. Actually the appointment of Miss Counts is only nominal for two reasons: (1) she was never a resident of the town, and the law requires that she must be, and (2) the Council still doesn't recognize the eviction of Chief Curran.

Anyway, "National Bingo" continues on WNBQ as if nothing had happened.

ABC-TV Wrests Control of Daytime Schedule from Young & Rubicam

A battle for control of daytime programming at ABC-TV occurred between the network and Young & Rubicam, with ABC coming off the winner. Result is that Y&R, agency responsible for the largest single block of the web's new daytime advertising, no longer has authority over "Operation Daybreak" programming. This is a complete turnabout, since, at the outset of the program plan (which came from the agency in the first place), Y&R was clearly in the driver's seat.

Y&R is only permitted to play a "consultancy" role in the daytime picture, even though the agency was deadset against two of the six new programs that ABC launches next Monday (13). When Jerry Chester, ABC daytime program veepee, submitted his proposed schedule for okay during the second week of September, Y&R posed objections to one of the programs in particular and, to a lesser degree, to another of the new packages. It's understood the agency also objected to the competitive scheduling of the six shows; Y&R wanted to reshuffle the time of some of the programs they liked.

Four days after the Chester plan was sent upstairs for sanction, it came through over Y&R objections with Chester's points intact. It was learned that both Oliver Treyz, web topper, and program chieftain Tom Moore backed Chester to the hilt.

One of the reasons for the stroke recapturing control of daytime from Y&R was the fear that other ad agencies resented the idea that a competitor was so handily controlling shows on which they had bought or intended to buy advertising.

Struggle for control began three weeks before Chester submitted his sked. He asked the network for time to work out his format, without interference by Y&R. Web toppers—in what appears to be the first time ABC has ever offered massive resistance to a major agency—instructed Y&R that Ches-

Terpsicookery

Apparently hotter than curry as a guest-shotter is the chef of the recently-opened mid-Fifties eatery, "A Bit of Bali." His name is I Made Menderra and, in addition to serving up exotic dishes, he's a Balinese dancer of some import.

As a result of his recent appearance on NBC's "Today" where he demonstrated both his cooking and dancing routines, Menderra has upcoming guest shots on the Jack Paar Show, Johnny Carson Show and Bill Leonard's program.

The chef-terp does everything but bake a cherry pie.

'Plot Thickens' As FCC Turns To Two More Fla. Stations

Washington, Oct. 7.

Communications Commission is scheduling some new tv thrillers for the industry.

FCC, already looking into possible mistakes in its Miami tv channel 10 decision and planning to do the same soon concerning Boston channel 5, has announced it will also investigate who tried to influence whom in the grants of Miami channel 7 and Orlando, Fla., channel 9.

And while this was going on, a Federal Grand Jury here apparently still had the Pittsburgh channel 4 case before it. In addition, there was a development toward getting the first case into court which grew out of the House Harris TV Investigating Subcommittee's probe of FCC and its tv decisions.

Thurman A. Whiteside, indicted with former FCC Commissioner Richard A. Mack on charges of bribery and conspiracy to influence and obstrtuct the administration of law in connection with the Miami channel 10 case, was arraigned Friday (3) before U. S. District Judge Burnita S. Matthews, who set bail at $1;000 at the suggestion of the government attorney.

Mack's arraignment was delayed

WABC-TV in 53% Earnings Hike For First Nine Months

From the weak, weak sister of two years ago, WABC-TV, N. Y., has become No. 1 money earner, ahead of Chicago, in the ABC owned and operated chain. Report that WABC, for the first time, is in the lead at ABC is unofficial, but official is the fact that the Gotham tv outlet has in the first three quarters of 1958 made 49% more profit than it did in all '57, which was a banner year for the outlet.

In comparing these nine months against the nine months of last year, WABC-TV increased earnings by 53%. Outlet will not translate the percentages into dollars, because the o&o's are not permitted by the corporation to release individual profit figures.

Network's "Operation Daybreak" program pattern was held responsible in large part for the latest earnings upswing. Station says that it has been able to sell these new daytime adjacencies to network programming "at a very high return." Station is now practically SRO daytime, according to Robert Stone, v.p. in charge of the key.

Web source disclosed that N. Y., Chicago and Detroit rank one, two and three, respectively, among ABC o&o money earners.

Odorizzi Upped In RCA Shuffle

In a reshuffle of RCA's echelon, Charles M. Odorizzi has been promoted to group executive vice prexy over consumer products and services. Odorizzi, who had been serving as exec v.p. over sales and services since 1955, thus also takes over the duties in the spot vacated by Robert A. Siedel, exec v.p. who will be assigned duties as assistant to RCA prexy John L. Burns.

In other executive assignments, P. J. Casella, prexy of RCA Victor Co. Ltd. of Canada, has been upped to exec v.p. of consumer products. He'll be in charge of the radio, television and disk divisions, reporting to Odorizzi. He'll continue to head RCA's Canadian subsid. At the same time, W. Walter (Wally) Watts, exec v.p. over electronic components, has been given the added assignment of directing the RCA International division, formerly under Odorizzi. Also reporting to the latter. Martin F. Bennett, formerly v.p. over merchandising, was named v.p. over distribution.

Odorizzi joined RCA in 1949 after 12 years with Montgomery Ward & Co., the mail order house which has provided a large part of RCA's exec cadre over recent years. RCA's former prexy Frank M. Folsom, now chairman of the RCA executive committee, was from Montgomery Ward and brought many of his associates in that company into RCA. Casella is another RCA exec who got his merchandising experience in Montgomery Ward.

Screen Gems, CNP to Get Moving On Tape; CBS Film Still Holds Out

Screen Gems and California National Productions, two of the larger telefilm houses, expect momentarily to jump into the syndication of tape programming.

Even as the final steps are being taken to line up tape shows, both companies recognize that it will be a year or more before tape will realize its full syndication potential. SC, a subsidiary of Columbia Pictures, figures the first program they do on tape will be a "stopgap." CNP, the NBC subsid, wants to go into tape immediately, despite the fact that only 26 markets are geared for tape prejection, in order to experiment with the market.

Plans were revealed by high officials of both companies. The inevitability of the moves gives four telefilm companies a declared stake in tape production. Guild Filmis has scheduled immediate entry into tape with the announcement of several shows for sale. Although National Telefilm Associates has not indicated a similar shortrange plan to syndicate tape, it recently bought into Telestudios, a N.Y. tape production house.

SG is working on the acquisition of a property now. Only a few days ago, it was explained by the SG official, his company was on the verge of taping for syndication a tv program that is now being done live in the N.Y. market, but the pending deal fell through. He stated that the company still plans to do a show, although he would not specify which one.

CNP, which just had a board meeting on tape, is eyeing a drama show presently on network as its first taped offering. The name of the program was not provided, but it is assumed, because there are no live dramas of half-hour length on coaxials now, that it will be a revamped telefilm series.

CNP says immediate entry will allow it to examine realistically pricing and conditions in tape syndication.

SG hopes to overcome the dearth of markets installed with tape by jointly producing for tape and kinescope replay. The non-tape tv areas will be sold 16m kinescope prints of the stanza.

On the other hand, NBC's Cal Nat is still investigating the method of getting into the non-tape markets, although the company was bullish about an early decision.

Meantime, CBS Film Sales flatly declared that it was not going into tape syndication at this time. Company was unmindful that jurisdictional problems have not been ironed out, at least to its satisfaction, also that the restricted market and high cost of tape prints made it unfeasible.

KTTV Heavy Sked Of Vidpix Preems

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Eleven first-run vidpix series have been scheduled by KTTV to premiere within a one-week period beginning today (Tues.), as the Times-Mirror-Metro station gears for a major push of syndicated product this fall. Well over 50% of its total programming is to be devoted to syndicated entries, with 27 out of 36 class AA program time devoted to that type of show.

Leading off Oct. 7, station will preem "This Is Alice," NTA skein starring moppet Patty Ann Gerrity; "Col. Humphrey J. Flack," Jody-Pam Productions item currently lensing at Metro; "New York Confidential," TPA series toplining Lee Tracy; and "Dial 999," Ziv-produced string featuring Robert Batty.

Kicking off Oct. 10 are TPA's "Tugboat Annie"; "Citizen Soldier"; Ziv's Richard Carlson starrer, "Mackenzie's Raiders"; and NTA's "How to Marry A Millionaire." Pair of NTA oater entries, "U.S. Marshal" and "Man Without A Gun," will occupy back-to-back slots beginning Oct. 11. Final stanza of the long push will be MCA's syndicated "Parole" series, debuting Oct. 13.

'HIGH NOON'S' TALL PAYOFF ON CHI TV

Chicago, Oct. 7.

"High Noon," feature with which WGN-TV debuted its new program of Thursday night blockbusters, scored a sizzling average rating of 37.8 and an average share of 76% according to the latest ARB. Film was shown Sept. 11.

Audience was one of the largest ever to view a feature film on Windy City channels. "High Noon" hit a high quarter hour rating of 43.6, and ARB estimates it played to 1,024,000 Chi area homes. WGN-TV has decided to rerun the film later this month on a Saturday evening, still not specified.

Understood the station paid around $16,000 per film for the features in the "Champagne Package" of National Telefilm Associates, highest amount shelled out by a Chi station for cinematics. It's the films from that package that are getting the Thursday night slotting.

20th-Fox TV Dickers Swope

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Twentieth-Fox is negotiating with Herbert Bayard Swope Jr., whose producer pact at the studio winds at the end of this month, to move over to its tv subsid, TCF-TV, as exec producer-director. As such, Swope would function as the right-hand man of production chief with Herbert Bayard Swope Jr., was associated in television years ago in N. Y.

Swope, whose last 20th pix were "The Bravados" and "The Fiend Who Walked the West," is understood agreeable to moving to the tv subsid. A participation deal is being discussed.

Before Swope joined 20th, he was under contract to NBC-TV (from 1949 to 1955), as a producer-director, and prior to that was with CBS-TV from 1946 to 1949.

'SEA HUNT' SHOWS IT CAN BE DONE

Ziv's "Sea Hunt" is kicking up some rating capers.

According to Arbitron, the Lloyd Bridges starrer ranked as the No. 1 show in the seven-station N.Y. market for the week of Sept. 21. It scored a big 39.3 in its 10:30-11 p.m. WCBS-TV time slot. The program that ranked second was "Gunsmoke," the 10 p.m. Saturday lead-in on the same station. The western hit 37.7

It's one of the few times that a syndication show has outranked all the network entries for a given week. It happened at a time, though, when many of the top-network entries, including "Gunsmoke," were playing off summer reruns. "Sea Hunt" won't go into its 13-week rerun cycle for another week or so. Moral of the rating tale appears to be a hot syndication entry can top all the network offerings, if rerunitis has set in on the webs.

Oliver Unger Abroad

It's expected while abroad that he'll give the once over to foreign pix for both theatrical distribution by NTA and more importantly to possible tv distribution. Recently, NTA acquired distribution rights to features produced by French filmmaker Paul Graets. Pix include "Devil in the Flesh," "Rome, 11 O'clock," and "God Needs Men." They're being issued to tv with English dubbing.

Edwin Smith Heads Up ABC Films Int'l Setup

ABC Films, which has been on the prowl for a foreign manager, has inked Edwin J. Smith as director of international operations.

For the past two years, Smith was v.p. and general manager of Allied Artists International Co. and Interstate Television, a subsid of Allied Artists. Headquartering in London, he supervised sales and operations for continental Europe. Prior to that, Smith was assistant foreign manager for RKO Radio Pictures.

AT ABC Films, he will report to prez George T. Shupert. Raul Conangla, Latin American sales coordinator at ABC Films, will continue in his present post, reporting to Smith.

Wrather Buys Gale Storm Show For $2,000,000

In a $2,000,000 deal, the fast-moving Jack Wrather-sparked ITC-TPA bought "The Gale Storm Show" from Hal Roach studios.

Involved are 111 half-hour episodes, including the current series being shown over CBS-TV and 38 future episodes now in production at Hal Roach Studios. Program is sponsored by Nestle Co.

Since ITC-TPA is affiliated with Associated Television Ltd. (ATV) of England, a berth in Britain virtually is assured. Buyout of the Roach property brings the ITC-TPA roster of network and syndicated programs to a total of 16.

Carlson Advocates 'Stock Company' Of Scripters for Series

Triple-threat man Richard Carlson feels that producers of action-adventure skeins should follow the policy on writers adopted for comedy projects. Action-adventure series should have a "stock company" of writers working on the particular skeins, rather than farming out the scripting to a large group of freelancers.

Carlson, who stars in Ziv's "MacKenzie's Raiders," sounded off on what is commonly recognized as one of telefilms' major problems—how to come up with a good, distinctive script in a beltline setup?

More money alone, according to Carlson, isn't the answer. "The financial inducements are already more than satisfactory to attract good writers. In recent years, a hard core of several hundred tv writers has been developed. They get as many assignments as they can handle—from the standpoint of overall quality, almost too many. With residuals on top of initial payments, it's hard for a writer to turn down an offer no matter how busy he is."

"The answer lies in getting a small group of script writers to concentrate on one series." Carlson claimed that such a system works in favor of getting a distinctive consistent quality to the series, with the writers then well-acquainted with the characters and the motif of the project. He contended that "Raiders," which operated on the "stock company of writers" principal, shows the fruits of such a system.

Carlton, in addition to starring in the series, has written three scripts for the skein and plans another three. He also directs some segments.

UA's 75% AAP Stock

United Artists has received enough Associated Artists stock to give UA approximately 75% of the shares outstanding.

UA, in the wake of buying controlling interest in AAP from the Lou Chesler group, made a stock tender offer to other AAP holders on Sept. 12.

UA board chairman Robert S. Benjamin indicated that shares sufficient to give UA 80% of the stock will be tendered within the coming week and that it will not be necessary to extend the UA invitation beyond the scheduled termination date of Oct. 16.

'Don't Shuffle Your Sequence'

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Growing source of irritation to Hollywood telefilm producers is the ad agency habit of shuffling the sequence of episodes in a given series. Practice has now reached the point where some producers are inclined to feel it damaging to the success of the series.

Most frequently, the shuffle takes the form of shelving the pilot film for a few weeks and premiering a new series with a subsequent episode. Producers feel this tends to bring the series on cold, without establishing the premise or introducing the characters in their proper background. In other instances, agencies will reverse the sequence of some episodes, and in shows where character is developed progressively from episode to episode, this too is felt to be harmful.

Bert Leonard, producer of "The Naked City," which falls into the latter category, feels there's no reason for the shuffling, particularly in the case of holding back on a pilot. "I can understand their reasoning. They feel that there's too much exposition at the sacrifice of entertainment values in a pilot. But if that's the case, it's just not a good pilot, and they shouldn't have bought it in the first place."

Reason for the switching appears to be the fact that the agencies, as new prints arrive, find shows that they prefer to earlier ones, and in an effort to establish the property, feel they're putting their best feet forward at the start of the series. But, some producers feel, they're actually hurting the show by doing so because it's not given a chance to develop as planned.

Instances of the pattern so far this season include "Northwest Passage," "Naked City," "Peter Gunn," "Dragnet," "Rin Tin Tin," to name a few. In the case of "Dragnet" and "Rin Tin Tin," it doesn't matter since both properties are well enough established, but in the other cases there may be a direct bearing on the success of the show.

Leonard Sees 'Realism' Inviting Newest Trend in TV Programming

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Next major trend in television programming will be toward highly realistic programs, almost documentary in their approach, in the opinion of Herbert B. (Bert) Leonard, producer of "Naked City," which bowed last week on ABC-TV.

Leonard believes that the mood of the American audience is toward realism, and that it has become satiated with straight dramatic fare. The documentary approach satisfies the yearning for realism, he points out, and is fresh and offbeat enough to arouse new audience interest. Beyond this, documentary style lends itself to television's sense of immediacy.

If Leonard sets the trend with "Naked City," he's ready to follow it up with a television of "Brute Force," feature which he bought in the same package with "City." He's also dickering for other properties in the same milieu, figuring that if "City" clicks, there'll be a strong demand for others of the same type. Leonard, who's production-distribution pact with Screen Gems expires at the end of May, isn't sure whether he'll put "Brute Force" into work for next season, but will definitely develop it for the following year.

Currently, producer is repped by three shows, "City," "Rin Tin Tin" and the SG-syndicated "Rescue 8" stanza. He's completed this season's 26 stanzas of "Rin Tin Tin" and is now concentrating on production of "City" in New York and "Rescue 8" here, thus being the only telefilm producer working on two shows locallled 3,000 miles apart at the same time.

Leonard's dividing his time equally between the two Coasts, spending two weeks in N. Y., two

8 DET. CLIENTS FOR CNP 'CAMEO THEATRE'

California National, NBC's film sales arm, has chalked up a sale of 26 skeins of the "Matinee Theatre" currently being peddled as "Cameo Theatre."

Eight days after the sale to WWJ-TV in Detroit, Peter Griffin Woodward, reps for station, had the series sold out to eight participating advertisers. The program was kicked off in Detroit on Oct. 6 and in order to allow for scheduling, station had to preempt network time of 10 to 10:30.

'Big Story' Rights Go to Flamingo

In the first deal of what is hoped to be a longterm commitment, Flamingo Telefilm Sales acquired distribution rights to "The Big Story," produced by Pyramid Productions.

Agreeing to give up distribution rights to "Big Story" was Official Films. Official was distributing "Big Story" and another Pyramid property "Decoy," which it still distributes. Switch took place in the midst of negotiations between Official and Guild on a possible merger. Official recently was taken off the listing of the Over-the-Counter-Exchange in N.Y., when its stock dropped below one point.

Flamingo prez Herman Rush said that the "Big Story" takeover signalizes a longterm liaison with N.Y.-based Pyramid. Latter company has an "Indictment" pilot, a projected series starring Richard Kiley and based on the activities of the N.Y. district attorney's office. No decision has been made as yet on whether to put "Indictment" into syndication, but Flamingo hopes to have at least three properties yearly in the syndication mill from a variety of sources.

Preliminary talks with Buckeye Corp., a farm equipment manufacturing concern, and Flamingo on financing have not gone beyond the exploratory stage.

Banner Expands Staff

In releasing "Night Court" for syndication, Banner Films, boss Charles McGregor bolstered his sales staff by hiring Bill Vidas as midwest district manager and Sam Posner to perform similar duties on the Coast.

KREM, Spokane, Washington; KRGP, Chattanooga, Tenn., and WNEW, N. Y., are the first purchasers of the 78 half-hours in "Night Court," a series which began locally on the Coast last year.

Transfilm Names Operation Heads

Transfilm prexy William Miesegaes picked two men to head his tv operation. Robert Bergmann becomes veepee in charge of the television division of the company, Thomas Whitesell, triper in charge of motion picture production.

The two men were operating heads of their departments for some time, although there has been no official tv or production boss since Robert Klaeger left well over a year ago to form his own company. The titles are somewhat misleading in that Bergmann nominally in charge of the tv division, is actually head of sales, while Whitesell is in charge of motion picture production—including the making of telefilm.

It was explained that the two men are on the same level, with both reporting to Michael Palmer, exec v.p. of Transfilm.

BBC'S 'TOO MUCH YANK FILM'

WGA's 817G in '58 Rerun Coin

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Writers Guild of America West collected a record figure of $162,000 in vidpix residual coin for its members during September, guild has revealed.

Sum reps a big hike in collections since payments on vidpix reruns began in 1955, indicating there are more and more telefilms being rerun these days.

So far this year guild has collected $817,000 in rerun coin, as compared to $343,000 for the entire year of 1957. Telescripters have received a total of $1,600,000 since 1955.

Current high rate of collections is obviously due to the spur in summer repeat runs. Guild predicts collections will average about $1,000,000 from now on.

Wrather Putting ITC-TPA House In Order; Set New Organization Chart

ITC-TPA, the Jack Wrather-sparked telefilm outfit, moved rapidly on two fronts—integrating and expanding its sales organization and lining up product.

Within a week after the closing of the $11,350,000 deal, ITC-TPA prez Walter Kingsley had a table of organization adopted. All TPA personnel have been retained. New organization, combining the talents of Television Programs of America and the acquiring company Independent Television Corp., has not granted veepee stripes to any exec at this time.

First major property formally inked for ITC-TPA is Sapphire Films' "Four Just Men," to be produced in the U.S. and Britain. Stars will be toplined by Jack Hawkins, Vittorio de Sica, Dan Dailey and a fourth star, an American, yet to be selected. The series of 39 Edgar Wallace thrillers will be produced under the supervision of Hanna Weinstein, who lensed "Robin Hood" and "Sir Lancelot."

Regarding ITC-TPA's table of organization, this is how the division of responsibilities shapes up:

Director of national sales is Hal James, who joined ITC-TPA Monday (6). James formerly was radio-tv head for Ellington & Co. Charles Goit of the TPA staff, who is recovering from surgery, will work closely with James upon his return.

General manager of syndicated sales is William Dubois, who held this position at ITC. Hardi Frieberg has been promoted from eastern sales head of TPA to assistant syndicated sales manager. Alvin E. Unger, who recently resigned from Ziv, has joined ITC-TPA in a general sales exec capacity. Unger had been v.p. of Ziv's Chicago office.

Eastern division manager is Walt Plant, formerly western sales head of TPA. Central division manager is Art Spirit, who retained the post he held under TPA, with the added responsibility of being manager of the Chicago office. Western division manager, is William Andrews,

Fred Niles Buys Chi Kling Setup

Chicago. Oct. 7.

Fred A. Niles, Chi blurb maker who opened his own film shop less than three years ago on an investment of $5,000 yesterday (Mon.) purchased outright the Windy City film division of Kling Enterprises for a sum believed to be around $500,000. Purchase is effective Oct. 13 and involves all equipment, facilities and active accounts.

Kling has withdrawn from the motion picture biz in this area, although its coast plant continues to operate along with the art-photo enterprise here. Niles had established the Kling film division in 1947, when he was exec veepee and partnered in the company. He left in 1955 to hang out his own shingle.

Kling staff will be absorbed by Niles in the takeover, including Mike Stehney, as veep in charge of tv-film commercials, and Ed Rinker, veep in sales. Niles is now negotiating for a larger studio in Hollywood to augment his present facilities there.

CBS Newsfilm Buys

Six more stations have signed for the CBS Newsfilm service, putting the roster of stations in the CBS Newsfilm coral to over 110.

New subscribers are WWL-TV, New Orleans, WEHT-TV, Evansville, Ind.; KRCA-TV, Sacramento; WLAS-TV, Asheville, N.C.; KPIX-TV, San Francisco; and YVKA-TV, Caracas, Venezuela.

Newsfilm operation under Howard L. Kany is five years old. It started with two stations, KNXT, Los Angeles, and WBBM-TV Chicago. Now the service extends to over 110 stations and networks in the U. S. and 20 foreign countries.

$1,500,000 Amoco 59-Market Spread On 'Border Patrol'

CBS Films Inc. reportedly copped one of the largest regional deals in signing up the American Oil Co. (Amoco) for a 59-market spread on "U. S. Border Patrol," new documentary adventure series based on the law enforcement arm of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization.

Deal, understood to cover the entire Atlantic Coast and an extensive area in the east and southeast, will mark Amoco's entrance into the syndication field. Outfit, prior to the "Border" buy had been in spot participations and on network.

Telecasting is slated for spring. "Border" will be produced by Sam Gallu, who did "Navy Log." Starring Richard Webb, the series will get into production in another month, with location shooting being done along the U. S. border and set shooting in Hollywood.

Amoco contract reportedly calls for an investment of about $1,500,000 for program and time charges. Joseph Katz is the agency. Major markets included in the deal are understood to be New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Washington, Baltimore, Atlanta, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Providence, New Orleans and Houston.

ZIV'S ECONOMEE IN 27% SALES SPURT

Ziv's rerun Economee division, helmed by Pierre Weis, has enjoyed a sales spurt, registering a 27% sales boost for the August-September period, as compared to last year.

Economee now also is handling "Men of Annapolis" and "West Point." Sales activity is heaviest on such shows as "I Led Three Lives," "Dr. Christian," and "Science Fiction Theatre."

Among stations signing for one or more shows are WABC-TV, N.Y., WGN-TV, Chicago; KABC-TV, Los Angeles; WMAR-TV, Baltimore; WCCO-TV, Minneapolis; WRCV-TV, Philadelphia; WAGA-TV, Atlanta, and KSTP-TV, Minneapolis.

BUT NOT MUCH IT CAN DO ABOUT IT

London, Oct. 7.

The BBC is irked because it has to depend on America for its feature films and vidpix series. It regards the position as unsatisfactory and states that it is doing all that it can to stimulate production of British films for tv. In its latest annual report, it is pointed out that during the year, 10% of its programming consisted of material of American origin.

The report notes that over many years the BBC has tried unsuccessfully to buy British films, but none was available at reasonable prices. The web now stocked up with Yank features for some years to come, but is now in the difficult position of not being able to maintain the right proportion of films of British origin.

This difficulty, it points out, has become acute with vidpix series, and the BBC, along with other tv organizations, has to look to America for them because British-made series of this type were "virtually non-existent." The report adds: "It is hoped that during the coming year substantial advances will be made which will increase the flow of British material not only to television screens in this country but also overseas in the form of exports."

Meanwhile, the BBC's audience research department says that viewing continues to be a major evening preoccupation of those who have tv sets. In winter, on the average, it points out, they each view between the hours of 6 p.m. to 11 p.m. for 12½ hours a week, whether their sets can receive both BBC and commercial tv or only BBC. At the end of the year the number of persons, excluding children who would normally be viewing the BBC channel at any moment during the evening was approximately 5,200,000 while the number watching commercial tv was 3,100,000. The reports says that in general the size of BBC-TV's audience during 1957-58 was about the same as in the previous year because the losses to indie tv were just about offset by increases due to the rise in the number of receivers.

Its top programs during the period January to March this year were "Panorama," a weekly news magazine with an audience claimed to be 10,000,000; "What's My Line" —9,000,000; "Sportsview"—8,000,000; and "Press Conference" —4,000,000.

But although television is capturing large audiences, sound radio too has an audience which remains "very substantial," and it is estimated that an average of 22,000,000 people listen to one or more radio programs each day, and there is no indication of the usage of sound radio diminishing. There has however been a decline in the number of listeners to individual programs, but research shows that the amount of listening put in by those without tv has increased over the past year. The popular radio shows still pull in very sizeable audiences. Top program is "Family Favorites," a deejay offering which attracts 13,000,000 followed by another disk program, "Housewives Choice," and a five night a week family series, "The Archers," both of which have over 6,500,000 listeners.

Mort Abrahams to Coast

Mort Abrahams, director of creative programming for National Telefilm Associates, left for the Coast for production confabs.

NTA plans two series "High Noon" and "The Third Man," for which leads are being sought. Plans to star James Mason in "Third Man" collapsed. Trevor Howard is now being sought for that series.

Smooth-Running Syndication Biz Can Now Rely on 40 New 1st Run Properties a Year; Ziv Pacesetter

'Variety'-Pulse Chart

The VARIETY-Pulse Feature Chart, beginning with this issue, will tab the first-run and rerun pix making the Top 10 listing in each market.

The chart has a "Run" column, under which each pic making the Top 10 is tabbed either "1st-run" or "Repeat." As an expanded service, VARIETY and Pulse in subsequent weeks will list the "run" information on competitive pictures which failed to win the rating race against the Top 10. This information will be listed with the "Top Competition" section of the page.

VARIETY is introducing this added service at a time when the well of pre-'48's is running dry, when distributors, stations, and advertisers want to be apprised of the rerun strength of pix. It may well be, time and again, that a strong repeat will outrate a first-run weaker pic of more recent vintage. Conversely, overexposure of a pic is bound to show its rating toll. The chart will tell the story.

NTA Film Network Snares Six Clients For Virtual SRO

Six national advertisers fell in line with the NTA Film Network, which had its debut this week (6).

The net offering six-and-a-half-hours a week of programming is virtually sold out. Only remaining spot is about a minute-and-a-half of commercial time on "Man Without a Gun," one of the three new net series.

Topping the sponsor list is the American Tobacco Co., which signed for full sponsorship of "How to Marry a Millionaire" on the web's lineup of 115 stations. Agency is SSC&B. Sponsor will advertise its Pall Mall cig brand on the half-hour show.

The participating sponsors include A&P, Perma Starch, Philco Corp., Vick Chemical and White King Soap. The third half-hour series for the net is "This Is Alice." In addition, the net is strip programming five days a week, its "TV Hour of Stars," consisting of reruns of telefilms produced by 20th-Fox and Warner Bros.

The participation breakdown follows: "This Is Alice," A&P, Perma, Vick, White King; "Man Without a Gun," A&P, Perma, Vick; "Stars," A&P, Perma, Philco, Vick, White King.

"Millionaire" and "Gun" were produced by NTA by TCF-TV, telefilm division of 20th-Fox, while "Alice" was produced by Desilu.

A contracted lineup of stations will be utilized for the reruns of the Shirley Temple pix for the holidays. The pix, to be telecast from October through December, will be sponsored by Ideal Toy, Necchi-Elna Sales, Phillips-Van Heusen, Samsonite Luggage and Westinghouse Electric. All the advertiser are clients of Gray Advertising.

SG Preps Traubel Series

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Screen Gems is prepping a new teleseries, "Mother's The Governor of Texas" as an upcoming vehicle for Helen Traubel.

Doug Morrow will be producer-director.

Syndication biz in its relative short history has matured so that for the first time most syndicators have a planned yearly production schedule—with some 40 fresh first-run properties assured yearly to feed the market.

The figure of 40 properties yearly may fluctuate somewhat year-by-year, according to the times and according to the fortunes of individual companies. But the outlook is good that the sizeable 40 mark will be maintained, if not surpassed in years to come.

The greater portion of the first-run product output will come from the relative handful of majors. Ziv, the bellwether in the biz, set an annual schedule last year of six first-run releases, one first-runner every two months. Since then, other companies have joined the six-a-year bandwagon, including California National Productions, and CBS Films.

It remains to be seen whether the other companies are equipped to maintain the Ziv pace. An unknown quantity at this point is the new ITC-TPA outfit. Television Programs of America, which was acquired by Jack Wrather's Independent Television Corp., had a first-run output prior to the buyout of about four skeins yearly. In wake of the buyout, the ITC-TPA yearly first-run release output could double to eight, but it surely should be at least six.

Screen Gems has created its own syndication production unit, under the aegis of Tom Gries and Wallace MacDonald, with a yearly production schedule of three first-runners. The rejuvenated Flamingo outfit also plans three first-runners yearly. National Telefilm Associates should account for at least three first-runners, above and beyond that fed to the NTA Film Network.

Guild Films, which is heavily committed to tape, reportedly plans at least three taped shows yearly as a starter. Gross-Krasne can be put down for two, if not more, first-runners. Telestar Films and ABC Film Syndication could be listed for one to three first-runners yearly.

The tally doesn't take into account the off-network properties, first-run in the syndication field. If these were taken into account, the count would swell heavily. But sticking to the 40 figure, representing freshly made properties for the syndication mart, the biz has made some steady strides to reach and maintain that mark.

N.Y. Still Makes All the Decisions

New York, as opposed to Hollywood, remains in the command position on telefilms.

Execs frequently making the N.Y. to L.A. trip report that the telefilm "plant" in Hollywood is bursting at the seams. But virtually all the orders to the film factory come from N.Y.—the decision on what projects to gamble on for pilots, the greenlight for production of a series, etc.

Despite the fact that major agencies and all three network are represented on the Coast, the final say-so on clinching a national deal usually is arrived at in N.Y. Even the indie packagers such as Don Sharpe who headquarter on the Coast recognize this and make frequent trips to N.Y. to sound out the market and make deals.

On the syndication level, the go-ahead signal on a project usually is given after the N.Y. office sounds out its sales force throughout the country on the project's commercial chances.

N.Y., in short, remains the nerve center.

All You Need Is One Giant Client And Your Agency Is in Business —On Other Madison Ave. Fronts

By JACK BERNSTEIN

While the larger Madison Ave. ad agencies have scores of accounts in the house, in most instances it's the three or four major advertisers that account for the hefty tv billings and the accompanying 15% reward.

Benton & Bowles, an agency which has an estimated $70,000,000 in air media billings derives most of this from two major accounts, General Foods and Procter & Gamble. General Foods out of B&B is sponsoring Ann Sothern, Danny Thomas, "December Bride," "Zane Grey," "Person To Person," and part of "Perry Mason." P&G is in the fall nighttime lineup with "This Is Your Life," "Loretta Young Show," and "Tic Tac Dough." While the agency has other clients committed to television it's these two bluechip accounts which make up the bulk of the business.

What is true of Benton & Bowles is true of most other agencies along the avenue. Of the $83,000,000 that Lennen & Newell bills, only one major advertiser has more than one program on the nighttime network schedule. The client, P. Lorillard, accounts for most of the house's tv billings, sponsoring "Rough Riders," "$64,000 Question," "Arthur Murray Show," and "Masquerade Party." Only one other client The American Gas Assn. comes into the nighttime picture picking up part of the tab on "Playhouse 90."

At William Esty it's the R. J. Reynolds business that has the agency in the top 10 circle. The tobacco firm is the bankroller for "Anybody Can Play," Bob Cummings, "I've Got a Secret," "Law Man," and "People Are Funny." Campbell Ewald enters the scene by way of one account, the Chevrolet billings, backer of Pat Boone and Dinah Shore.

The bread and butter accounts at other agencies include Whitehall, American Home Products, Colgate-Palmolive, Brown & Williamson and Carter at Ted Bates. Kaiser, Goodyear, Bristol-Myers and Beechnut for Young & Rubicam. Two accounts General Mills and Liggett & Myers sum up most of Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample tv billings. At D. P. Brother it's the A.C. Sparkplug and Oldsmobile backers.

Top air media agency, J. Walter Thompson, has nine supporters on its network lineup, but for the most part it's the two or three large spenders in each agency that keep it active in the network television picture.

Switches: David P. Crane, veepee in charge of media at Benton & Bowles, has left the agency and will join Ogilvy, Benson & Mather on Oct. 15 as a veep and account supervisor. Crane, while having the title of media director at the agency, was more active in the account field. Lee Rich, agency v.p. in media steps in to head up the department.

L. C. Barlow, v.p. and director of media and marketing of Brooke, Smith, French & Dorrance, has been transferred to the Detroit office.

Robert J. Gillen Jr., formerly of the J. M. Mathes agency, joins Hazel Bishop as station relations manager and coordinator of advertising and merchandising.

Stephen D. Smoke and Kendall J. Mau have earned senior veepee stripes at Gaynor & Ducas.

Franklin J. Hennessy, financial veepee of Kenyon & Eckhardt, named to head up the agency's corporate services.

Dick Reibold has switched over from BBDO to Lennen & Newell in Bev Hills as commerical producer on "Queen For A Day" and "It Could Be You."

Daniel E. Charnas, formerly with Lennen & Newell, joins P. Lorillard as media director for Kent, Old Gold and Newport cigarets.

The board of directors of Calkins & Holden has accepted the resignation of Merlin E. Carlock, vice-chairman of the board, and one of the major partners of the agency. At the same time the agency upped Walter B. Geohegan to a senior v.p. and William A. Chalmers was given exec veep status.

R. C. Brown has been named manager of the corporate p.r. sector of BBDO. He succeeds Richard M. Detwiler, who has resigned to become director of publicity of the Wool Bureau.

Walbeth Ludwig appointed comptroller, and assistant treasurer of Cohen & Aleshire and Alvin E. Jaderlund joins the agency as offic manager.

Lost and Found: A relationship which has extended over 39 years will terminate on Jan. 1 with the decision by the General Baking Co. to yank its $1,500,000 account out of the BBDO shop. While the agency lost the General Baking account it picked up other billings by being named to handle the Forstmann Woolen Co. division of the J. P. Stevens & Co. Effective immediately, the company will handle the men's fabric line. It currently represents Forstmann's women's wear and retail fabrics.

Compton picks up where BBDO left off by being named to handle the billings of the General Baking Co.

Marschalk & Pratt has been named to handle the account of the Downflake Foods, a division of DCA Food Industries.

Compton Advertising has landed the institutional and service advertising programs of the Guaranty Trust Co. of N.Y. Albert Frank Guenther will continue to handle the bank's financial advertising.

Campaigns: Lysol Pine Scent will embark on a major radio campaign using network radio in addition to a heavy spot schedule. Lysol, a product of Lehn & Fink, has not had a major radio campaign in several years.

United States Pool Corp. has set aside an estimated $100,000 budget for its Gertrude Ederle Swimming Pools. All media is to be used.

Lever Bros. is mapping a spot tv drive in behalf of its Handy Andy detergent in the top markets. The schedule set via Fuller & Smith & Ross kicks off in Nov. and is ticketed to run for 52 weeks.

Cunningham & Walsh starts a drive for Coldene cold medicine this month using a 12-week spot tv schedule.

Chi Agencies

By LES BROWN

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Geoffrey Wade agency, chalking it up to burgeoning biz, has leased two floors of the Kemper Insurance Bldg., increasing its previous office space twofold.

Herb Grayson, onetime publicity chief at CBS Chicago, caught in personnel cutbacks at Mohr & Eicoff agency along with Herb Ross. Both had been account execs.

Ernest W. Eversz rejoined Foote, Cone & Belding from Leo Burnett agency as veepee and copy director.

Jack Holden left WLS after 27 years to become radio-tv field rep at Geoffrey Wade agency.

Gourfain-Loeff plucked Continental Manufacturing Co. account, makers of men's slacks and blue jeans.

National Restaurant Assn. has named Reach, McClinton & Co. for its advertising.

William A. Moore and Peter A. Nelson upped to asst. account execs at Needham, Louis & Brorby.

Erratumed here several weeks ago that Maryland agency will reap the monetary rewards of the Oklahoma Oil ballcasts on WGN-TV next season, although Needham, Louis & Brorby now has the account. That was the case in 1958 (NL&B got the account in July, when the baseball season was well under way) but won't be the case in 1959. NL&B said Oklahoma Oil will continue to sponsor baseball next year.

London Agencies

By BARRY BARNETT

London, Oct. 7.

The Clifford Bloxham & Partners agency is handling a tv ad campaign centred on the North of England to promote retail sales of Swish Products Ltd., a firm of plastic drape runner manufacturers. Theme of the drive is the product's silent action. Promotion will use a large number of 15-second spots on both ABC-TV and Granada-TV until Oct. 26.

The same agency is also working on a 12 weeks campaign for Ultra Electric Ltd., makers of radio and television sets, which, it's claimed is its biggest fall drive to date. Products to be spotlighted are a "Vertical Precision" tv set, a portable tv and a new portable radio. Campaign will use eight mid-week advertising magazine programs on Associated-Rediffusion and large spaces in five national newspapers, plus the three London evenings.

A tv commercial, based on motivational research carried out by the W. S. Crawford agency and developed by the outfits tv division, to promote the habit of wet shaving, won first prize in its category at the Advertising Film Festival in Venice. It was the first Gillette tv commercial of a current series on the theme of "water, lather and Gillette." The sole Gillette identification appears at the very end of the commercial.

David Plumb has been appointed a producer for TV Advertising Ltd. He joined the firm two years ago from the Films Division of the British Transport Commission and since that date has been one of TV Advertising's assistant producers.

Farmers Union, KFGO Slander Suit Settled

Bismark, N. D., Oct. 7.

Radio station KFGO, Fargo, N.D., has settled out of court for $10,000 a $2,400,000 slander suit brought against it and A. C. Townley, an unsuccessful candidate for the U.S. Senate in the last election, by the National Farmers Union.

The case now is under consideration by the U.S. Supreme Court to determine for the first time at that level if a radio station is liable for slanderous statements made by a political candidate in a campaign.

KFGO contended that it was obligated to permit Townley to give his political address and could not control his statements. The decision in the North Dakota district and supreme court favored it, and the Union, the plaintiff, appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court where the case recently was argued, but where no decision has been forthcoming yet.

The Union claimed that inasmuch as it was not a candidate in the election a radio station would be liable for slanderous statements against it even though made by a political candidate in a campaign.

Des Moines—Richard Covey, program director of KRNT radio and KRNT-TV, Des Moines, since 1950, has resigned and is succeeded by Joe Hudgens, who has been promotion manager of the stations. Covey's plans have not been announced but he intends to remain in radio and television in another section of the country.

$50,000,000 GOING THATAWAY

Westerns Boon to Firearms Sales

Washington, Oct. 7.

Westerns on tv not only sell soap, cereals, aluminum and the like, but they also sell the oldfashioned "equalizers."

Firearms Manufacturer Fred A. Roff Jr. revealed in a Mutual Broadcasting System interview on "Capital Assignment" here that tv oaters have greatly stepped up the demand for Western-type guns, now being produced at a modern record rate of 10,000 per month.

"Westerns have had a decided affect on firearms production," Roff, vice president of Colt's Patent Firearms Manufacturing Co., told his interviewer, Ken Scheibel, on the program.

Roff dismissed the contention that Westerns and their liberal use of gun play have a bad effect on children.

"The use of guns has no basic effect on the development of our youth," Roff contended. "Western tv shows, as Western movies, should be judged not on the fact that guns are employed, but on whether the basic plot is one that brings the Golden Rule out convincingly to the youngsters who are watching it."

Roff estimated the average male youngster, by the time he has reached teen age, has played with 15 or 20 toy gun replicas. He said that cave children probably played good men against bad men with their big cave men clubs.

TV Exploitation Made 'Honorable' Profession, With Big NBC Assist

No longer is the word "exploitation" linked with the sundry illgraced practices of promotion manipulators, thanks largely to the code of ethics followed by Al Rylander, now in his third year as head of the NBC exploitation department.

Despite occasional downward glances from supermoralists in the fifth estate, NBC's exploitation force has turned a once-murky vocation into a highly-regarded, nay, demanded procedure on the part of major national clients.

It's now standard routine for an ad agency upon signing for a network show to place exploitation on par with publicity but NBC, however, is the only network to date with a regularly constituted exploitation department. It's true other network press departments engage in exploitation but are not organized on a scale as extensive as Rylander's department.

The successful NBC "stay tuned" technique is a direct result of his exploitation department and the current campaign to increase the number of star walk-ons is beginning to pay off, Rylander asserts, and before the season is over, NBC viewers will be seeing far more promotional "marriages"—that is, tie-ins in which headliners appear as guests on adjacent shows.

Also, the exploitation department is filming name talent in open-end interviews for use on local shows and thus getting far more name exposures than in the past.

With name talent bobbing up in virtually every other media including the covers of record albums, school bulletin boards, supermarket displays, dustjackets of paperbacks — everything, in fact, from Bat Masterson walking sticks to scholastic fact sheets for "Omnibus"—the exploitation department has been as busy as a circus billposter but certainly nowhere near as blatant-in spreading NBC's per-

Anglo-Russ TV Exchange Dead

London, Oct. 7.

The deal between Associated-Rediffusion and Russian TV for a regular exchange of material has collapsed. The pact was to have provided for several minutes of filmed program each week from both sources, but after a couple of swaps the scheme petered out.

John McMillan, A-R's program controller, said he had no plans at the moment for trying to renew the arrangement. Idea originated when the programmers were granted permission to film a feature program in Russia entitled "USSR Now." Michael Ingrams and a production team were allowed to move freely behind the Iron Curtain, and a Russian TV team were granted similar facilities in Britain.

Westbrook Pegler Set For Ben Hecht's TV'er

Westbrook Pegler, Hearst columnist and seldom, if ever, seen on radio or tv, has agreed to appear on Ben Hecht's program over ABC-TV. He was originally set for Oct. 2 but sought a week's extension in order to prepare something extra special for his powwow with Hecht.

Pegler reportedly will do something of a "fairly antic" nature when he makes what could easily be described as his "maiden appearance" tomorrow (9).

NE Britain's Indie TV Bows Jan. 15 With Theatre Coin

Newcastle, Eng., Oct. 7.

Indie tv in northeast England is set to teeoff here Jan. 15. George & Alfred Black, leading theatre impresarios, have a stake in the operation, which will serve a population of 2,600,000 in primary service area from Burnhope to Alnwick, and from Whitby south to Ripon.

It's estimated that 180,000 homes will have tv before opening night, and that the operation will extend by some 25,000 homes per month. By April, 1959, it's expected there will be 250,000 sets tuned to the new channel.

Tyne-Tees Television will be headed by Anthony Jelly as managing-director. Bill Lyon-Shaw is executive producer. Programs skedded include a lunchtime show, a talent show "At the Golden Disk," a comedy serial with Glenn Melvyn and Danny Ross, a sports desk program, and a Passing Week magazine. Local station will provide eight-and-a-half hours per week, with remainder from national network.

Coast TV Doing Giant Spec to Drum Up Nix On Right-to-Work Vote

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

A two-hour, eight-city telecast is to be held Sunday, Nov. 2—two days before California's general election—with all elements of show biz involved in the show, which will be held for one purpose—to convince voters to nix the so-called right-to-work measure, Proposition 18.

Dore Schary will function as exec producer of the event, which will have talent and entertainment as well as its pitch against the

PRODUCTION TAB ON TV OATERS

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

If television westerns have been a bane to the critics, they've been a $50,000,000 bonanza to Hollywood's filmmakers. That's the extent of production spending that will go into this season's thataway lineup, comprising 28 shows and some 570 hours of new footage over the seasonal span. That accumulation of production, incidentally, is equal to 450 western features—figuring the average running time of a feature oater at 75 minutes—more annually than Hollywood ever produced in the heyday of the "B" picture.

Production costs on individual series range from $30,000 a show for the lower-budgeted half-hour syndicated entries all the way up to $100,000 or more for the big hourlong productions. Some of the hour series run to only 26 weeks, however; if they were contracted on a 39-show basis as are virtually all the half-hours, the production bill would run considerably higher.

Nor does the western production binge stop at straight-oaters series. Many anthology shows include westerns within their lineup. "Walt Disney Presents" will have at least a half-dozen oaters in its 26 hours this year; new "Desilu Playhouse" will have a few; "General Electric Theatre," "Alcoa-Goodyear Theatre," "Schlitz Playhouse" all turn out a sizeable chunk of oater fare within their anthology frameworks.

On a company-by-company basis, three outfits turn out the bulk of television sagers, Warner Bros., Revue Productions and Four Star Films. Together they will account for a total of 14 series, 305 hours of footage and $28,000,000 in production outlay. Warners and Revue are nearly even in terms of expenditures and programming—each have five series, Warners will film about 117 hours, Revue 110, and Warners will spend about $11,000,000 to $10,000,000 for Revue. Four Star, with four half-hour series, will film about 78 hours at a cost of about $7,000,000.

Italy's Puzzler: Why Was 18G Drama Show Cancelled Off RAI-TV?

Rome, Oct. 7.

This week's sudden last-minute cancellation of RAI-TV's usual Friday night dramatic telecast, and the substitution of an old kinescope of a previously performed play, has Italian video observers—and set-owners—wondering as to the true reason for the switch. Added to this are reports that the cancelled show cost some $18,000 to stage, and that it was run off anyway for an invited theatre audience. Topper is that actors themselves didn't know play was not being televised until after first act ended.

Show was Luigi Chiarelli's "La Maschera e il Volto," (The Mask and the Face) considered by now somewhat of a classic in Italian Theatre, and previously televised in another staging some two years back. Thesps were Gianni Santuccio, Flora Lillo, Sergio Tofano and Armando Francioli.

Conjecture as to true sudden shutoff of show (they notified director by phone one-half hour before curtain) centers around two possibilities: (1) the recent Catholic blast at Italian television and its inappropriate content, with reference to the play's treatment of an adulterous situation; or (2) a consequence of the long-standing rivalry between Rome and Milan's tv setups.

RAI-TV itself has refused comment other than ascribing cancellation to "technical reasons." Observers on the other hand point out that censor angle appears invalid as play was previously televised and had been pre-censored (with such dialog changes as "lover" becoming "friend," etc.).

SAG Execs Explain Why a 1-Big Umbrella Pattern Won't Work Out

By ART WOODSTONE

Screen Actors Guild leaders reaffirmed for VARIETY their refusal to merge with American Federation of Television & Radio Artists, since video tape is the only area in which they saw any genuine mutuality of interest between the unions. They said, however, that they are willing to negotiate mutually with AFTRA wages and working conditions in tape, just so long as the two unions separately administered the contracts.

To SAG's prexy Leon Ames, national executive secretary John Dales, a brace of its lawyers and to Florence Marsten of the guild's N. Y. shop, tape is now only a relatively small part of each union's overall function, and this they could not visualize making the basis of a permanent alliance with AFTRA. They were skeptical that tape would completely abolish the older technical processes, but Dales said that, it should become broad enough to undermine film and should likewise eliminate the many differences in techniques and atmosphere he now finds between filmmaking and live tv, SAG would reconsider merger.

At the moment, according to Dales and Ames, the "simple solution" to the high-keyed squabble between SAG and AFTRA is to jointly negotiate a tape contract with employer groups in video. As for AFTRA's counterproposal that joint negotiation should also include joint administration of a tape code, Dales said: "That means only one thing—merger."

Ames said SAG "wants very much" to establish a joint negotiating committee. He explained that SAG has a "standing committee" to explore joint negotiations, and he pointed out that two members of AFTRA's national board, Art Gilmore and Vern Smith, are on the committee. He said, however, that he cannot get any response from AFTRA officials since AFTRA will not accept the limitations SAG wishes to impose.

AFTRA has maintained that merger of the unions would prevent employer groups from playing one of the warring groups against the other, thereby gaining for

Beechnut Changes Mind On 2d Dick Clark Show

Beechnut Gum has cooled off on the idea of taking a second Dick Clark show. At the last minute the bankroller backed out of paneller "Take a Good Look," which was to have been fronted by Clark and presented on ABC-TV.

Young & Rubicam, agency for Beechnut, is once again searching for a second show for the Peppermint division.

National Council Of SAG Holds Key To AFTRA Merger

A resolution calling for a national referendum of Screen Actors Guild on the question of merger with American Federation of Television & Radio Artists could be blocked by the SAG national council, top SAG officials explained.

Resolution, passed in a special membership meeting in N. Y. last week, must first go to the national board in Hollywood. Although the resolution accepted by between 200 and 300 SAG rank-and-file members, many of them part of the dissident Caucus of Performers in Television Commercials, says that if the board does not accept the concept of merger the issue must automatically go to the membership-at-large, SAG executives said that the union's constitution permit a prevention of the national vote.

William Berger, a lawyer for SAG, said that before a merger should be voted on, the membership of SAG must be informed of the details of a proposed merger. It was admitted that a majority of the national membership could override a council veto and vote a merger with AFTRA, but that a second referendum would be required once both sides worked out the mechanics of merger.

Three resolutions were passed in N. Y.: To vote on the AFTRA merger, to get SAG's N. Y. branch "proportional representation" to the national board of directors and to hold quarterly meetings of the N. Y. local.

The Caucus, formed last year to contest SAG negotiators on several points in the proposed codified code for tv film commercials, said that it is going to run its own slate in November local elections. It will be the Caucus' first.

ABC-TV Gets NABET Out of Its Hair On Hairstylists' Pay Pact

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

NABET's Hollywood makeup and hairstylists union has approved ABC-TV's latest wage proposal on a three-year pact retroactive to Feb. 1, 1958. New proposal averted a strike by the group last week. Although agreement has been reached on new scales, unionists and network are still apart in the areas of seniority and scheduling, according to NABET regional director Syd Rose.

Under the new agreement, entire unit receives a blanket 7% wage boost Feb. 1, 1959 for two years. In addition, makeup group wins a pay raise from $120 to $145 a week retroactive to Feb. 1, 1958, while hairstylists have been upped to $136.40 a week, also retroactive to last Feb. 1 and subject to the 7% boost come next Feb. 1. Makeup supervisors have been boosted $46 a week from $132 to $178.

NABET, NBC In New Tape Hassle

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

NBC and NABET have become embroiled in a jurisdictional dispute over installation of modifications on the web's Ampex videotape equipment, with NABET claiming that under its pact with the network, all such installation is required to be performed by its union technicians. Dispute arose when web notified the union that service would be provided free of charge by Ampex Corp. engineers, which met with stiff resistance from labor toppers, who are currently discussing the issue with network heads in New York.

Union toppers attending the Gotham sessions are NABET prexy George W. Smith, exec veepee G. Tyler Bryne, and local union prexy Henry Ball.

Immediate cause of the mushrooming situation is the matter of installation and assembly of a new modification recently accomplished by Ampex engineers, a coupling measuring only an inch in diameter plus two small rods to be screwed into the unit. Although installation would require only two or three hours, NABET, looking to major future modifications, claims the right of all such installation under its new web pact. NBC, apparently, feels that since the videotape units and all modifications are being engineered by Ampex, the electronic outfit should also be permitted to install.

GARRY MOORE SHOW
With Gordon MacRae, Janis Paige, Red Skelton, Durward Kirby; Howard Smith orch; others Producer: Ralph Levy
Directors: Frank Bunetta, Lewis Freedman
Writers: Vincent Bogert, Will Glickman, Herb Finn, John Tackaberry (special material by Arnold Horwitt, Irvin Graham)
60 Mins., Tues., 10 p.m.
REVLON, KELLOGG
CBS-TV, from N.Y.
(LaRoche, Leo Burnett)

There's nothing wrong with having a new hour variety show on television—providing the material is there. For that matter, it's long been the contention of CBS that, "if you give it to them good" there's a place for any type format, be it variety, situation comedy, drama or panel show. Unfortunately, the new Garry Moore 60-minute nighttime entry fell far short of the mark on its initial outing last Tuesday.

Let it be said at once that Moore has come a long way since he went solo and broke away from Jimmy Durante back in the days when radio was still a bigtime thing. His years in daytime tv gave ample evidence of his talents. He's a good, natural consistent performer, easy to take to, always affable in his manner. But few of these plusses were in evidence on the premiere of the new "Garry Moore Show," which seemed to flounder as it tried to be all things to all people but wound up as a contrived hour of entertainment.

Despite some formidable name credits, with head writer Vincent Bogert having an assist from such pros as Will Glickman, John Tackaberry, Herb Finn, and with Arnold Horwitt contributing some special material, there was a sad lack of good solid material. Try as they might to conceal this lack by overproduction and overstaging and gimmicking things up, the unoriginality and pretentiousness of the show stuck out like a sore thumb. Even the pretentiousness was cliche. But primarily it all goes back to the inadequate scripting, with result that Moore and his guests, Janis Paige, Gordon MacRae (the latter substituting for Johnny Mathis, who bowed out), and Red Skelton, seguing in from own show on the Coast, never really got off the ground. The only time they did (literally) was when as a finale a troupe of Eskimos was brought on to toss Moore from a walrus hide blanket. A lot of what went on previously should have been tossed right out of the studio.

In contrast to the overstaging of the production (some of the sets were even too big for the screen to take in), Moore is more at home within the confines of a simple, freewheeling format to best accent his distinctive talents. Here he was lost. So was Miss Paige, as the two engaged in a bedroom liturgy about moving to the country which wasn't particularly clever or witty. Producer Ralph Levy (who generally knows his way around in the video orbit) seemed to be trying desperately to achieve an offbeat quality with overtones of a fading type of Broadway musicomedy, as in the Horwitt-contributed "How Do You Build A Show" production number, and again in MacRae's street scene paen. Back in the early Max Liebman tv days both numbers would have been called imaginative staging.

The regular longterm sponsors are Revlon and Kellogg, but by the time everybody including Moore, Durward Kirby, Nelson Case and Barbara Britton—got through with these and an assortment of throwins such as Esquire Shoe Polish and Pittsburgh Plate Glass, not to mention the station break plugs, it looked like a compounding of the "Playhouse 90" commercial evils all over again. Rose.

Bing Nearly Bumped

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Bing Crosby's ABC-TV premiere was nearly cancelled last week by the threat of a strike against the web by its NABET hairdressers and makeup men employees. Only a last-minute offer of new contract terms by the web kept the NABET group from walking off their jobs. Probability is that had the hairdressers and makeup men struck, all other NABET personnel would have respected picket lines.

The ABC-TV proposal was accepted by a vote of the employees concerned. Final contract is now being worked out.

DANNY THOMAS SHOW

Jack Benny, as guest star, helped Danny Thomas' CBS return to a resounding kickoff which augurs well for another season of topratings for this well-integrated situation comedy.

This was a comedy tour-de-force by two seasoned experts whose supporting cast was equally professional in everything they did. The timing, the basic script, the longest delayed "takes" (by Thomas) this side of Jack Benny and Edgar Kennedy, combined into a solo comedy total. The guffaws clocked in this half-hour must be any comedian's delight. The laughs pyramided naturally and the audience reflexes seemed to work like a charm.

Opening quietly in the Gotham domestic scene, his boy scout-son announces the troop had decided, after three years of "imposing" on Danny Williams (Thomas), not to bother him again and had, instead, gotten another star for the annual shindig. When Thomas learns it's Jack Benny he calls on the latter at his Hotel St. Moritz suite; there is a great comedy scene with some slow "burns" which carries over into a subsequent "apology" when Benny magnanimously calls at his colleague's apartment to make amends. The climax is "a 24-carat gold plaque of appreciation' which, in turn, sparks Benny's cupidity and concern whether his Beverly Hills Beavers mightn't be similarly "inspired" to do him honor.

The script plays legitimately and the laughs are honest, hence robust. Even the well-integrated commercial for Post Toasties by Rusty Hamer, an expert little trouper by now, signs off on a high comedy note.

It was dominantly Thomas & Benny's show although Marjorie Lord's foiling as the patient mom and the children combine into strong assist to a basically convincing framework. Fundamentally it's sound because Thomas plays what he is—a professional comedian whose domestic patience is frequently tried by an unpredictable and betimes demanding brood. If the little girl wants to play cowboy it's a natural for Thomas to express thanks she isn't wearing spurs. If he thinks the boy scout of the family is giving him the brushoff he acts righteously indignant, not to mention the blow to his professional pride.

Incidentally, Thomas has come a long way from a standup comic given to saloon hecklers, one-liners and "jack" stories. He's a polished comedian who knows how to troupe in the best thespian tradition. He is constantly in character, handles lines with the eclat of a lammister from Equity, and withal sustains his role of the sufferingly patient father all the way.

Producer-director Sheldon Leonard's pacing is excellent, under the executive production supervision of Louis F. Edelman and the story assist braintrusted by Arthur Stander's staff. Robert DeGrasse's lensing is likewise authoritative as are all the other credits. Abel.

Spring Byington took a back seat to her guestar Edgar Bergen in the opening stanza of "December Bride" for the 1958 fall season. It was Bergen and not Miss Byington who got into the middle of floundering romance and straightened everything out by the half-hour finale via his voice-throwing.

"December Bride" has been a tv mainstay for the past several years primarily through the efforts of scatter-brained Miss Byington. Keeping her work at a minimum may seem like a good change-of-pace idea on paper but it doesn't work out too well on camera.

Perhaps it would have if story line and humor had a bit more body to it than the opener but the Bergen visit turned out to be nothing more than a routine situation enveloped in average dialog.

Guesting along with Bergen were his wife, Frances Bergen, and his dummies. Also in, but briefly, were the show's Dean Miller, Ruth Henshaw, Pete Porter and Hilda Crocker. It's Miss Byington and her permanent party that have brought the viewing crowd to the series and the writers ought to spend more time with them. Gros.

LAWMAN

(Esty; D-F-S)

As for distinguishing marks on "Lawman," the new half-hour western series, which premiered on ABC-TV Sunday (5), there are none, at least none of any importance. Yet the initialer was competent, even if the competence was partly in capturing the stylized terseness of the stock tv western.

Mainly John Russell was the high-paid professional peace officer called in to clean up a town run by bullies, Edward Byrnes, Jack Elam and Lee Van Cleef. Russell, hiring the youthful Peter Brown as his assistant, does the traditional job of humiliating the toughs before he gunned them down in a familiar empty main street climax.

It is fairly obvious that R. J. Reynolds and General Mills bought this Warner Bros. series not only because it can benefit from the preceding high ratings of "Maverick," but because it expected Warners to repeat the quality of the hourlong leadin. There is, however, more cleverness in the handling of the "Maverick" storyline.

Possibly "Lawman" is just another case of not being able to overcome the severe limitations time places on the script of a half-hour program. Art.

THE PAT BOONE CHEVY SHOWROOM
With McGuire Sisters, Bert Wheeler, Cozy Cole, Ray Bauduc, George Wettling, Don Lamond, Jo Jones
Producer-Director: Bill Hobin
Writers: Jerry Seelen, Bill Gammie, Tony Webster
30 Mins., Thurs., 9 p.m.
CHEVROLET
(Campbell-Ewald)

Pat Boone eased back into tv harness for second season of musicalities without disturbing the general format that proved successful last year. His easygoing and pleasant demeanor registers well and his handling of the intros for guestars and commercials are competent. Acceptable with rhythm numbers, Boone is in top form with a ballad and wisely relies on the romantic genre for the bulk of his solo vocalistic efforts. Both "For You" and "Ebb Tide" on preem (2) registered well.

Bert Wheeler was season's first guest and did an ok comedy dialog bit with Boone anent keeping up with new showbiz developments. He then went into a softshoe patter routine while giving instructions to the camera crew that came off in acceptable fashion.

Boone next went into "Sweet Georgia Brown" abetted by five guest drummers (Cozy Cole, Ray Bauduc, George Wettling, Don Lamond, and Jo Jones) for one of the show's highlights. Number was imaginatively staged with each drummer on a raised circular dais spotted around the stage and later lined up for a restrained solo by each pounder. Boone rejoined the group for windup chorus that made for pleasant viewing as well as listening.

McGuire Sisters were next up and after a somewhat draggy intro provided another highpoint with a specialty number, "Jefferson Davis Tyler's General Store." Group was joined by Boone for "Tip Toe Through the Tulips" that was spritely and well done. McGuires have proved their effectiveness as an attraction on the nitery circuit and should enjoy more tv guesting chores before the season is over.

Show was generally well paced throughout, although Boone's verbalistics became draggy in the second half. Staging was simple and effective and served as an unobtrusive compliment to the singer and guests. Choreography of the show's one production number was strictly routine.

Commericals plugging the '59 Chevy were forcibly restrained since the new model doesn't debut until the 16th; however, Boone handled the pitchman's chores well and delivered the spiels with simplicity and sincerity. Syd.

THE RIFLEMAN

Looks as if Jules Levy, Arthur Gardner and Four Star have a winner in "The Rifleman." It's a western, all right, but it combines an offbeat type of character with a plausible and delicately handled family relationship and crisp, well-defined action in a pattern that arrests and retains attention.

With Chuck Connors cast as a gent who can handle a rifle with more agility (and fast accuracy) than anyone can equal with a pistol, the offbeat premise is established. And with Connors doubling as a widower father to young Johnny Crawford, an unusual family is set up. Connors registers strongly in the parental aspects of his role, and young Crawford is appealing without the stereotyped good looks and is exceptionally convincing in his adoration of Connors.

As for the action, scripter Sam Peckinpah accomplishes a remarkable job of introducing his characters and locales and setting up his premises, yet filling the first script with a fastmoving story line culminating in some fine action sequences.

Story has Connors & Crawford spotting an attractive ranch as they move west, and entering the local town's turkey shoot in order to get enough prize money for a down payment. Connor's presence is a threat to the local strongman, who's had his bets placed on a touring pistol expert he's quietly brought in for the occasion. When the strongman threatens Crawford's life, Connors blows the match, but when he then backtracks on his agreement with the pistol expert and kills his uncle-manager, Connors moves in and cleans out the heavy and his entire gang in an unusual action windup.

Connors is perfect for his role, and Crawford, as aforestated, is fine as the youngster. Dennis Hopper, as the amiable pistol expert, registers strongly and Leif Erickson is a convincingly menacing heavy. Supporting cast is fine, with Sidney Blackmer as the town judge, Charles Arnt as the uncle and R. G. Armstrong as a weak sheriff.

Director Arnold Laven turns in an expert job of staging the action and directing the cast. He keeps the story moving crisply, and brings off the father-son scenes with restraint but effectiveness. There's a topflight musical background by Herschel Burke Gilbert, recorded in Europe, that ought to rate plenty of attention for the disk market. Other technical credits are fine.

ABC-TV's slotting of the show seems perfect, since it's a natural to follow the "Cheyenne-Sugarfoot" and "Wyatt Earp" Tuesday night sequence. It should prove a strong leadin for "Naked City," and the entire lineup should have the impetus now to make Tuesday an ABC night all the way. In the past, the web has been able to maintain leadership only until 9 p.m. Chan.

Screen Gems' "The Naked City" is banking heavily on its all-New Yorrk location filming as a dialer lure. Such cityscapes cannot hurt, especially in the outlands, but in interest value they must be subordinated to story cast and direction. Judged on the basis of last week's (28) first installment, Red Skelton and NBC's Bob Cummings are not exactly threatened with oblivion.

First of the series was a routine cops & robbers, complete with chase. It was pegged on a couple of underprivileged young Puerto Ricans being brought to bay in the town's Coliseum. What human interest there was revolved around a uniformed man, James Franciscus, breaking in as a plainclothesman under veteran lieutenant John McIntire. Producer Herbert B. Leonard, director Jerry Hopper and writer Stirling Silliphant are capable of better than that for a starter-offer. Succeeding episodes are bound to be an improvement. Trau.

YANCY DERRINGER
With Jock Mahoney, X. Brands, Kevin Hagen, Julie Adams, others

Director: Richard Sale
Writers: Mary Loos, Richard Sale
30 Mins., Thurs., 8:30 p.m.
JOHNSON'S WAX
CBS-TV (film)
(Needham, Louis & Brorby)

Maybe the second episode of "Yancy Derringer" can help the new series get off the ground, but the prospect isn't too promising judging from the over-contrived and hackneyed writing that went into the preemer. First chapter was downright boring and got the series nowhere except past the exposition of who is Yancy and how did he get that way.

Yancy, it turns out, is a roguish riverboat gambler straight out of 10c pulp fiction who can outsharp anyone and who is watched over at all times by Lady Luck and a stone-faced mute Indian armed with a double-barreled rifle. A former captain in the Confederate army, Yancy is a reconstructed Union man at the end of the first installment, with an aim to help settle down New Orleans to law and order just after the Civil War.

The show's singular difference, among tv's potboilers, is its milieu, but anyway you look at it it remains a western in southern clothing. Derringer doesn't carry six-guns, but he seems to have knives and midget pistols everywhere on his person. He is handy at judo, and when he plays poker he draws, but naturally, four aces.

Premiere episode found Derringer coming back to New Orleans, after a long absence, in response to a telegram from his old flame (Julie Adams). En route he is continually running into three unsavory characters who keep trying to bump him off. Lady friend tells him they are hirelings of a powerful man named Colton (Kevin Hagen), who wants to erase Derringer in order to buy up the old family plantation. But the girl turns out the heavy and Colton the honest john city administrator. In the end he enlists Yancy as his personal agent, working underground, to help him clean up the town.

Jock Mahoney is the right physical type for the role of Yancy, and the performances in general were all right considering the improbableness of the script. Dialog was too crisp and too cute, and the sign-language communication between Yancy and his Indian chum (X. Brands) was plain laughable, but wasn't meant to be. Les.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS
(Cape Canaveral Story)
With Bruce Gordon, host-narrator; Joe Maross, Jacques Aubuchon, Peter Whitney, others Producer: Sam Gallu
Director: Paul Wendkos
Writer: Paul Monash
30 Mins.; Thurs., 9 p.m.
WHITEHALL, LIGGETT & MYERS
NBC-TV (film)
(Ted Bates, Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample)

No more authentic-seeming scene of a rocket countdown is recalled than the one launching "Behind Closed Doors," the NBC series produced for Whitehall and L&M by Sam Gallu and Screen Gems. The story itself, while it showed more ingenuity in the telling than the few other weekly tv cloak-and-dagger shows there have been, did not carry even a portion of the bang that the documentary footage had.

"Doors" is to be a series of telefilmed episodes Thursdays at 9 p.m., reportedly based on the counter-espionage files of Rear Admiral Ellis M. Zacharias, former wartime Deputy Director of Naval Intelligence. For one thing, "The Cape Canaveral Story" could only have happened after the war, and, if it is to be assumed that the initialer was based on a similar story of World War II, then it can be criticized for not conveying a sense of reality.

As a meller, the half-hour was okay. Joe Moross was a little too suspicious as the true-blue American fishing boat skipper, although the actor who played the intelligence man was more credible, especially since he carried off with considerable believability his transition from a would-be villain to that of the program's level-headed hero.

The Paul Monash script gave no reason to believe in the truth of the story, but he kept throwing in enough little surprises to make it an interesting enough melodrama. Art.

BREAKTHROUGH
(Encounter)
With John Vernon, Don Francks, Lloyd Bochner, Robert Goodier, Charles Palmer, Neil LeRoy, Jack Green, Jay Shannon, Eric Christmas, John Paris, Hedley Mattingly, Larry Reynolds, Sharon Acker, Felicity Pearce, James Edwards, Norm Bornstein, Eric Heath
Supervising Producer: Esse W. Ljungh
Producer-Director: Ronald Weyman
Writer: Donald Jack
60 Mins., Sun., 9:30 p.m.
ABC-TV, via CBC, Toronto

The Good Neighbor policy would call for a great big hurrah in connection with Canada's first dramatic series beamed to the U.S. from Toronto and seen over the ABC-TV network. But candor compels the admission that the CBC's initial full-hour live "Breakthrough," while a fine try, was hardly enough to make it must viewing versus the strong competition. Nevertheless, it will be interesting to see what tv across the border can do with the next three in the 9:30 Sunday night skein.

"Encounter," first title in the four-show series, was a scientifiction space age entry centered around a court-martial charging treason against an RCAF officer for disappearing with his jet plane for five months—translated into that span of "earth time," or five minutes elapsed in "space time." Donald Jack turned in a script that was often suspenseful, but just as often confusing and verbose. And some of the camerawork was slipshod, too.

Canada's foremost contribution in this so-so flying saucer opus was fronting a large cast in which the three principals in the court-martial proceedings seemed to be devoted to the sort of diction and articulation that's a pleasure to hear. Trio consisted of John Vernon, a wing commander speaking for the defense; Don Francks, the flying officer charged with treason; and most of all, Lloyd Bochner, serving as the aggressive prosecutor. Ronald Weyman's direction was about par for the course.

"Breakthrough" is being presented for American audiences by Showcase Productions, via a tieup with the CBC. In Canada it is part of a series underwritten by General Motors' Canadian subsidiary. ABC used the breaks for spot commercials. Trau.

THE FORD SHOW
With Tennessee Ernie Ford, George Gobel, Top Twenty, others
Producer-Director: Bob Finkel
Writers: Danny Arnold, Howard Leeds
Music Director: Harry Geller
30 Mins., Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
FORD
NBC-TV, from Hollywood
(J. Walter Thompson)

Put a couple of whole wheat American country boys like George Gobel and Tennessee Ernie Ford together on a show, and the results are bound to be satisfying, even when the grist gives way to chaff. "Li'l Bitty Buddy" guested on "Big Buddy's" eye-opener for the new season last Thursday (2) and, except in song, blended in pure harmony as a kindred spirit.

The boys were not exactly nourished with the cream of gags, but they weathered the famine stoutly, especially an insipid skit about Hawaii. Some good ad libs helped partly, but mainly it was the happy coupling of two amiable soft-pedalers that held the show aloft.

Sharpest material was concentrated in Ford's warmup gambit, capped by a fine demonstration of hula hooping around the neck. Gags were up-to-date and in good taste even when they leaned to the racy side. Ford told of his fan club in Hawaii which called itself "the poi pickers," and that pretty well set up the motif of his sketch with Gobel later in the show. He and Gobel made capital of the latter's error in leaving a key prop in his dressing room.

Ford's singing group, the Top Twenty, contributed a pair of top-notch productions, one of them a parade number choreographed in geometrical patterns. Windup had Gobel and his host in a set of duets, both vocal and instrumental, Ford on trombone and Gobel on guitar.

There's just enough real hayseed in Ford to make him a bona-fide spokesman of the grassroots and just enough caricature in his Tennessee pea picker to warm the palates of Yankee urbanites with no taste for grits and pone. Looked at either way, he's a shrewd showman with real style, and his NBC roots still appear to have a good grasp.

Show goes color again on Oct. 23. Les.

With the demise of its longrunning "Studio One," Westinghouse is standing pat with its Monday night 10 to 11 CBS-TV franchise, installing the $11,000,000 "Desilu Playhouse" package. Mainstay of the series will be 41 hours of filmed dramas, with seven Lucille Ball-Desi Arnaz comedy shows inserted for the big Trendex-Nielsen push. It was, in fact, a Lucy & Desi wing-ding that kicked off the series Monday night (6), with Maurice Chevalier as guest star.

(Actually a more realistic appraisal of "Desilu Playhouse" will be forthcoming after next week's initial drama segment. For the moment, Westinghouse played it safe in preeming the costly series with one of tv's alltime tried & true formats.)

These hour comedy outings, like their half-hour (now in rerun) predecessors, are tossed off with beltline precision. It's formula stuff, keyed to a new situation each time, but brought off with such skill, polish and unerring awareness of what tickles the risibilities of the average viewer, that the results are frequently explosive. It was Monday night.

In this particular installment, "Lucy Goes to Mexico," the Ricardos and the Mertzes get involved in all sorts of hilarious complications, including a border rap of trying to smuggle in (1) a Mexican kid, who locks himself in the trunk of the Ricardo car; (2) a Frenchman (Chevalier), who inadvertently gets locked in same. Thanks to a situation where Desi and Chevalier are putting on a USO show on a flattop anchored off the coast at San Diego (which is as good and rewarding a way as any to work Chevalier into the format), the Navy comes to the rescue. But not before Lucy gets herself involved in a Tijuana bullring before a jampacked audience with the inevitable zany payoff. It was, of course, all tailored to the Lucy & Desi brand of comedics and it "played" off to good returns, with Chevalier a particular asset.

The 41 regular hour segments will comprise a variety of formats, including drama, melodrama, comedy and even some westerns. If they approximate the professionalism and skill of these Lucy & Desi installments, Westinghouse can credit itself with a good buy. Rose.

DICK POWELL'S ZANE GREY THEATRE
With Barbara Stanwyck, David Janssen, Richard Shannon, Guy Wilkerson, Paul Genge, Bill Quinn, Ian MacDonald, Stephen Chase, Martin Carralaga, Allan Pinson, Irene Calvillo
Producer: Hal Hudson
Director: William D. Faralla
Writer: Aaron Spelling
30 Mins., Thurs., 9 p.m.
GENEEAL FOODS, JOHNSON'S WAX
CBS-TV (film)
(Benton & Bowles)

Only an unusual knock-down, dragout fight between Barbara Stanwyck and David Janssen saves this seasonal opener for "Zane Grey Theatre" from being a complete exercise in mediocrity. It has nothing else of distinction, with Aaron Spelling's pedestrian script a mere rehash of a couple of thousand western-whodunit yarns. Even the heavy is telegraphed way ahead of time.

Miss Stanwyck's husband is killed, apparently by angered ranchers to whom he's refused his water, and one of the ranchers disappeared. Miss Stanwyck chases after the rancher down into Mexico, accompanied by Janssen, friend of the family. Chase is fruitless, and she returns, only to find the body of the suspected rancher, and she realizes that Janssen is the murderer. Comes the fight, she shoots Janssen, and that's it.

Director William B. Faralla's staging of the fist, mud and rifle fight was standout, but that's about the only good thing about this show. Miss Stanwyck lent a little fire to her role and was excellent in the fight sequence. Janssen was not very believable as the heavy. Supporting stints, by Richard Shannon, Guy Wilkerson, Paul Genge and Stephen Chase, were brief but adequate.

Not a very promising way to start a season. Chan.

DINAH SHORE CHEVY SHOW
With Gwen Verdon, Art Carney, Burl Ives, Louis Jourdan

Writers: Robert Wells, Johnny Bradford, Ray Brenner, Leo Townsend
Music Director: Harry Zimmerman
60 Mins.; Sunday, 9 p.m.

Dinah Shore got off to a smooth, fast start on her hourlong Sunday night series for Chevrolet. Always an ingratiating performer on her own, Miss Shore was aided and abetted on the preem (5) by a strong guest lineup with turned the stanza into a consistently slick and frequently sparkling entertainment package.

From the opening revivalist number which Miss Shore delivered, to the closing burlesque on the cool bohemian set, the show maintained a breezy pace. Productionwise, it was cleverly dressed up with some of the sets and costuming obviously aimed for maximum impact on the color receivers. That was particularly so in the Miss Shore-Gwen Verdon color-response number, which, however, also registered strongly on the monochrome sets as well.

Instead of the usual one or two shots and then off, the guests on the kickoff earned their fees with substantial assignments. Art Carney, for instance, did one nifty bit with his Ed Norton characterization while watching Miss Shore perform on tv. He also teamed up with Louis Jourdan for a rousing minstrel-styled vocal and then both came back with the rest of the company for the final comedy sketch.

Miss Verdon was tops in her numbers, with her "Occasional Man" song-and-dance sequence a major highlight of the show. Jourdan pleased with his vocal of "Gigi," in an excellent production framework. Burl Ives also contributed a brace of folk songs, including one duet with Miss Shore. The weakest element on the show was some corny banter about Ives' heft. On her own, Miss Shore wrapped up a couple of ballads, "When Day Is Done" and "Something Wonderful," in highly listenable style.

Plugs for the 1959 Chevrolet, due to be unveiled next week, had a smart peg involving subliminal looksees at the cars. It was a bright touch that also sold. Herm.

BOWLING STARS
With "Whispering" Joe Wilson, Al Faragalli, Tony Lindemann
Producer: Matt Niesen
30 Mins.; Sun., 4:30 p.m.
AMERICAN MACHINE & FOUNDRY CO.
ABC-TV (film)
(Cunningham & Walsh)

ABC-TV's "Bowling Stars" returned to the air Sunday afternoon (5) after a summer layoff with basically the same format that has kept kegler interest over the previous years. For bowling enthusiasts the filmed series has all the necessary ingredients providing the country's top bowlers, suspense, and added cash prizes to the winner of the three-game matches.

After a shaky start in which commentator "Whispering" Joe Wilson describes everything as the "greatest" (the sport, the participants and the alleys) he swings into high gear with a running elucidation with his sotto voice technique growing to a full voice as the ball heads down the alley for the pins. Wilson goes overboard in presenting the cash awards but otherwise does a good job.

The series to be presented is one of 26 man-to-man matches each of three games, with the winner picking up $1,000 and the loser $1 per pin. The half-hour of tv time only allows for half of the matches with the action being picked up in the middle of the second game. For the record, Al "Lindy" Faragalli easily outpaced his opponent Tony Lindemann by 68 pins and thereby wins the right to appear again next week.

Bowling has become a major fall and winter sport and should attract enough followers to tune in to watch the champions. Slotted late Sunday afternoon, sport fans can take their choice of watching the keglers or the pro football games. Sunday's episode got a break in that the World series tilt ended five minutes before the matches got underway.

American Machine & Foundry, makers of bowling equipment, has a natural on its hands and has no trouble integrating the blurbs. Bern.

BING CROSBY SHOW
With Dean Martin, Patti Page, Mahalia Jackson, Hanson & Tadlock, others
Producers: Bill Colleran, Sammy Cahn
Director: Colleran
Writer: Bill Morrow
60 Mins., Wed. (1), 9:30 p.m.
OLDSMOBILE
ABC-TV, from H'wood
(D. P. Brother)

A couple more like this one and ABC-TV will get a reputation for having put television back in show business. Without equivocation, the Bing Crosby special last Wed. night (1) was a delightful viewing experience from beginning to end; a strictly professional enterprise from which Oldsmobile extracted maximum mileage in a tasteful serving of some of the best song salesmen extant. If the product itself, the '59 Olds, can deliver half the qualitative freewheeling performance that Crosby & Co. achieved last week, then GM's got itself a happy division.

Here was the plot: Crosby, Dean Martin, Patti Page (herself a vet Olds saleslady) and the wonderful Mahalia Jackson in a virtual hour songfest, either in solo, duet, trio or whatever which way. That's all. For background no elaborate, overstuffed production but merely a simple crazy-quilt pattern of lights that made for an ingenious bit of electronic whoop-de-do and a stunning effect in keeping with the imaginative qualities of the show as a whole.

The pleasures were varied and frequent, including one of Crosby's top tv performances to date. In fact the Bingo and Dean Martin were having themselves a merry romp throughout, and even if Bill Morrow's scripting wasn't always at peak form, the ease and naturalness with which the banter was tossed off more than compensated for this deficiency.

The opening "What A Swell Party" set the mood and the tempo and from then on it was pretty much of a breeze for everyone concerned. There was Crosby's "Swanee," a beautiful Mahalia Jackson rendition of "Summertime;" some Bing & Dean nipups, both verbal and vocal spanning a wide and tuneful range; some Patti Page soloing and one of those inevitable Patti, Bing & Dean three-way clambakes in both a serious and satiric vein, reaching a peak of comicality in some ribbing of "We Get Letters" and kidding around with "Life Is Just A Bowl of Cherries" and a rock 'n' roll joust. Then a lively Mahalia Jackson spiritual and a kidding-on-the-square "Wait For The Reviews" finale.

Even the fast-talking "Music Man"-tempoed Olds commercial had a clever offbeat ring. Rose.

THE REAL McCOYS

SYLVANIA ELECTRIC PRODUCTS
ABC-TV (film)
(J. Walter Thompson)

"The Real McCoys," that cornfilled, hillbilly situation comedy program is off and running again in its second season.

One of the saving graces of "McCoy" is that it is different. That in itself may account for the success of the program. The initialer carries over from last season the Ozark lines and the "hill" lingo and about all that is lacking is Grandpa petting the hound and mixing up a batch of brew.

Walter Brennan may be the best thing that could have happened to this series for without him the fare would be dull at best. The vet actor is the whole show, receiving little support from the rest of the cast. Brennan milks every line for what it is worth and in some cases even more for the writing of Jack Elinson and Chuck Stewart adds little.

Opener deals with the clan attempts to swap in its vintage jalopy for a newer model. The thin writing and direction is based on Grandpa's sentiment for the heap. Even the canned laughter didn't help in some instances for the material was weak. But there's always Brennan, and that's the "real" thing about "McCoys."

While the program is on the real folksy side, Sylvania's sales messages aren't. Bankroller needs some zip in the plugs to get across the message. Bern.

JACKIE GLEASON SHOW

CBS can be sued for breach of promise. In weeklong teaser ads in the dailies it promised a "brand new" Jackie Gleason show, but the comic who showed up last Friday night in the kickoff of his "new" live half-hour series on the network took up precisely where he had left off a few season back—even before his "Honeymooners" film series. In short, this was an abbreviated version of the old Jacke Gleason hour-long format that long since had played itself out as a Saturday night entry—even down to such auxiliary details as the beautiful dolls dividing up a sentence among them in breathlessly heralding the second coming of Gleason.

There was Reggie Van Gleason 3d of old, with all the familiar comedic tricks and mannerisms—only this time in a new setting as he's put through the third degree in being investigated by a D.C. committee for business mismanagement. Perhaps under the more inviting circumstances of bristling lines, or had a clever and witty situation prevailed, one could have said "It's nice having Reggie back." But Friday's initial reincarnation was under less rewarding conditions in which the comedian was obliged to put up with a nondescript script. Again in his role of Fenwick, the back-of-the-store schmo who's put through some frantic paces by his boss) it had been done with considerable more finesse and comedy results in the past.

In place of Art Carney, Gleason now has the services of Buddy Hackett, who in his own right is a funny man. But even as second banana, Hackett rated a better shake from the scripting department. There was little enough for him to do.

Gleason, like many another comic who has been through the tv wars, is a man of considerable and genuine talents. It's just unfortunate that there aren't that many new ideas or fresh formats to go around.

This time up Gleason is plugging Stripe toothpaste (for Lever Bros.) and Geritol (for Pharmaceuticals). And who should show up for the Stripe sell but that indestructible they-said-it-couldn't-happen Jack Lescoulie. He certainly gets around. Rose.

Smart bet to hold Monday at 9:30 for CBS-TV is the new Ann Sothern situation comedy. She is an actress of charm, and blessed with a superlative sense of timing and a uniformly excellent bunch of loons in support, Miss Sothern's new stanza was a first night click.

Writers Robert Weiskopf and Robert Schiller weren't as interested in plot as they were in giving the actors a chance to mug or make with a punch line. Yet while the story, what there was of one, was a mite on the saccharine side, the actors were provided characterizations that were nicely drawn, with the result that their zaniness was palatable.

Miss Sothern, as Katy O'Conner, assistant manager of a posh metropolitan hotel, was busy in the initialer trying to find a place in the crowded hotel for two sets of newlyleds. She was alternately helped and hindered by Ernest Truex, as a slightly addled but credible hotel manager, and by Ann Tyrrell, who was as funny a roommate as ever a bachelor heroine on television ever had. Jack Mullaney, as an amateur psychologist bellhop, Jacques Scott as a desk clerk, Ralph Dumke as a drunk, Reta Shaw as Truex's battle-ax wife and Connie Stevens, Jimmy Hayes, Harry Chesire and Elvia Allman as various newylds were tops.

An all-round good performance. Art.

ADVENTURES OF OZZIE AND HARRIET
With Ozzie, Harriet, David and Rick Nelson; Janet Lake, Skip Young, James Stacy, Bob Bergdahl, Chris Olsen, Stuart Wilson, Rosemary Ace
Writer - Producer - Director: Ozzie Nelson
Associate Producer: Leo Pepin
30 Mins., Wed., 8:30 p.m.
EASTMAN KODAK, QUAKER OATS, (Alt.)
ABC-TV, (film)
(J. Walter Thompson)

The Nelson family—Ozzie, Harriet, David and Ricky—have been been combining their talents in family comedy for many years on radio and tv. They've brought much amusement and a sense of personal identification to parents as well as growing tots 'n' teens. With a laugh-generating format that's paid off generously in the past, there's no point in changing it now.

Thus, for the start of the show's seventh tv season Wed. (1) via the ABC net Chez Nelson again was faced with a problem of paramount proportions. More accurately, the difficulty was that of son David who found himself in some embarrassing situations because of his shyness in asking fellow student Janet Lake for a date. Curiously, brother Rick has no trouble with his dates but when David tries to line up a slick chick it seems that everything goes wrong.

Head writer Ozzie Nelson, who also produces and directs the half-hour filmed series, tossed in such mirth provokers as having young David walking into a post while dancing with Miss Lake, stepping on her foot and losing her coat check. Aiding and abetting the season's initialer aside from those already mentioned were Ozzie and Harriet as the easy-going parents and several college students headed by Skip Young.

Rick Nelson, a top disk star in his own right, is spotlighted in one vocal, "'Till I Fell in Love with You." With wavy black hair, pencilled eyebrows and sideburns plus the inevitable guitar, he appears to be going out of his way to resemble Elvis Presley. That's one way to snare pony tailers' attention for sure.

While "The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet" undeniably is pleasant entertainment, producer Nelson would do well to make less use of the laugh track. Sharing the tab this season on an alternate basis are Eastman Kodak and Quaker Oats. Latter is a returnee to the O&H stable, having been a member of the fold several years ago.

LEAVE IT TO BEAVER
With Barbara Billingsley, Hugh Beaumont, Jerry Mathers, Tony Dow, Rusty Stevens, Doris Packer
Producers: Joe Connelly, Bob Mosher
Director: Norman Tokar
Writers: Connelly, Mosher, Dick Conway, Roland MacLane
30 Mins.; Thurs., 7:30 p.m.
MILES LABS, RALSTON PURINA
ABC-TV (film)
(Goeffrey Wade, Gardner)

"Leave It to Beaver" relies more on the soft chuckle than the yock for its laughs, but occasionally producers-writers Joe Connelly and Bob Mosher overdo it and the result is a relatively flat show. Relatively is the key word, since they've developed "Beaver" into the kind of property that can never go far off base; it's just that some shows don't generate the mileage that the series as a whole does.

Such is the case with the season's opener, which though posing a typical childhood situation, falls somewhat short of the standard of humor that's been set for "Beaver." This time out, Hugh Beaumont overdoes the homework bit for Jerry Mathers, the Beaver, and comes up with a prizewinning poem which Beaver must then recite in assembly. Naturally Beaumont and Barbara Billingsley don't want him taking credit for something he didn't do, and it's this problem that keys the situation.

Though director Norman Tokar got in some good scenes, particularly the segment where Beaumont is trying to compose the poem with an overactive Beaver at his side, show as a whole tended to be one of the more disappointing "Beaver" segments, particularly as this was the seasonal opener in the show's switch to ABC.

Jerry Mathers is a fine Beaver, with a bland innocence that befits the part perfectly; Beaumont and Billingsley have the right measure of wryness as the parents, and Tony Dow as Wally, the older brother, mixes the perfect degree of sympathy and occasional detachedness. Rusty Stevens is good as a neighborhood youngster.

"Beaver" is consistently a sound show, but this was just one case where the writing could have been a little sharper. Chan.

RED SKELTON SHOW
With Liberace, Jack Boyle Dancers, Sandra Giles, Robert Eyer, Hector Torres, others Producer: Cecil Barker
Director: Seymour Berns
Musical Director: David Rose
Writers: Sherwood Schwartz, Jesse Goldstein, Dave O'Brien
30 Mins., Tues., 9:30 p.m.
PET MILK, JOHNSON'S WAX
CBS-TV, from Hollywood
(Gardner; Foote, Cone & Belding)

In the case of Red Skelton, familiarity breeds contentment. Layout ushering in the new season (Skelton's sixth on CBS-TV) differed neither structurally nor stylistically from those of last year. It was a pleasantly diverting show—not smasheroo, just comfortable and warm.

There must be a reason why, when other comics burn out from excessive video exposure, a funnyman like Skelton is not withered by age nor his variety staled by custom. Possibly it is because his show does not try for too much. The gags and puns are profuse and mostly corny, but the vet comic tosses them off crisply with apparent unconcern whether they get a big laugh or a small one. He can deliver a bad one-liner as well as anyone, and if it lays an egg—well, on to the next one.

Fortunately, he is also a sight comic, a clown versed in mimicry and in the art of the pratfall. First outing he got off a brilliant panto tour-de-force, screwing his face into six different characterizations of fans at the ballpark passing down hot dogs to a small boy. It was his top contribution of the evening. Warmup talkalog was very successful and was studded with several rich gags.

As was the case last year, the season starter pegged itself on the World Series theme. Freddie the Freeloader skit, which seemed to take up most of the show, had the tramp scrounging for the price of a raffle ticket, winning the prize (a ticket to the World Series), and then donating the ducat to a boy who was heartbroken at not being able to go. Liberace assisted in the sketch as Skelton's partner in pauperdom, and he carried off his part as the foil with some comedy flair.

Pianist managed to ripple off a few bars after the skit but gave in to a hasty close, during which Skelton was unintentionally funny in flubbing several plugs. He brought on, for a quickie introduction in connection with a Johnson's Wax promo, young Hector Torres, winning pitcher of the Monterey, Mexico bezbol team, champs of the Little League world series.

The camera work was erratic on several occasions; but the show bore up in spite of it. Les.

LORETTA YOUNG SHOW
With Mark Dana, others Producer: John London
Director: Richard Morris
30 Mins., Sun., 10 p.m.
PROCTOR & GAMBLE
NBC-TV (film)
(Benton & Bowles)

Loretta Young was as dress conscious as ever in her preem (5) of "The Loretta Young Show" on NBC-TV, also marking her sixth consecutive year as mainstay of the highrated Sabbath night series.

Opener had Miss Young portraying two parts in a somewhat suspenseful vehicle tagged "The Near Unknown" in which she tried to scram from gangster friends and also as a respectable girl who looked like her and could be rubbed out instead. However, the gun moll had conscience pangs before the 30 minutes were up and both love and justice finally triumped. Mark Dana played a small bit well but the brunt of the two-role performance was carried by Miss Young with skill.

Richard Morris did a swift directing job and Norbert Brodine's photography, especially of the Gotham streets and montage effects, was of a superior stripe.

In the hostess bit at the opening Miss Young came on wearing a dress with a loose panel starting at the neckline and caught just below the bosom with a satin ribbon and a rose to form sunburst gathers and an Empire look. It was a stunner, but too bad she had to shed it in order to get into the major roles of the evening.

John London, as producer of "The Loretta Young Show," also gave the preem somewhat of a religious flavor, with effective interior church scenes in the Toreto Films package. Rans.

ALFRED HITCHCOCK PRESENTS
('Strange Tale of Poison')
With Hitchcock, host; Wendell Corey, James Donald, Arnold Moss, Weaver Levy
Producer: Joan Harrison
Assoc. Producer: Norman Lloyd
Director: Hitchcock
Writers: Casey Robinson, Roald Dahl
30 Mins.; Sun., 9:30 p.m.
BRISTOL-MYERS
CBS-TV (film)
(Young & Rubicam)

In good chiller-diller style, "Hitchcock Presents" began its fourth season Sunday (5) at 9:30 p.m. with a tale of a poisonous snake on CBS-TV.

At this late date, it's hardly news that "Hitchcock" is head and shoulders above many of the murder and mayhem series popping into the living room. When "Hitchcock" commits murder, it has class. He gets some believable pyschological motives, creates suspense and leavens the proceedings with prosaic things, like getting the wrong number for a crucial phone call. And the 30-minute format is just perfect for his vehicles, scenes clicking away for the final time-bomb explosion.

There have been better episodes in the series than this fall's opener "Strange Tale of Poison." But, the preem too, had its moments.

Initialer concerned the plight of a man with a poisonous snake lying on his stomach. Story took place on the outskirts of Singapore and involved only four actors, discounting Hitchcock's tongue-in-check hosting chores. James Donald played the British plantation owner caught in the predicament while lying in his bed. Wendell Corey portrayed his partner, who begrudgingly goes to his aid after administering some mental torture. Arnold Moss was the doctor who effects the rescue; and Weaver Levy, in a bit part, as the Moss houseboy.

Suspense was created right from the start, but it simmered down about midpoint. The teleplay by Casey Robinson from a story by Roald Dahl could have illuminated the conflict between the two business partners better. The viewer was given only bare hints of the enmity between them. Direction by Hitchcock had the master's touch.

The series should still command attention. Horo.

MASQUERADE PARTY
With Bert Parks, Dane Clark, Audrey Meadows, Jan Murray, Laraine Day Producer: Herb Wolf
Director: Lloyd Gross
30 Mins.; Thurs., 10:30 p.m.
P. LORILLARD CO.
NBC-TV, from N.Y.
(Lennen & Newell)

"Masquerade Party," a summer perennial, is now being carried over NBC-TV as part of its fall and winter programming sked. Only a couple of months ago, the show, which has been moving around the networks with the same basic format for years now, was a CBS-TV entry as a fill-in for Arthur Godfrey's vacationing "Talent Scouts." This time it moves in as replacement for the axed "$64,000 Challenge."

The offering clings to the simple formula of having a panel of celebs attempt to identify guest personalities, who appear on the program in costumes, supposedly designed to provide a clue as to who they actually are. The audience is let in on the secret, but the panelists have to make identification through the familiar question-and-answer process.

On the overall, the presentation stacks up as okay entertainment. However, to realize its full potential, the show is dependent principally on the breeziness of its panelists, guests and emcee. That was demonstrated last Thursday night (2) mainly by panelist Jan Murray, who tossed off some good quips, and the disguised team of Olsen & Johnson, whose zany antics gave the show its biggest boost.

Actually, the big change in the program over the years has been emcee and panelists switches. Ably hosting the current program is Bert Parks, while the panelists on the opener, besides Murray, comprised Dane Clark, Audrey Meadows and Laraine Day.

Masqueraders, besides Olsen & Johnson, were Pier Angeli and a vet and contemporary from the baseball field, Rogers Hornsby and Richie Ashburn, who appeared as a team.

As is usually the case with programs of this nature, most of the individuals appearing on the show got in plugs for their latest projects. Jess.

WALT DISNEY PRESENTS
(The Nine Lives of Elfego Baca)
With Robert Loggia, Robert F. Simon, Lisa Montell, Nestor Paiva, Leonard Strong, Charles Maxwell, others; Disney, host
Producer: James Pratt
Writer-Director: Norman Foster
60 Mins., Fri., 8 p.m.
REYNOLDS METALS, KELLOGG, HILLS BROS.
ABC-TV (film)
(Clinton E. Frank, Buchanan, Leo Burnett, Ayer)

Following an adventure formula which proved its incontestable value, Walt Disney proposes to capture Friday at 8 for ABC-TV in much the way he captured Thursday at 8, Wednesday at 7:30 and many weekdays between 5:30 and 6. For the time being, Disney has sublimated the animated cartoon for more of the dashing Elfego Baca and other live action fables.

With Baca in tow, plus a clique of technicians and the talents of directors, writers and actors, trained in the automatic pursuance of the Disney method, the new show is likely to be very strong, not just with the kids, but also with adults. Yet the show is without the pretentions, except the most deliberately transparent ones, of the "adult western."

"The Nine Lives of Elfego Baca," the first of a multi-part series on "Walt Disney Presents," was about a man who, save for his chaps, could be Robin Hood, Zorro, Davy Crockett, et al. He is their twin in deed and spirit. First hour, consisting of many unrelated adventures, opened the range to all kinds of gallant make believe (despite all the information to the contrary in ABC press releases about this being a true story).

Played with an exacting respect for the formula by the darkly Latin Robert Loggia, who has shown himself an actor of profounder dimensions in motion picture and theatrical roles, the brave, devil-may-care Baca fought off a lynch mob of 80 men for 33 hours, beat the courtroom treachery of a lawyer, showed up a snivelling cousin, befriended a bunch of wild miners, stole a fortune in hard goods for his poor fellow Mexicans, outfought bare handedly a surly giant, outdrew everybody, became sheriff by popular acclamation, and was well on his way to not only becoming a lawyer for the impoverished, but to changing the statutes of all New Mexico. Throughout it all he smiled; and, in scripted deviation from the formula, he indicated an interest in the luscious Lisa Montell, who probably will end up Baca's squaw by the time the season is over. The lightly handled love interest and the ordinary cowboys clothes were the most apparent transgressions in adapting—ever so faintly—the moppet show for adults. (Fully aware that 8 p.m. is the time threshhold when the big folk are about to assume command of the dial, yet when the kids have not yet given up, Disney is even introducing a romantic interest into "Zorro.")

The name "Disneyland," which hung over Disney's former Wednesday night time slot, was just too airy-fairy to please adults as well as children. He is chasing down the overlap adult with the less emotionally evocative title of "Walt Disney Presents" and in offering a shade more violence than children deserve but will not reject, it will not intrude upon the modus operandi for which he holds such affection.

It appears as if the old master will walk his ambiguous path without once seriously faltering.

WAGON TRAIN
(Around The Horn)
With Ward Bond, Robert Horton, William Bendix, Ernest Borgnine, Frank McGrath, Terry Wilson, Osa Massen, Sandy Descher, Mare Lawrence
Exec Producer: Richard Lewis
Producer: Howard Christie
60 Mins., Wed., 7:30 p.m.
FORD, NATIONAL BISCUIT
NBC-TV (film)
(J. Walter Thompson, McCann Erickson)

The "Wagon Train" mob took to the sea for the opening episode of the 1958 season. It was an offbeat setting for Major Seth Adams (Ward Bond) and his boys and it didn't work out too well.

Main fault with the opener was that frontier heroics were minimized for a romantic tale with "advice to the lovelorn" overtones. Plot line had Bond and his aides shanghied on a schooner bound for a cruise around the "Horn." On the schooner they are confronted with William Bendix, a benevolent tyrant in charge of the ship; a ne'er-do-well first mate, Marc Lawrence; the captain's daughter, Sandy Descher, and latter's tutor, Osa Massen.

Miss Massen, of course, is in love with the hard-hearted captain, and it isn't until Bond, after a few stretches in the brig, straightens things out. Sour note in the whole thing, at least for seagoers, was that Miss Massen, as the-soon-to-be-bride, convinced her intended that life on the sea wasn't a fit place for a family so they all joined Bond's wagon-train west.

Now that the troupe's back on land maybe succeeding episodes will perk up because for this series it's the braves and not the briny that makes the terror's firmer.

THE EDDIE FISHER SHOW
With Jerry Lewis, Ernie Kovacs, Helen Gallagher, The Four Saints, other; Buddy Bregman orch
Producer: George Englund
Directors: Englund, Grey Lockwood
Writers: Ken Englund, Bobby O'Brien
60 Mins., alt. Tues., 8 p.m.
LIGGETT & MYERS

(McCann-Erickson)

Rarely has a television premiere been greeted with the publicity and curiosity accruing to the Eddie Fisher seasonal opener on NBC-TV Tuesday.

For the more morbid of the onlookers, the double-entendre or incident seekers, the show must have been a disappointment — Fisher played it straight down the middle.

More to the point, however, the Fisher corps had a great opportunity, considering the size of the audience, to make a solid impact and draw off some of those CBS and ABC followers on a permanent basis. Fisher and producer-director George Englund muffed it.

Englund mounted a big, flashy, noisy production, but an empty one. When it was all over, one realized there were no high spots and a number of lows. The only excitement that the show engendered was a brief moment when Dean Martin popped through a curtain in the middle of Jerry Lewis' routine and hustled right away on the arm of Bing Crosby, but so quickly that neither Lewis nor the audience had more than a glimpse of them.

But other than that, show had an aura of flatness about it. Lewis, with "special guest star" billing, did his own turn with Fisher, but the other guests, Ernie Kovacs and Helen Gallagher, were worked into the "script," and came off the worse for it. Kovacs was virtually wasted, first doing a set-dressing bit with Fisher straight-manning in song, then appearing as a beat-generation poet in a San Francisco boite, and finally as a German emcee in a Milwaukee brauhof. In no instance did he evoke the kind of mirth that's par for the Kovacs course. Miss Gallagher, also as part of the script, worked in some fine vocals and dance turns with "Old Devil Moon" and a couple of other choruses, but also could have been used to better advantage in the comedy vein.

That "script," prepared by Ken Englund and Bobby O'Brien, had an "autumn in America" motif and was the peg on which the show moved to the various nitery formats. But it was weak, so were the formats and so were the performers. Lewis, in his bit, in which he sought to sing instead of be funny, had some good moments but overall the turn was uninspired. Of the entire cast, Fisher himself came off best, showing plenty of poise and presence in his chatter and showing considerably more sharpness in his musical delineation, particularly on rhythm numbers. But it doesn't speak well for a show of this type when the guests come off poorly vis a vis the star.

On the odds & ends side, Fisher introed Milton Caniff and Dean Fredericks in a plug for Chesterfield's "Steve Canyon" series, and Fred Davis to push Oasis cigs' "Brains & Brawn." Four Saints, Air Force quartet, did an okay "Fascinatin' Rhythm."

The double-director setup, with Englund acting as producer-director and Grey Lockwood (ex-Perry Como show) as co-director, didn't work too well on the opener, with camera framing and switching often registering awkwardly. That ought to shake down quickly, though, and from here on it's a matter of the scripters working out more satisfactory formatting and working harder with the guests to make better use of them. Musically, show's fine, with Buddy Bregman's backing sharp all the way.

Shirley Temple Storybook

Preempting Steve Allen on NBC-TV, the "Shirley Temple's Storybook" show Sunday (5) presented "Hiawatha," a simple dramatization of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's lengthy poem based on an old Indian folk tale. The idea was unique, but the treatment was routine, almost old-fashioned.

The trouble, basically, was producer Alvin Cooperman's apparent indecision as to the type of audience he was trying to reach. If "Hiawatha" was aimed at the kids, which it should have been, it dragged in many spots and was too scary in others. If it was supposed to appeal to adults, the approach was hardly ingenious.

What "Hiawatha" needed was poetry in action as well as dialog. Some of the lines came through with their full beauty and feeling, but they didn't make up for the phony-looking sets and the unimaginative kind of acting. When symbolism and action become so mixed up as to be virtually interchangeable, something's wrong.

J. Carroll Naish took the part of Iagoo, the aged teller of stories. John Ericson played Hiawatha, the hunter, who falls in love with Minnehaha, a maiden from a hostile tribe. He battles the forces of violence and evil and emerges as a man of peace. His marriage to Minnehaha is almost frustrated by the scheming Pau-Puk-Keewis, who employs the services of the medicine man and magician Megissogwon, who robs Minnahaha of her soul. In the end, of course, Hiawatha triumphs and the lovers are reunited.

Ericson did a good job within the confines of the whole, rather naive concept. Indians aren't supposed to move their facial muscles, and Erickson learned that lesson well. Nyra Monsour played Minnehaha, looking mostly demure. Pernell Roberts portrayed the evil Pau-Puk-Keewis and Richard Hale was strong in the role of the magician. Katherine Warren had warmth as Nokomis, Hiawatha's godmother.

Mitchell Leisen directed the filmed show, but took comparatively little advantage of the medium. Frank Gabrielson wrote the script and Arthur Morton composed the music, which at times had an Aaron Copelandish quality. None of these men appeared to sense in the Longfellow poem something that could be given poetic and romantic visual treatment. Instead, with the lines to speak for themselves, they distilled the poem's story elements and presented them, with the appropriate bow to the older folks, as an action-type show, complete with whooping Indians, war dances, etc. If this was a fairy tale, the only real clue was pretty Shirley Temple labelling it as such in her introduction. Hift.

Playhouse 90

A couple of brilliant portrayals by Piper Laurie and Cliff Robertson gave last Thursday's "Playhouse 90" stanza on CBS-TV a tremendous impact. They starred in J. P. Miller's play, titled "The Days of Wine and Roses," which focussed on a disintegration of a young married couple who drank too much.

Miller's play presented a straightforward clinical analysis uncomplicated by an dramatic artiness. Opening at an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting, the drama unfolded the story as related by Robertson, who was taking the cure. The flashbacks sketched in the preparatory stages of the couple's dissolution in alcohol and built to a deeply moving climax in which the husband, who fights his way back to sobriety, lets go of his wife, who refuses to give up the bottle.

While Miller's script at the outset occasionally strayed into cuteness, it struck an accurate, wholly unsentimental note once it approached the center of the problem. Several individual episodes were brutally realistic in their depiction of the couple at the bottom stages of dipsomania.

The script's thesping challenge was met on all counts by Miss Laurie and Robertson, two young Hollywood players whose careers have hit a high mark with these performances. Under John Frankenheimer's direction, both avoided the conventionally maudlin drunk take offs for probing and wholly human characterizations. Miss Laurie's childlike evocations during one binge in her father's home was a tour de force. Robertson's various reflections as a man desperate for a drink was equally extraordinary in dramatic honesty and power. Charles Bickford, as Miss Laurie's father, was good but completely overshadowed by the principals.

Live from Hollywood, "The Days of Wine and Roses" was a firstrate production on every score and suggested the real potential for dramatic shows out of this CBS origination. Herm.

Colgate Theatre

Not even a performer of Claudette Colbert's undoubted talent and stature could do much with this lightweight "Colgate Theatre" tale of a congresswoman embarked on her two-year residence in Washington. The showcase was too blurred with trivia for a sponsor to find anything meaty enough to buck the seasonal traffic so it went the way of all these pilots warming the slot for George Burns.

Too much of the running time was concerned with Miss Colbert, her husband, Leif Erickson, and two youngsters trying to find a place to light. Apartment hunting can be fun but the dialog rather than the situations drummed up the gentle humor. Maudie Prickett, a prissy, mannish secretary to the congresswoman, cadged most of the laughs.

The thin story line dangled with the only motivation, the mixup on where the congresswoman and her family would finally bed and board. No sooner had one made an inspection appointment than another did the same thing. Confusing perhaps but lacking in entertainment sinew. An old biddy calling on the lawmaker to push legislation for homeless birds didn't help much.

Miss Colbert sweated and struggled through the role but didn't rock the responsibilities. She's too good a talent to waste on such trifles. Erickson, Miss Prickett, Herb Butterfield and sundry others didn't get much out of their lines. Norman Tokar produced and directed from the script by Inez Asher and Whitfield Cook. Helm.

LUX PLAYHOUSE
('The Best House in the Valley')
With Polly Bergen, Rod Taylor, Carl Benton Reid, Dana Dillaway, Selmer Jackson, Alice Backes, Charles Keane
Writer: Halsey Melone
Producer-Director: Jules Bricken
30 Mins., Fri.; 9:30 p.m.
LEVER BROS.
CBS-TV (film)
(J. Walter Thompson)

Strongly reminiscent of Al Capp's Dogpatch was "The Best House in the Valley" which for some curious reason was tapped for the season's premiere of "Lux Playhouse" Friday" (3) via CBS-TV. Off the Revue Productions beltline, the half-hour film starred Polly Bergen in a "Daisy Mae"-type role.

Halsey Melone's teleplay, from a story by Margaret McDonnell, was supposed to be a tender and touching story of a young widow and her small daughter who are dedicated to making their own way in the world. Unfortunately, the script had more of a comical atmosphere than straight dramatic values. Part of Miss Bergen was so far-fetched that it no doubt strained viewers' imaginations.

Here we have the "more-bounce-to-the-ounce" girl as a penniless widow who prefers to eke out a meagre living while residing in a ramshackle abode under a tree. Rancher Carl Benton Reid wants her to clean up her place or move to town since it gives customers a bad impression when they come to buy fruit.

Even though Miss Bergen has a chance to move into "the best house in the valley" when Reid's son, Rod Taylor, starts a-cottoning to her, she rejects it after a night between clean sheets. Returning to the old tree homestead, she finds Taylor already there. "We ain't gonna be scared now," she exclaims to her daughter with an air of finality.

Miss Bergen obviously was a victim of miscasting in her first dramatic appearance of the fall season. But so incredible was the role, even Edith Adams would have had trouble in making it believable. Taylor's lovemaking efforts approached the ludicrous while Reid was more sincere in trying to keep everything on a high plane. Dana Dillaway was a wistful daughter while routine support was provided by Selmer Jackson, Alice Backes and Charles Keane.

Producer-director Jules Bricken appeared to have had an off night on this one. Sets, too, were very stagey and lent little realism to the hokey yarn. Gilb.

THE ARTHUR MURRAY PARTY
With Kathryn Murray, host; Sam Cooke, Fernandos Lamas, Arlene Dahl, Farley Granger, Janice Rule
Exec Producer: Jack Philbin
Producer: Arthur Murray
Director: Barry Shear
Writer: J. Franklin Jones
30 Mins.; Mon., 10 p.m.

(Lennen & Newell)

The perennial "Arthur Murray Party" is back, this time in the NBC-TV Monday night on 10 slot. Second outing caught Monday (6) was touched more by amateurism than the delivery of a pro, entertaining show.

Hostess Katherine Murray doesn't make with the mostest. In her patter with guests and home viewers, she has a brittle quality, punctuated by an animated nervousness. If she'd slow down she could be engaging. A number on the show, "Professor Spencer's Dance School for Children" proved that. It had some moments of fun and Mrs. Murray helped.

Dance Master Murray on the show acknowledged his stiffness. He told the viewers that his wife advised him to smile more, a confession which didn't alter his deadpanning.

Vocalist Sam Cooke, as one of the guests, did an okay version of "Mary, Mary Lou." In the featured dance contest of celebs, Fernandos Lamas and wife Arlene Dahl, as well as Farley Granger and Janice Rule, were on hand. Lamas did a so-so tango with one of the Arthur Murray Dancers. Arlene Dahl was competent in a waltz. Coming off best and winners of token prizes were Farley Granger and Janice Rule doing the Charleston. Grandprize, after playoffs at some future date, is a trip to Europe.

Arthur Murray offered a quickie Samba lesson for home viewers, and the show's dancers took off on a number with a Samba motif. Latter group didn't come off too well and weren't helped by a cluttered foreground that dominated the cameras occasionally.

Newport Cigaret commercials by Norman Kihl, assisted by Lorraine Rogers, were so integrated in the show that they sneaked up for the viewer's attention. That approach needs a more polished, entertaining style. Otherwise, it's annoying. Horo.

ALL FOR MARY

PARTICIPATING
WCCO-TV, Minneapolis

As far as Twin Cities video is concerned, this WCCO-TV offering held significance for several reasons. Firstly, it ushered in what the station designates as a series of "local spectaculars," intended to be more ambitious shows than the Twin Cities' otv stations have been attempting and slotted in prime network (CBS) time.

Secondly, it brought to set-owners here a locally produced Equity professional performance of a London success (cut somewhat to fit in the 60 minutes running time) never seen before on tv anywhere.

In this instance, the video presentation came on the heels of the play's two-week run at the local highly regarded Old Log summer theatre where it had been enthusiastically received.

However, although it had the advantage of a topnotch performance and excellent direction, this Harold Brooke-Kay Bannerman British farce, "All for Mary," which must have been much funier in the theatre before a live audience stacked up over the air as mediocre lightweight fare.

Relating the discomfort of a young man on his honeymoon at a Swiss Alps resort when his bride's first husband happens to be on the scene and the Italian innkeeper has designs on the woman, the farce develops complications and situations which are only mildly amusing in spots.

With characters and dialog lacking in soarkle and minus the lively action essential for effective farce, "All for Mary," in fact, probably will take its place with the many thin, unsubstantial and insignificant mild London hits that in this country find summer stock audiences. At the Old Log, winding up the season, it scored so strongly it was held over a second week. It's hardly likely ever to reach the national networks, let alone Broadway.

All cast members acquitted themselves admirably and Don Stolz's direction was expert, setting as fast a pace as the script permitted and extracting all possible laugh values.

It's the WCCO-TV plan to stage one of these "local spectaculars" every month. Among those planned are a "polka band parade" and a big Christmas program with professional singers and dancers. Rees.

ARMSTRONG CIRCLE THEATRE

One of the New York City Board of Education's major problems, how to help the ill-adjusted child, was projected on the video screen with fidelity and purpose in the "Armstrong Circle Theatre's" fourth year's preem show (1) in "The Case For Room 310" a soundly documented "actual" by Art Wallace.

Script dealt with the little known but vital work of the Board of Education's Bureau of Child Guidance which has set up a clinic at Morris High School in the turbulent Bronx. Staffed with psychologists, social workers, vocational guidance officers, psychiatrists, it caters with missionary zeal to the many emotional problems of school-going adolescents.

Theme centered around three pupils—a young chronic truant whose mother wanted him to become a physician; a nasty potential delinquent and a shy student with a persecution complex—and how they were helped by staff clinic workers. "Room 310" was the school room where problem children were sent by harassed teachers.

Fine performances were given by Polly Rowles as chief supervisor of the clinic; Janet De Gore as a clinic worker; Robert Drivas, as the rebellious ruffian; Sharry Rubin as the painfully shy student and Joey Walsh as the constant truant. Good performances also were contributed by Carol Gustaphson, as the onetime Erasmus Hall High School teacher who simply couldn't understand the anguish of childhood and Bernard Hughes as the weary dean. Dr. Jacob Greenberg, deputy superintendent of schools for N.Y.C. came on at the conclusion of the program and hoped that ultimately more schools in Gotham and elsewhere would have clinics such as the one at Morris High School.

This was a thoughtful "actual" without the lurid touches seen in "The Blackboard Jungle" but sufficiently impacted to make a profound impression of the average viewer. Sy Thomaskoff's scenic designing was in keeping with school room decor and Paul Bogart's direction was swiftly paced. All told, executive producer Robert Costello for Theatre Associates put together a rewarding account of how a boiling city's educational system is seeking important answers to the reclamation of the problem child. Rans.

THE UNTOUCHABLE
With Flora Robson, Shivendra Sinha, Barry Took, Malcolm Hayes, Sheila Robins, Nicolette Bernard, Heather Chasen
Producer: Norman James
Writer: Florence Hayes Turner
50 Mins.; Sun., 9:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

With Notting Hill and Little Rock still holding the headlines, "The Untouchable" was certainly a timely offering on the part of BBC-TV. Unfortunately, although it meant well and possibly made its point, it lacked the impetus and speed to make it a powerful dramatic offering.

The play, specially written for tv by Florence Hayes Turner, put the spotlight on the color problem from an intriguing angle. Flora Robson played a landlady whose late husband had been an officer in the Indian Army. Times are hard and she's compelled to take boarders; and colored people who are victims of prejudice are prepared to pay more.

Miss Turner put the point of view of the colored man with commendable sympathy and understanding. He was shown intelligent, kind and sincere, who was at pains to make himself liked and understood. Miss Robson, on the other hand, appeared confused and unhappy and that frame of mind colored her interpretation. The play suffered mainly, however, from limp direction. It never once got into its stride. Myro.

CARROLL LEVIS SHOW
With Jerry Allen and his Trio, others
Producer: Fred Wilby
30 Mins., Tues., 7 p.m.
Associated TeleVision from Birmingham

Carroll Levis has a never ending source of program material which looks as though it will never cease to please his audiences. It's quite a while now since he began introducing his discoveries to the public via sound radio and later through tv, but the amateur talent still draws the audiences. Levis is genial, has a pleasing soft Canadian accent and is well experienced at putting his discoveries at ease.

Each of this new series of shows presents five acts, one of which, through postal votes, qualifies for the all winners program. Entry makes 30 minutes of pleasant entertainment which is adequately mounted and produced. Jerry Allen Trio, featuring an electric organ, works hard and plays a big part in helping some of the acts over rough spots.

Bill of the latest program was quite well balanced, and included a male song duo who sang their own compositions; a pleasant songstress who gave out with "On The Street Where You Live"; a man who played piano, both classical and swing and danced and sang adequately; a girl who purported to imitate musical instruments; and a five-piece rock 'n' roll outfit, with the leader doing an Elvis Presley. Bary.

Producer: Maurice Unger
Director: Eddie Davis
Writer: Brett Hill
30 Mins., Thurs., 9:30 p.m.

This one should be slugged a "Civern" (cross between Civil War and Western) since it deals with a trio of righteous characters during the Reconstruction period who shoot down hootin' and hollerin' badmen in the Dakota badlands and other ambush country.

"Roughriders" is hardly different from other video cowboy packages which sustain their action by loading the screen with an abundance of horses' hoofs, horses' neighs and considerable dust. The preem (2) of this Ziv package concerned a trio of "Rough Riders," played by Kent Taylor, Jan Merlin and Peter Whitney, who shoot it out with the horrid Wes Sutton outlaws who had the gall to kidnap Missy, the farmer's daughter.

Scripting was of the pedestrian cut, full of cliches such as "I reckon we do," "they got my daughter," "drop your pistol, mister," "you stay here and guard the camp," "this alligator country, sarge?" "come out or we'll burn the place down" and "Sutton, throw your gun in the water and come out with your hands up."

Best performance, however, was given by the Rocky Mountains. Rans.

VARIETY-PULSE FEATURE CHART

VARIETY's weekly chart, based on ratings furnished by Pulse's latest reports on feature films and their competition covers 155 markets. Each week, two different markets will be listed, with the 10 top-rated features tabulated.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained. Under Time Slot, S. O. stands for Sign-Off.

A Good Strong Body Is Important...
BUT IT'S BRAINS THAT REALLY COUNT

Sure, we have the best in production facilities... the sets, sound stages and technical equipment.

But... that's only the brawn. It's the brains, the creativity, the television know-how that really counts.

And we have a newly-formed, completely separate unit of experienced commercial production specialists at your service.

These men are attuned to the problems of advertiser and agency alike and devote their time totally to the development and production of commercial and industrial films.

They are ready and willing to give individual attention to your project, to work efficiently, realistically, and to the best advantage within your budget. Why not give them a try?

McGiffert's Move-In on 'Camera 3' To Open Up Still Wider Vistas

"Camera Three," WCBS-TV's experimental sustainer Sunday mornings, is about to add another dimension to its already uncommon programming standards. It is scheduled to get under way shortly after John McGiffert moves in Sunday (12) as the new producer, taking over from Bob Herridge, who did the previous nine shows on a guest-producer basis.

McGiffert has invited the nation's major legit performers to fulfill one of their constantly recurring dreams, namely to play parts they've always been hankering to play, but for one reason or another never had an opportunity to do in the commercial theatre.

In pointing out the reason for appearing on "Camera Three," McGiffert informed those on his list that the WCBS-TV Sunday 11:30 a.m. feature is free from the pressures and restriction of tv in general and recalled that it has been able to present the works of Perelman as well as Shakespeare, the art of Krazy Kat as well as Goya.

He also told them that in view of the fact that the program is slightly under 30 minutes in length, there is no opportunity to do a full production of a full-length play. "My thought is to assemble a supporting cast for several key scenes and supplement the performance with a brief statement as to why the part appeals to you and why you have never appeared in it," McGiffert wrote. "Naturally, we would follow your suggestions closely to selecting and adapting. Second, the vehicle of your choice does not have to be an existing play—although I suppose that is most likely. If you were strongly drawn to a character from a novel or short story that has never been dramatized, we would do an experimental dramatization. Your choice might even be readings from a poet."

He cited several examples: Mildred Dunnock played the lead in a "Camera Three" experimental version of William Faulkner's "As I Lay Dying" and Luther Adler played Stanislavski in one of the program's "too rare explorations of acting."

McGiffert also was quick to explain to those he hopes will accept his invitation that he has a budget best described as "modest."

Letters went to Alfred Lunt, Shirley Booth, Miriam Hopkins, Eva LeGallienne, Judith Anderson, Judy Holliday, Julie Harris, Phil Silvers, Ralph Bellamy, Dana Andrews, Tallulah Bankhead, Peter Ustinov, Tony Perkins, David Wayne, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Tom Ewell, Bert Lahr and Marilyn Monroe.

Along the same line, McGiffert is readying communiques to artists and critics and to major names in politicos, science, business, medicine.

Currently, "Camera Three' is taped on Saturdays but if McGiffert has his way, he'd prefer to go back to live performances. Also, certain union complications arise for taped shows which prevents the "Camera Three" producer from using anything but live music. There are many commercial records that are ideal for background but, unfortunately, cannot be used on a tape show, McGiffert explained.

Later in the season he plans two shows on Keats' poems and letters followed by a Robert Frost program and one on Wordsworth and Hardy. He's also mulling over the possibility of a Mother's Day program on "Whistler's Father." McGiffert recently discovered a scholar who had a good deal of documentation to justify an absorbing show on the American-born artist who was kicked out of West Point because he flunked chemistry. It was Whistler who cracked: "Had silicon been a gas, I would have been a major-general."

McGiffert is no stranger to "Camera Three." During 1956-57 he wrote for the program and subsequently became an associate producer on CBS-TV's not-so-lively "Seven Lively Arts." Before joining CBS-TV he taught English and was a producer for the Educational TV and Radio Center in Ann Arbor.

BBC's Anne Frank Show

London, Oct. 7.

A report on the capture and subsequent death of Anne Frank, compiled from interviews and correspondence with 46 survivors of Belsen concentration camp and from unpublished writings by Miss Frank herself, will be aired in the BBC's Third Program next Tuesday (14).

NBC CHI OUTLETS ON A SCIENCE KICK

Chicago, Oct. 7.

WMAQ and WNBQ, the NBC stations here, are embarking on a science binge, adapting nearly all pubaffairs programming on both stations to the theme of science education over a six-week period. Project kicked off last Sunday (5) with Chi Board of Education and several colleges and universities in the Windy City area cooperating.

Even religioso programs, such as the Sunday morning tv-er, "The Pulpit," will get in the act, devoting an installment or two to the subject of science and religion. In addition to the public affairs entries, two of WMAQ's personalities, Gus Chan and Phil Bowman, will contribute to the science splurge occasionally in their daily shows.

Two video specials produced by Illinois Institute of Technology—one of them launching the entire project this Sunday—are also in the blueprint.

Pitt's 26-Year-Old Live Entry Bows To TV Feature Invasion

Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.

Wilkens Jewelry Co., which had sponsored "Amateur Hour" here for 26 years, first on radio and then tv, until last season, has decided not to resume the simon-pure program for the present. Instead it has bought the sponsorship of WTAE's Sunday night (9 to 10:55) "Million Dollar Movie," which is made up of M-G features, most of which the new ABC outlet recently acquired for $1,250,000.

Wilkens had the original live show on local television when old WDTV, now KDKA-TV, first opened its studios here in 1950. In addition to "Amateur Hour," firm had also bankrolled a high-rated hillbilly strip for several years. However, they couldn't get together on time with KDKA-TV in fall of '57 after that station, which until then had the local market to itself, got competition from WIIC. In the meantime, third VHF channel, WTAE, opened up. Wilkens has been out of the tv picture for the last year.

The deal with WTAE is a long-termer and begins this Sunday (12).

Chi Fire

NBC, where the greatest share of damage was done in a period of only four weeks, the inference is that ABC and CBS are guilty too of policies which "discriminate against Chicago talent, slight community service obligations, deny local advertisers the right to sponsor local talent, and possibly violate the implicit commitments of their license of convenience and necessity." The complaint avers that the networks have been following a pattern in killing off Chicago shows and that it has continued to grow ever since the networks discovered that they could get by with such actions.

In effect, the petition challenges the right of the o&o stations to an FCC license when they do not serve the city's cultural development. The talent union is charging the webs with "turning the nation's second largest market into a cultural-advertising desert" in milking it for money.

Sen. Douglas' message to Gen. Sarnoff phrased it another way, to wit, "The great midwest, with its 50,000,000 people, should not be made into a tame listening post to New York and Hollywood."

Douglas, in his wire, alluded to a correspondence he had had with Sarnoff around 21 months ago, when he was assured by the RCA board chairman, after registering a similar complaint, that there would be no severe reduction of live programming in Chicago.

All the noise has not exactly thrown the local network shopkeepers into a tizzy, because none is quite sure the talent union will get very far with its campaign, but all are watching the situation very closely, and it's anticipated that there will be a temporary moratorium on cancellings at least until the heat is off. Not that there are that many live shows left on Chi channels.

Top officials at the ABC and CBS plants here feel that at least their own networks are wronged in the AFTRA petitions. Said one of them, "We feel we have done nothing that we have to apologize for." Meanwhile, at what was once the NBC central division and is now headquarters for WNBQ-WMAQ, the office of new veep-in-charge Lloyd Yoder merely yodeled no comment while AFTRA burned.

Ray Jones, exec secretary of the Chicago chapter of the union, wanted it made clear that that his complaint is not attacking network programs or the use of film, merely the practice of knocking off live programs to "ride the network." Jones said he wanted the FCC to review the programming policies of the o&o outlets to determine whether or not they are really operating as local stations and if they are really serving the public interest.

Decimation of live shows in Chicago, he said, affects more than the performers. Technicians, directors, writers and office help suffer as well. He pointed out that a recently axed show at WNBQ claimed only two performers but cost 17 technicians their jobs. From the time NBC went to color, slightly over two years ago, Jones said, the local shop cut down from 135 engineers to less than 70 today.

"NBC in 1958 made a profit of $4,000,000 from its Chicago operation," he said. "That seems like enough of a profit to drain from this city."

Stations In South

fear of losing its license if it goes overboard on the Negro questions.

New York station representatives report that spot tv business is booming in the south and are all for the straight newshandling policy inaugurated by the majority of stations. A boycott of the station or the wares hawked could mean nothing but trouble and a loss of revenue. If the proponents of segregation succeed it will be for the most part without the benefit of the southland's radio-tv stations.

Fort Worth—There were 675,000 tv sets in the Fort Worth-Dallas area as of Oct. 1, according to WBAP-TV Director Harold Hough. Station observed its 10th anni on Sept. 29 at the pioneer tv outlet in the Southwest.

Calame 'Evaluates' IBEW Evaluator

Charles Calame, business head of N.Y. local 1212 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, scored the chairman of a recent union committee which had blasted Calame and other members of his administration for their handling of negotiations with and ultimate strike against CBS.

Angry Calame in an open letter to 1212's members said that Paul Hale, head of the evaluation committee, was one of "the oft-defeated candidates for local union office." Calame's letter then said it was going to "evaluate" the head evaluator, Hale.

Calame pulled the stops, and referring to Hale as the "commissioner," he said that the commissioner's uncle was onetime business manager for local 306, IATSE, a rival union. He said Hale, a technical director at CBS, was "appointed by the employer, a charge Hale refuted when first it was made by pointing out that he had been hired the same way every other one of IBEW's t.d.'s at CBS were hired.

Calame pointed out that it was Hale's motion which established the evaluation committee, that ultimately laid it into him. Calame recalled that Hale stated he wanted certain men appointed to the committee who had seniority and hence would not be "beholden to the union" during an interval investigation. Calame followed this by saying Hale "said nothing about them not being beholden to the employer."

Nowhere in his letter did Calame use Hale's name, but since Hale was the only chairman of "a recently dissolved evaluation committee," it was clear to the rank-and-file whom the biz manager meant.

Foreign Repeats

NBC will bargain with the big names via individual contract talks as to what amount should be paid for these extra plays. It is not anticipated scale players will waive the reciprocal fees.

If NBC sells a kinescope or tape of one of its programs anywhere in the British Isles or Cyprus, counted as the major overseas region for tv product, it is obligated to pay 20% of original tv fees. Other regions are Free Europe, Africa and Madigascar, the Far East and Central and South America. From Britain at 20%, the fees drop to 5% for African tv. NBC only has to pay the fees once for each stanza sold abroad, and then the network gets repeats gratis.

ABC's One-At-A-Time Coast Junketing Of Press Invites Handsome Payoffs

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

No small cause of concern to the rival webs—and one of the key aspects of the NBC regional meetings being held by exec v.p. Ken Bilby and exploitation chief Al Rylander—is a q.t. but highly effective publicity campaign being waged here by ABC-TV that extends well beyond the daytime razzle-dazzle and heavily involves Trendex-city promotion on the web's nighttime lineup.

ABC-TV has been quietly bringing in key columnists and tv personalities from the Trendex cities, on an individual basis, and over a four or five-day expenses-paid period, showing them the Hollywood sights, bringing them onto the lots and treating them to extensive VIP sessions with producers and talent in the ABC-TV lineup.

Eash visit is worth a fistful of columns—in a four-day stay, the average has come to three columns per visitor, and with more than one columnist coming in from each city, the space accruing to ABC and its fall program entries is piling up where it counts. So effective has the ABC campaign proven, that NBC and CBS, despite their own junkets, are beginning to look a little more closely at the ABC pattern.

Idea, conceived by ABC veep Mike Foster in N.Y. and implemented by Coast publicity chief Earnie Stern and his staff here, is to tap key columnists and bring them in on an individual basis (if they take their wives, they just pay the extra fare and hotel bills) for a few days. Guests get poolside rooms at the Hollywood Roosevelt, then go on a tour of the lots, with extensive visits to Warner Bros., Disney, Desilu, Screen Gems, etc., for on-the-set ganders plus meetings with stars and execs. Every meal's an interview session as well. Visitors are never combined in groups of more than two, stressing even further the individual and exclusive nature of the setup.

Typical itinerary had one newsman starting at Warner Bros., including lunch there, then visiting the Bing Crosby rehearsals and interviewing Crosby, men holding down a dinner interview. Next day involved visit to Disney lot and the "Leave It to Beaver set," with dinner interview with "Walt Disney Presents" star Robert Loggia. Third day involved visit to "The Rifleman" set, thence to the "Wyatt Earp" set, then to Burbank for the live Crosby telecast. Next day, visit to "Real McCoys" set, "Donna Reed Show" set and ABC studios for Liberace taping, followed the next day by interviews with "Traffic Court" personnel and "Man With a Camera" set. Wrap-up is a visit to Disneyland.

Some of the newsmen who've already participated or are about to are such influential tv writers as the N.Y. Daily News' Ben Gross, San Francisco Examiner's Dwight Newton, Dallas Times Herald's Bob Brock, Cincinnati Post's Mary Wood, Denver Post's Tom Watt, Nashville Banner's Red O'Donnell, Boston Herald's Arthur Fetridge, Cleveland Press' Jim Frankel, Chicago Daily News' Terry Turner, Philly Inquirer's Harry Harris, Chi Tribune's Larry Wolters, Pittsburgh Post Gazette's Win Fanning, Boston American's Tony LaCamera, S.F. Chronicle's Terrence O'Flaherty, Atlanta Journal's Norman Shavin, Minneapolis Tribune's Will Jones, Pittsburgh Press' Fred Remington, Kansas City Star's Bob Hoyland, Philly Bulletin's Bob Williams, Houston Chronicle's Howard Stentz and others.

In addition to the press gang, of which there'll have been a total of about 40, staggered between July, when ABC started the push, and the end of November, the web has arranged for local tv personalities from the ABC Trendex-city affiliates to fly in with the same type of itinerary. Idea has been to have them also do interviews with the producers and talent, on audio tape or on soundfilm (if the station will foot the bill for the latter), for an additional push on programming.

All in all, the entire bill for the campaign probably won't run more than $50,000, but in terms of the extensive press and promotion in the Trendex cities involved it's a modest sum. Just a couple of columns in the right place can make a difference of one or two Trendex points, and this could be the difference between a renewal and a cancellation involving millions of dollars.

Magic Word: Research

Appointment last week of Don Coyle as v.p. and general sales manager of ABC-TV again strengthens the thesis that research work is becoming the key springboard to the industry's top sales post. Especially if it's an ABC-TV research job.

Don Durgin, currently v.p. and national sales manager of NBC-TV, was Coyle's predecessor as research-sales development boss at ABC-TV. And ABC-TV prexy Ollie Treyz preceded Durgin in the same post at ABC, before he moved to Television Bureau of Advertising and thence back to ABC-TV as prexy.

CARL IDE AS RAY SCOTT SIDEKICK ON GRIDCASTS

Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.

A new radio sponsor for the Pitt football games this season has resulted in a new sidekick for Ray Scott, who has been doing the play-by-play for several years now over KDKA. He is Carl Ide, KDKA-TV newscaster, who will do the color and commercials. Ide was picked because the bankroller is now Ford Motor Co., in association with the Fidelity Trust Co., and Ide has long been associated with Ford, doing the early evening news for that company over KDKA-TV.

Scott's sidekick a year ago was Tom Bender when Gulf Oil picked up the tab for the Pitt games.

Quinlan Shows How To Promote a Book: Lines Up Big % of Industry

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Being a network veepee has advantages beyond the obvious. For instance if you write a book, and moreover if it's a book about the industry. Sterling (Red) Quinlan, the ABC vice prez in Chi, has written such a one, and he is in no way bashful about putting his staff to work in its behalf.

Quinlan boasts that his opus, "The Merger" (Doubleday, Oct. 16), will have "probably the smoothest, slickest, fastest and largest exploitation teams" ever put behind a book. To thump it in Chi, he has enlisted his station's promotion chief, Ell Henry, his WBKB press staff, bookseller Stuart Brent (who reviews books on the station), and sundry chums in the p.r. business; in New York, Mike Foster and Sid Mesibov of ABC, in addition to the Doubleday book promotion force; in Los Angeles, Ernie Stern of ABC, plus old friends like Tom Duggan and Walter A. Richards; in San Francisco, KGO-TV chieftain John Mitchell and his staff; and in Dallas, Louis Malnassy, a personal friend.

The exec-gone-novelist will play an active part in its promotion himself, having plotted out an itinerary that would take him to New York, L.A. and San Francisco, in addition to other cities on the way, after the brouhaha in Chicago is ended. Here he intends to launch the book with a number of parties, including an autographing marathon for the employees of ABC Chicago and Balaban & Katz, the sister theatre chain. Noted Quinlan in a memo: "All five hundred of the employees will want to buy copies of the book."

AXED NEWSCASTER FILES SUIT FOR 300G

Columbus, Oct. 7.

William C. Jorgenson, who was dismissed as a newscaster by WTVN, Columbus, Sept. 12, has filed a suit in Franklin County Common Pleas Court, Columbus, asking $300,000 and damages from Bert Charles, station manager for WVKO, that city, and the Sky Way Broadcasting Corp., which operates that station.

Jorgenson alleges that Charles personally broadcast on Sept. 9 statements concerning Jorgenson that are "dafamatory," held him up to "public ridicule, hatred and contempt," and implied "criminal, immoral and base conduct," and reflected "injuriously upon his competency and qualifications as a newscaster."

Beigel's Hub Post

Boston, Oct. 7.

Philip Beigel, formerly staff director CBS, New York, is the new asst. program manager of WBZ-TV.

Beigel directed "Eye on New York," "Sunrise Semester," "Hickory Dickory Dock," "To Build A Nation," "Right Now" and others for CBS. He replaces Ray Hubbard recently transferred to KPIX, San Francisco, as program manager.

A Radio-TV Success Story

Minneapolis, Oct. 7.

Twin Cities' television and radio stations are pointing with pride to the 1958 record achieved by their best single local customer, Twin City Federal Saving and Loan Assn.

In a recession year and in a field highly competitively here, the association's resources skyrocketed to the $300 million mark, a $24 million gain since last Jan. 1 and making it the nation's largest holder of savings among such federally chartered bodies.

Moreover, when the final Sept. figures are in they'll show it to be the association's biggest month in history with a more than $4,000,000 savings gain, according to R. W. Larsen, its president.

The tv and radio folks here are taking some of the credit for the showing because the association is by far the heaviest Minneapolis-St. Paul buyer of video and audio time, sponsoring dozens of shows on a number of the stations. Its expenditures for airlane time run well into the six figures.

WCBS Radio to Incept 'Total Marketing Plan' As Merchandise Stunt

WCBS Radio is prepping a new merchandising stunt called "TMP" or Total Marketing Plan. Object will be to pull new customers and get stronger identification for individual and groups of grocery stores and products in Gotham area.

Group members will get "TMP" decals for store and window banners and station will promote the member stores with announcements urging listeners to buy at "TMP" outlets. Individual members also will get on-air-announcements with mention of stores, addresses and special food promotions.

General Manager Sam J. Slate also plans display space in Gotham gazettes listing "TMP" stores and in addition four special radio programs during the year to point up value of shopping in these establishments.

To join WCBS Radio's plan, member stores will be required to run 26 individual promotions within year for selected products advertised on the station. Howard Lally of WCBS Radio will be in charge of plan.

BBC-TV's Speedup Of News Via Eurovision

London, Oct. 7.

A plan to speed up news coverage is being tried experimentally by BBC-TV using the Eurovision link. The experiment, running for two weeks, will provide for the daily exchange of news film with Italy, France, Belgium and the Netherlands.

The BBC-TV news head, P. Smithers, said that he hoped the scheme would help to meet one of the big challenges facing tv news—to match the speed of radio. "We want to go as far afield as quickly as possible to collect the latest film of what has been happening—using television methods to bring it in as well as get it out," he said.

Fort Wayne—R. Morris Pierce has resigned as v.p. and general manager of WANE and WANE-TV, Fort Wayne, to become project manager for the prime contractor of a 2,000,000-watt broadcasting station to be built for the U.S. Navy at Cutler, Maine.

21 Previews For TV 'Bernadette'

The Westinghouse Desilu Playhouse production of "Bernadette" is getting 21 previews in 21 cities under the auspices of Communications Counselers Inc., public relations unit of McCann-Erickson Inc.

Perviews began yesterday (Tues.) with four CCI reps from Gotham and Hollywood plus six regional managers supervising the parties in cooperation with local tv outlets.

Ludi Claire, author of the tv script, is making personal appearances in Pittsburgh, Detroit and Chicago. George Murphy, veep of Desilu in charge of public affairs, is going to Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Houston and St. Louis.

Idea for advance reviewing of the first Westinghouse Desilu Playhouse came from J. Chris Witting, Westinghouse veep. "Bernadette" is slated for airing Oct. 13.

New York preview party will be staged today (Wed.) at McCann-Erickson's headquarters. Pier Angeli, who portrays Bernadette, will attend.

In Hollywood, Maggie Ettinger, CCI veep, will supervise dinner party and preview at the Desilu Studios with Lucille Ball and Dezi Arnaz on hand.

Jack G. Barefield, manager of CCI's tv dept. in N.Y., and assistant Steve Libby will cover Baltimore, Nashville, Pittsburgh, Indianapolis, Columbus and Cincinnati.

Other cities will be covered by Mike Dougherty, Laura Miller, Quentin Anderson Jr., Fletcher Booraem, Robert Zimmerman, Paul Douglas, Frank Hedge and Bill Ulman.

WOR-TV's School Grid

WOR-TV, N. Y., will present a Saturday series of eight high school football games to be played in the Metropolitan area. First participating sponsor to sign for the schedule is Master's Department Store.

Sportscaster Marty Glickman will handle the play by play, under the production reins of David Garth and David Engel. Kickoff is Saturday (11) afternoon when Baldwin H. S. faces Lawrence H. S.

The Hit Parade Cycle

By HARRY SOSNIK

(Musical Director of CBS-TV "Your Hit Parade")

In its heyday, the "Hit Parade," while at its peak, was the top musical hour on radio. It had a firm hold on the Saturday night audience which waited breathlessly to find out what the No. 1 song of the nation was going to be that night. This program was repeated at midnight for the West Coast so that they would hear the great news at the same hour.

In those days they did the top 20 songs with a 40-piece orchestra, a choir and unknown singers Buddy Clark, who was a great singer and unfortunately never attained the recognition he deserved because of his untimely death, was a young boy from Boston who was just starting.

The public listened to "Hit Parade" to learn what the top tunes were since it was their only source of information. There were no disk jockeys with their polls of top songs. This was the era of plugs by sustaining remote dance bands and Saturday night was the night to listen and to find out what the top songs were. Needless to say, on the following Monday the music stores were deluged with requests for sheet music and all the favorite dance orchestras and singers were requested to sing and play the big songs.

This was also the era of great instrumentalists who became house-household names. They all played in the "Hit Parade" orchestra at one time or another. Artie Shaw, Benny Goodman, Arnold Brilhart, Veryle Mills, Mannie Klein, Sammy Prager, Artie Schutt, the Dorsey Bros., and many others. The string section was a who's who of the greatest concertmasters in the classical world.

"Hit Parade" enjoyed the same status on Saturday night that Milton Berle enjoyed on Tuesday nights in the early days of television when everyone would rush home to see and hear "Mr. Television."

Slowly and surely with the advent of television and the birth of the disk jockey in radio due to the economic problems of programing, as well as the tremendous advances in the quality of records and hi-fi equipment we now have an enormous multi-million dollar record industry. In the natural course of evolution and because of the competition, each disk jockey started his own hit parade of songs. Many records are hits today because of electronic gimmicks in sound rather than the quality or caliber of the song or the performer.

This evolution involving the rise of the recording industry and the fall of the sheet music business, as well as the loss of the live dance orchestras and name singers as a means of exploiting a song, has put tremendous power in the hands of the disk jockey. Having control of the means of exploitation, he can make the hits of today.

The New Public

As a result this has created a new buying public; the teenage rock and roll record buyer. These gimmick hit records go up and down very fast but there always seems to be another one around the corner. The majority of the songs today don't have the solidity and staying power that the old well written melodies and lyrics had. In fact, a great many of the current popular records are old standards done in the new rock and roll vein. I'm sure that the younger element thinks that they are newly-written songs. This proves that even the recording men see the value in a well written song although they may doctor it for the rock and roll tastes.

With all these changes in the industry today; how then does one take the "Hit Parade" and give it new life? A basic and important step is to try to evolve a broader program concept and at the same time keep enough appeal and interest for the current trend.

The creative heads of "Your Hit Parade," (and I like to think of it it as the NEW "Your Hit Parade," since we sincerely believe that it will have a great resurgence), feel that with all of the imaginative resources and modern arrangers and musicians we will have at our disposal, we will be able to present music that the public will want to both watch and to listen to.

I have always felt that the quality of music in tv has been neglected and now I feel that this is the opportunity to show that it can be done intelligently with taste as well as interest, showmanship and a wide range of appeal.

TV Exploitation

sistent gospel of entertainment and education.

"We've never done anything in bad taste," says Rylander. "Certainly, the stunts that exploitation men pull in the film biz are frequently taboo in broadcasting, but there's plenty left to do with taste and tact. Standards of exploitation are inevitably higher in the radio-tv fields and when pecksniffs point a scornful finger at us, I'm certain it is nothing but just plain sour grapes."

Helps Ratings

Exploitation has helped to boost the ratings of many tv productions and according to Rylander, is the only means left today that can have major impact on every phase of the public. "If I were asked to characterize exploitation, I'd say exploitation MAKES news while the press department REPORTS news," Rylander said.

Rylander insists exploitation is a perfectly good word and there is no fitting substitute word for it. "Exploitation means hoopla, and there's nothing wrong with it," he maintains. He recalls when he worked in the Columbia Pictures exploitation department an effort was made to delete the word. The substitute was "special events" but exhibitors persisted in asking for the guy in charge of the exploitation department." No one ever thought of seeking out "special events" and ultimately the "exploitation department" was restored to its proper billing.

Rylander is of the opinion that the airlines are the most promotion-minded of all industries; the least imaginative being the railroads. "I don't wonder the railroads are heading for oblivion," he said. He also observed that the baseball clubs are exploitation-minded but it is a one-sided affair with the sports magnate getting all and giving little in return.

The motto of an exploitation man should be "Keep the Star Happy!" When the performer is happy, he obviously works best and don't ever let the star think you are using him Rylander noted and furthermore, if the star's mother wants two tickets for the hit show in town, you'd better get them or else!

Rylander observed that NBC exploitation is indeed new to the tv industry. "It is a mutation of the finer elements of road show, circus, carnival and motion picture ballyhoo," he proclaimed. "It is crystallized into 'physically publicity'."

Valuable too has been NBC exploitation's effect on the web affiliates. Once looked upon as a blasted nuisance. NBC exploitation today is regarded as friend and clearing house for many affiliates.

The NBC exploitation department consists of a director, the aforementioned Rylander; John Scuoppo, manager; Jack Hoins, writer; Mort Fleishman, planter or contact man; Don Allen, Coast representative. The department head reports to Ken Bilby, exec veepee for public relations, and works in cooperation with press, advertising and promotion, sales, station relations and programming departments.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

League of Women Voters in cooperation with WCBS-TV is attempting to set up two special "Right Now" for-free political campaign programs. One will be for candidates for the U. S. Senate, the other for candidates for Governor of New York State.

Particular interest would center in the gubernatorial show inasmuch as it would bring together Nelson Rockefeller for the Republicans; Governor Harriman on the Democratic ticket; John T. McManus, former radio-tv critic of the ill-fated PM and now candidate for governor on Independent-Socialist ticket, and Eric Hass for the Socialist Labor ticket.

Meeting would be moderated by Ron Cochran of CBS. Each candidate would be given equal speaking time and equal questioning. Program, however, would not be staged unless the major party candidates could be present.

Sessions would be carried over WCBS-TV at 1:30 p.m. Saturday during the latter part of this month with a possible extension of the usual half hour running time. Actual recording would be done on the preceding day of telecast. CBS Radio also would carry the non-partisan candidates meeting over a state-wide hook-up.

It's "equal time" at the Radio & Television Executives Society Wednesday (15). Tammany chief Carmine De Sapio will be quest speaker at the second "Newsmaker" luncheon of the season.

First RTES "Newsmaker" this season was Republican gubernatorial candidate Nelson Rockefeller. De Sapio will speak at the Hotel Roosevelt in N.Y.C.

ABC-TV is herding all seven Warner Bros. tv western stars into New York next Thursday (16) to appear on the Pat Boone show. That night Boone is slated to unveil his sponsor Chevrolet's new 1959 automobile line.

Web and Warners figure that besides bolstering the Chevy pitch, it'd legitimately get considerable promotional exposure for the western players via the highly-rated live stanza. In the troupe will be James Garner and Jack Kelly of "Maverick," Will Hutchins of "Sugarfoot," Ty Hardin of "Cheyenne," John Russell and Pete Brown of "Lawman" and Wayde Preston of "Colt .45." They'll also appear Saturday, Oct. 18, on a WOR-TV, N.Y., telethon for Cerebral Palsy foundation, a charity in which AB-PT prexy Leonard Goldenson has had a long-time interest.

Ed Sullivan who recently indicated plans to do one of his CBS-TV shows from Alaska has decided to do several other programs from outside the country. Dates haven't been set yet but Sullivan plans further originations from Tokyo and Hawaii. Apparently decision to extend overseas originations was prompted by the success of his Brussels World's Fair show last June. His Alaskan show is scheduled for a November airing.

For the first time in the union's history, American Federation of Television & Radio Artists officially played host to a management group—Japanese management. Visiting the U. S. through the auspices of the International Cooperation Administration to once-over American broadcasting, the Japanese delegation was briefed yesterday (Tues.) by AFTRA on the current tv labor-management picture.

Also involved in briefing visitors were Charles Calame, administrative chief of N.Y. Local 1212, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and G. Tyler Byrne, executive secretary of National Assn. of Broadcast Employees & Technicians. Clayton (Bud) Collyer and national exec secretary Donald F. Conaway repped AFTRA, which hosted the sessions with the Japanese.

Sixteen members of Writers Guild of America have written a tome, "TV and Screen Writing," which is being printed by the University of California Press in the U.S. and Cambridge Press in England. Both editions go on sale Oct. 14. Lola G. Yoaken, guild member, is editor and compiler of the articles on technical aspects of tv and pix writing. Contributors are Erik Barnouw, Gomer Cool, Reuven Frank, Frank Gruber, Lois Jacoby, Hal Kanter, Jesse Lasky Jr., Stephen Longstreet, Mary C. McCall Jr., Frank Nugent, Charles Palmer, Ivan Tors, Eugene Vale, Malvin Wald and Elihu Winer.

KMPC, the Gene Autry-Bob Reynolds radio indie in Los Angeles, is one of the heaviest sports outlets on the Coast, broadcasting the Dodger baseball games and the Los Angeles Rams pro grid tilts. So the station of late has found itself in the lit'ry business, with the publication and free distribution of booklets explaining sports to the layman particularly the housewife. Latest is "Football from the Ground Up," a compilation of rules, descriptions, diagrams and explanations of football to enable the average listener to follow the action. This was preceded last spring by "A Housewife's Guide to Baseball," which had a press run of 25,000 copies.

appeal. And, conversely, NBC today knows that a Bob Hope slotted early enough yet not too late (as with "Roberta") will cash in on both his adult and kid appeal. The days when a Sol Hurok-produced longhair concertizing session is misdirected into "Wells Fargo" time is gone forever. The mistakes were costly—but the networks have learned the hard way.

Today's "special" is money in the bank, for both the sponsor and the network. So much so that even ABC, which heretofore has skirted that area of programming, is going spec-happy like all the others.

Equal Time

raised several questions before the FCC concerning his equal time. One of them was whether he could send in a spokesman instead of doing the politicking himself.

The staff okayed Grace's request and issued a ruling which said: "Mr. Grace may use the facilities in any manner he sees fit, including uses which in whole or part involve turning over the microphone to authorized spokesmen of the candidate."

This was the paragraph which particularly raised the NAB's ire for it was a different interpretation of Section 315 than they had previously understood.

The total results? FCC unanimously reversed its staff ruling; Garner has won the election; and radio stations are newly reminded of the difficulties involved when news commentators run for public office.

WPAT: The 'Wright Way'

altar a long, long time. But, finally, the agencies hove into view—and now they love us, admire us for our taste, our standards."

WPAT is currently on the air 20 hours a day and commercial selling is limited to 99 minutes a day. This year's gross should be in the area of $1,200,000. With a rate card jump due next year, Wright anticipates minimum billing of $1,500,000 and possibly $2,000,000.

From 6 to 6:45 a.m. it's strictly non-commercial because, as Wright expresses it: "People wake up with a brown taste in their mouth at that hour and can't abide a commercial." From 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. the quarter hour breaks carry commercials, averaging about 100 announcements during this 12-hour period. From 11 p.m. to 2 a.m. WPAT again reverts to its non-commercial setup.

At present WPAT is getting $60 for minute spots which scale down to $42 with discounts. The new ratecard will show minute spots at $80 with discounts to $55 while "Gaslight Revue," its gemlike program of light music in price evening time, will get $100 per minute spot.

Another step in WPAT's advancement will be the migration to Manhattan of the station's sales and executive staff including publicity and promotion. The music department, under David Gordon's direction will remain in N. J. and ultimately the studios will shift from Paterson to Clifton, site of the transmitter. The sales force expects to be in midtown Manhattan by the middle of November, thus easing transportation problems between agencies and station headquarters.

A third step in the station's progress is the preparation of an LP album tagged "Foolish Heart" which Westminster Records is releasing nationally this week. This major-league undertaking makes admirable use of the melodies of composers like Richard Rodgers, Jerome Kern, Kurt Weill and others in a fresh symphonic fashion. To record the music, Wright and his program chieftain, Gordon, went abroad and commissioned the Vienna State Opera Orchestra to record the works.

Wright says the album "will have the familiar ring of the unlimited, uninterrupted music programming," and is confident that the album captured the sound of his radio station. The album is subtitled: "The Vienna State Opera Orchestra Plays Music From the Repertoire of Radio Station WPAT."

As a promotion device, Wright is certain that it will be effective and in keeping with the station's overall advertising and promotion campaign which includes a regular schedule of smartly dressed ads in the New Yorker plus an upcoming campaign in the N. Y. World-Telegram and N.Y. Herald Tribune. The latter two deals will be in the nature of time on the air for space in the dailies.

WPAT today carries 90% national biz. Less than one percent of its biz comes from drugs whereas on other stations it is usually anywhere from 8 to 13%. It constantly turns down e.t.'s it considers offensive and many an agency checks the station's continuity department before sending transcriptions or live copy.

Its listeners run the gamut from Nick Kenny to Dorothy Sarnoff, from Mary Martin to Paddy Chayefsky, from Jack Paar to Arthur Godfrey and more than 350 station managers across the country have asked Wright to give the secret formula of WPAT's operation.

"We're not afraid to reveal our method of operation," Wright said. "We don't care if WOR wants to copy us with 'Studio X' or WVNJ with its "Albums of Great Music." Most stations are merely 'record pullers.'"

Wright observed that when his backers first arrived on the local broadcasting scene, the airlanes had been prostituted by a flock of opportunists. "We like to think that the listeners were ready for us," he said. "And we've tried since not to do anything but play intelligent music."

WPAT is indeed an odd character in the Gotham broadcasting picture. Hardly a record company's contact man comes around to tout a disk or to produce a dizzy dame in tights plugging a rock 'n' roller for the tastes of a jaded deejay. There just ain't any disk jockey drooling drippings from WPAT's mike.

ABC-TV vs. Y&R

ter was not to be called or approached any further during program planning.

One web source said Y&R has become resigned to the "adjustment" and that since the time ABC reasserted itself, "everything has been riding smoothly." Like all the underwriters buying into the ABC plan, the Y&R advertisers are inked to a firm 26 weeks.

ABC said on Monday (6) that there are 80 quarter-hour sponsorships that were signed since the kickoff of "Daybreak" sales. Of the 70 quarter-hour availabilities in "Daybreak" itself, 66½ are sold. But approximately 14 other weekly quarter-hour segs were also sold in existing ABC daytime shows, including "Bandstand" and "Who Do You Trust?" Web said that "Operation Daybreak" was the initial arbitrary designation for the six new shows but that now all the daytime programs are being grouped under the sales plan that was designed for the new shows.

Operation Back-Break

Six-man program department at ABC-TV is calling "Operation Daybreak" by a new name. With less than a month to work on all of the six programs that begin Monday (13), matters become especially hectic, so they now call it "Operation Back-break."

Acting largely in supervisory capacities, the ABC program staffers pushed through 10 complete audition kinescopes. That's two per show, where heretofore the general practice by networks is to do one, and, in some cases only, two. "Beat the Clock," which had been on the air elsewhere for eight-and-a-half years, got an unusual full day of facilities rehearsal, although it didn't need any audition prints. Plus the two kines apiece on the remaining shows, each also got a full days of facilities rehearsals.

Addition of new shows required overhauling two studios which had been turned into offices and it required adjustment and rescheduling of all ABC's other facilities in time for the kickoff.

Right-To-Work

measure. Stars are now being overtured to appear. In the case of tv stars, it's been learned networks and sponsors in some instances frown on participation of their personalities in a show linked with a political campaign.

Show biz unions are providing the directors, writers, musicians, artists and entertainers for the two-hour event, sponsored by the non-partisan Citizens Committee Against Proposition 18. Gov. Goodwin J. Knight and other Republicans as well as Democrats will be on tap.

Locally show will be on KABC-TV from 3 to 5 p.m. Same day, but on different time slots, it will be seen in Bakersfield, Fresno, San Diego, Stockton-Sacramento, Salinas, San Luis Obispo and Santa Barbara.

SAG—AFTRA

themselves the opportunity to pick the less demanding tape contract. "Playing one against the other," Dales declared, "is just a slogan, because joint negotiations would preclude such a possibility."

William Berger, a SAG lawyer, explained that a "merger has many, many problems." Alluding to several abortive attempts since 1938 to merge actors, he maintained there is a great difference in the philosophy of doing a film and a live program.

The assembled SAG execs were of one mind in believing that film thesps and radio-live tv actors were trained in different atmospheres and were led to expect different things in wages and working conditions. For one thing, live tv is produced in a brief period of time and motion pictures are shot over a long pull, they said. "When can a live television actor expect double time for Sunday work," someone asked, "when AFTRA considers Sunday just another work day? In motion pictures, Sunday is definitely an extra work day."

Other dissimilarities were reported by members of the SAG group. Moreover, they couldn't see where a merger of AFTRA and SAG would yield itself to solving the problems of widely varied negotiation that already confront each of the unions separately. SAG has to dicker features, tv film, AFTRA radio and live tv, and, referring to his file, Dales said that experts have found such an amalgam impossible to affect. Dales felt personally that a SAG-AFTRA umbrella would also be impossible to administrate. He referred to the failure of investigators from Cornell and UCLA to come up with a solution to merger.

"In every merger plan since 1939," he said, "nobody has come out with a cheaper way to administrate one organization rather than two. It costs more than the combined expenses of two separate unions. You might make some minimal savings on personnel by merging but that would be offset by a 'super board of directors' and that would mean a great expense in travel every year."

It was indicated during the course of the interview that, in arguing for merger, some say a joint union would have greater bargaining strength. Dales contested this, saying that separately AFTRA and SAG have the "complete power" to cause a crippling work stoppage in their respective fields.

On the issue of actors who hold cards in both unions, Dales said that perhaps 4,000 Coast performers who belong to AFTRA are also in the paid-up ranks of SAG. He said that throughout the country the card overlap couldn't be over 30%, as opposed to figures from AFTRA which estimate 75% to 80% overlap.

MCA Will Recoup

it should gross about $70,000,000 on the pix the first time around, exclusive of the foreign market and residuals in the U.S.

For the small markets, MCA-TV is understood to be thinking of a variety of plans. It's fairly certain for these markets, that the mailed approach breaking down the pix individually by price and licensing period will be eliminated and a different approach employed.

Duke on BBC-TV

London, Oct. 7.

Duke Ellington will give his views on jazz in BBC-TV's magazine show, "Monitor," next Sunday (12). Ellington's spot will be telerecorded earlier in the day because of concert commitments that evening.

The Johnny Dankworth orchestra will provide the musical illustrations to his talk. Duke Ellington and his orch are currently playing a three weeks concert tour of Britain. It's the band's first visit to Britain in 25 years.

Chi Lyric Opera Gets FM Stereo

Chicago, Oct. 7.

To the WBBM remote Oct. 10 of Lyric Opera's opening night production of "Falstaff," which Chicago Title and Trust is underwriting, the local CBS shop is adding gratis coverage on sister station WBBM-FM for purposes of a stereocast.

Motive for bringing the FM-er into the picture is chiefly to promote the frequency modulation outlet, which only a few months ago won its solo wings as an independently programmed station. Also, according to H. Leslie Atlass, veep in charge of the CBS stations here, there is the desire to explore further the broadcast possibilities of stereo.

WBBM manager of technical operations, Bill Fligel, has designed a three channel system for the Lyric Opera footlights, wherein the placement of singers on the stage, or their movement across it, can be dramatized on the home receivers. Position and movement, he said, would be the main contribution of stereo inasmuch as voices are only monaural. The orchestra will be reproduced with full stereophonic values.

Singers in the production will include Renata Tebaldi, Tito Gobbi, Giulietta Simionata, Anna Moffo and Kenneth Smith.

'Basic Russian I' On META's WPIX Roster; Also 'French Thru TV'

META, having survived its perilous economic period, although not altogether out of the woods, is prepping a full-sized series of educational features over WPIX, N.Y., for the fall and winter season.

Perhaps its most arresting feature of the new season is the "Basic Russian I" course on Tuesday from 3 to 4 p.m. It's reportedly the first time the Russian language has been taught on tv in the Gotham area.

Course which began yesterday (Tues.) is presented in cooperation with St. John's Univ. and is a four-point course for two semesters of satisfactory work. Public can take the course with or without registration. Instructor will be Mrs. Helen Schmidinger Reeve, lecturer at St. John's Graduate School. Overseas Press Club of America is recommending the course to its members. Amram Novak is producing. Frank Jacoby will direct.

META also began this week a "French Through TV" course from 12:30 to 1 p.m. based on the Ivor Richards method of teaching languages. It is on the station five times a week. Also on Monday from 3 to 4 p.m. it is presenting "Latin America: Challenge to the U.S." a series dealing with contemporary Latin America. Prof. Robert Hayton of Hunter College is giving the course.

An analysis of the Far Eastern situation is being presented on Wednesday from 3 to 4 p.m. Dr. John D. Stoessinger, asst. professor of political science at Hunter College, is in charge. Barbara Davidson is producing "Far East: Challenge to the U.S.A." and Jacoby is directing.

In the Friday 3 to 4 p.m. slot META is giving a course on contemporary drama in cooperation with the Phoenix Theatre Festival of Nobel Prize Winners. Norris Houghton is the principal speaker.

Syndication Reviews

CITIZEN SOLDIER
Producer: R.W. Alcorn
Distributor: Flamingo Films
30 Mins., Mon., 9:30 p.m.
WNBQ, Chicago (film)

World War II is now buried under a sufficient layer of time for this semi-documentary series to have memorial and historical interest, in addition to serving escape and aggressive gratification like the ordinary actioner. Decidedly, the audience it attracts will be mostly male, for which reason it lends itself to sponsorship by products of the masculine image. In Chicago, where "Citizen Soldier" was caught for review, Schlitz Beer and Oklahoma Oil underwrites the series, and both appear to have made a cagey buy.

Series is produced on a shoestring, owing largely to the U.S. Army's cooperation in lending the necessary equipment and manpower. Unfortunately, the skimpy budget frequently shows through, as for instance in the non-professional casting. To put it bluntly, the performances are noticeably not good by bigtime tv standards, although the lack of slickness in the thesping compensates by helping to promote the documentary feel of the production.

Also, since the Army is apparently unwilling to demolish its equipment, even for the sake of video realism, things like tanks do not blow up when they're supposed to but instead get inundated by explosive sound and a smokescreen. The splattering of the object is left to the imagination.

Leadoff installment, titled "Invisible Soldier," had to do with a longshot military stratagem which, if it worked (and it did), would allow the American infantry to advance across a field patroled by three Nazi tanks. A war-weary sergeant named Pemberton, protagonist of this story, conceives and executes a plan to play dead in the path of the tanks in order to guide artillery fire via field phone. The real life soldier, according to the narrator, received the Silver Star for his heroics.

Episode was embellished with token probing into Pemberton's psyche and with the sub-interest that his comrades think him a coward. Despite these little extras, the storyline was thin and predictable. It was the stark depiction of war, with its attending tensions, that carried the episode along.

Cast received no billing whatever. Most of the soldiers recruited for roles handled the dialog with a flat reading, but the script benevolently kept the conversation spare. Les.

Syndication Follow-Up

Silent Service

Apparently "Silent Service" has such a low budget they can't afford any heavies. Consequently, the first show of the fall season, about some nuns being saved from their Solomon Islands hideout by a U.S. sub, is a dull, insipid halfhour with no dramatic values whatsoever.

Segment could have aptly been called "Have Nun, Will Travel." It shows how the nuns are taken to the sub by an Aussie officer, and most of the footage deals with their ogling the sub. Even as a half-hour commercial for the sub service, it's a big zero.

Joseph Stone and Paul King wrote what shall generally be called a story. It wasn't. Peggy Stewart and Peter Hansen are okay in the leads, even though they have very little to do. It's based on real life happenings, which must have had more excitement, and the real-life nun came on at the end for an interview.

Show is a sustainer on KRCA, Los Angeles, which is the fate it deserves. In fact, if the opener is any indication of what's to come, it's reasonable to assume the only reason this is on KRCA at all is that the series is made by the NBC's vidfilm subsid, California National.

Rear Adm. T. M. Dykers, (Ret) is a monotonous narrator.

Jean Yarbrough directs with all the animation of a still-life. Dacu.

BRITISH A-R PREPS 'HIPPODROME SHOW'

London, Oct. 7.

Associated - Rediffusion, with plans for its boldest light entertainment venture near completion, is gandering British film studios with the view to hiring floor space for the forthcoming productions. John McMillan, A-R's program controller, said that so far the outfit had viewed the Shepperton lots, but had not yet reached a definite decision. "We're still looking around," he said.

The program, given the working title of "The Hippodrome Show," will make its bow Jan. 1 and will be aired every three weeks in a Thursday night 9-10 p.m. slot. McMillan described the offering as one which will use musical and sight acts from America, the Continent and Britain.

Martin Luther Biopic No Longer TV Issue

The "Martin Luther" biopic now making the tv rounds is slated for telecasting in another 15 markets, according to Lutheran Church Productions, distributors.

The Louis de Rochemont feature kicked up a storm last year in Chicago when Catholic groups complained about its airing. But apparently things have calmed down. The distributor says the pic has been shown in about 15 cities without incident.

CBS Films-Desilu Private Eye Series

Martin Leeds, general manager of Desilu Studios, has made a deal with CBS Film to produce a series titled "The Man Nobody Knows," dealing with a private eye who uses many disguises.

Leslie Harris, CBS Films, v.p. and general manager, made the deal on his recent trip to Hollywood. In about another week, Harris will depart for Europe, where he plans to make arrangements for two series with British commercial tv interests. Besides visiting Britain, Harris will take in Italy, Germany and France.

The Leeds deal gives the CBS subsid eight projects, now either planned or being lensed. A pilot has been completed on "Silent Sabre," a Revolutionary War skein; "Rendezvous," the anthology syndication series currently is being shot in London; "Col. Flack," the comedy series, now is in distribution; "The Diplomat" pilot is set for shooting; "Border Patrol" pilot will be shot in November, and "Collector's Item," starring Vincent Price, which did not find a network berth the past selling season is being taken over for possible syndication by the subsid.

Lacey to Filmcraft

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Jack C. Lacey, former production head of Roy Rogers Frontiers Inc., has joined Filmcraft Productions as production manager. Firm last week resumed filming of Groucho Marx's "You Bet Your Life" for the ninth consecutive year.

Lacey, while with Rogers, was also producer-director on the CBS-TV "Brave Eagle" series out of the Rogers shop.

NEW MBS OWNERS EYE ALAN FREED

New management at Mutual, topped by prez Alexander Guterma, is reappraising the net's programming schedule.

It's known that MBS has held some talks with deejay Alan Freed, currently associated with WABC, N.Y. Freed is set to make a number of feature films with the Hal Roach Studios. The Roach outfit, along with Mutual, is owned by the Scranton Corp.

Understand new management wants to retain present accent on news and special events which virtually makes up the network schedule. However, new management is looking over entertainment programming ideas and examining their practicality.

Series of MBS board meets were held in N.Y. last week when the entire net's operation was given the onceover. Understand net plans to expand the board from nine to 11 members, with Blair A. Walliser, web's exec v.p., slated to become a director.

weeks here, then back to N. Y. Through his schedule, he's able to ride herd on scripts, casting and cutting of both series. He takes actual producer credit on both shows, rather than retiring to an exec producer level on either of them, and states that as long as he's on his own, he'll continue to control all his properties as on-the-spot producer.

Anent the running controversy over the advantages of New York as a production centre for telefilms, Leonard acknowledges the union problem but states that "if you make it clear that you're going to stay in New York and fight out your battles with the unions beforehand, you can come to an understanding." Since his initial discussions with the unions, he states, he's received every cooperation. As for problems involving overtime, especially as pertains to night shooting, he's adopted the attitude of paying the overtime and cutting the schedule elsewhere. On a straight day basis, if overtime is foreseen, he skips the overtime and extends his shooting schedule for another day. "If I've got to pay eight hours worth of wages for four hours of work, I'd rather go into another day and get a full eight hours. I can make it up elsewhere."

'Green Peacock's' ABC-TV Film Coin

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

ABC-TV Film Syndication is putting up the coin for 13 more scripts for "The Green Peacock" vidseries being produced by Ida Lupino and Howard Duff, and starring Duff.

Husband-wife team, via their Mareella Productions, have lensed two vidpix and may do a third, but meanwhile is busy concentrating on additional scripts, aiming at a January air date. They're headquartered at UI. Dan Mainwaring is story editor on series, and will write six of the yarns. Sindell Agency set Mainwaring for the series.

Although ABC Syndication is involved financially, series isn't tied up for syndication, and may go network. Colgate wanted to buy show as replacement for the axed "Datto," but Miss Lupino felt it was too quick a deal, that there wasn't adequate time for preparation, so nixed it.

Ramon Navarro has a stet role in the series.

who already had been named to that post prior to the acquisition.

Russ Clancy, previously co-director of national sales, TPA, has been promoted to manager of N.Y. city sales, syndicated division. Kurt Blumberg, formerly in TPA sales administration, has been promoted to manager, sales administration for all sales departments. Manny Reiner, who headed foreign sales for TPA, will continue to head the foreign operation for ITC-TPA.

The combined ITC-TPA sales staff was put at 40 at this stage, with a prediction that the number would swell to 80 within the next few months.

Only major TPA exec not continuing with the combined operation is Michael Sillerman, former TPA exec v.p., who elected to resign. He is eyeing possible financial participation in a major syndication operation.

On the initial "Four Just Men" property, Sidney Cole and Jud Kinberg have been assigned as producers. Cole produced the Alec Guinness starrer, "Man in the White Suit," and Kinberg was previously a "Playhouse 90" producer and associate producer of Metro's "Lust for Life." A production date of Dec. 15 has been set for the start of filming.

The production budget for the 39 episodes was put at $2,000,000 one of the highest budgets cited for an Anglo-American production deal.

Dorothy Winter Back To N. Y. for BBDO

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Dorothy Winter, longtime director of the live-programming division of BBD&O's Hollywood office, is being recalled to the agency's New York headquarters to become director of all daytime commercial production for the agency.

She assumes her new duties Oct. 15, and will be replaced here by Lawrence Algeo, BBD&O staff producer, according to Wayne Tiss, BBD&O exec v.p. here.

Seidelman Upped

Bob Seidelman moves up in Screen Gems from syndication sales manager to director of syndication sales, a step taken in recognition of the job he's been administrating since last spring.

Jerry Hymans had Seidelman's new title, until he became veepee in charge of SG syndicated properties in May. Since then Seidelman has been in direct control of the company's 35-man field force.

THIS IS THE CHALLENGE
With Martin Andrews, narrator; Bryna Raeburn, William Redfield, Helen Dumas. Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin, Mrs. Helen Tullis
Writer-Producer: Ira Marion
Director: William Marshall
25 Mins., Mon., 10:30 p.m.
ABC Radio, from New York

Although some individuals are less fortunate than others, by sheer determination and help of others they're able to overcome their able to overcome their handicaps. That's the point of "This Is the Challenge," a 25-minute semi-documentary which preemed last week on the ABC Radio Network. Presented by the web in cooperation with the American Foundation for the Blind, the program was a stirring dramatization of the case history of a sightless girl who rose to become a prominent Baltimore civic leader.

Experiences of Mrs. Helen Tullis, Maryland Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin pointed out in an introduction, is a "story decorated only by the truth." How she majored in speech and dramatics at Hunter College, N.Y. won an M.A. in speech therapy at Columbia U. and established a happy marriage was spelled out with a minimum of sentiment in producer-writer Ira Marion's terse script. A cast headed by Bryna Raeburn, William Redfield and Helene Dumas brought realism to the chronicle as did Martin Andrews' narration. Withal, it was a notable start in bringing listeners documented stories of those who met challenges from life itself. Gilb.

Radio Followup

Klavan & Finch

Four hours of live programming six days a week is a pretty tough schedule to maintain in any broadcaster's book. To keep it light, breezy, and entertaining at the same time is an accomplishment that deserves kudos.

Klavan & Finch manage to keep their show on N. Y. indie WNEW out of a rut by combining the tried and true with the unpredictable. It's perhaps this unpredictable element that keeps so many faithful listeners glued to that old fashioned thing called radio.

Team sprinkle their early morning stanza (6 to 10 a.m.) with records, some straight some hooked up via cut ins from other disks, patter, news (on the half hour), and some of the most imaginatively delivered commercials heard on the airwaves recently. A favorite lead-in for K&F is to go on with a phony remote from some location of topical interest with Klavan taking the part of news commentators H. V. Klavanborne or Bob Snout. After a short patter routine, the pair manages to work into the pitch via some left field tie-in and while Finch delivers, or tries to deliver the pitch deadpan, Klavan gives him verbal digs over the remote mike which generally breaks up the proceedings and makes for some of the best listening radio in these parts has provided in a long time. Syd.

WCBS-TV's New Setup On Sales Staffers

WCBS-TV's new sales staff consists of Robert G. Baal, Alfred Di Giovanni, Robert A. Innes, Tom Judge, Edward R. Kenefick John McCrory, James Osborn and Stan Schloeder.

Sales staff also includes Walter Stein as research and sales promotion director; William A. Morris, sales promotion manager, and Marion Hampden, commercial traffic manager.

New setup is designed to have sales staff represent the station exclusively in Gotham on local, regional and national basis. Previously station had its own sales manager but used staff and facilities of CBS-TV Spot Sales to represent it locally and elsewhere.

Norman Walt is sales manager for WCBS-TV.

featuring dances and dancers of questionable taste and costuming. Specifically, the editorial mentioned a serialized musical show, "Valentina," run off in four live installments by the local outlet, RAI-TV. "Valentina," with its backstage situations and garbing, it claimed, exemplified the dangers that video presented to the average home audience. (The last stanza of the show ran 30 minutes under announced running time, suggesting that certain numbers had been trimmed.)

Osservatore Romano concluded its editorial by stating that it was "a civil offense to betray" the "friendship" of the television set in this way. While the Catholic organ in the past has several times warned of the "dangers" of tv exposure of certain shows this is reportedly the first time it has gone into specific details (naming shows, etc.) in its criticism. Fact that piece was unsigned is said by insiders to give blast an even more official quality.

Monte Carlo TV Gets a Reprieve

Paris, Oct. 7.

A few months ago the commercially operated Tele-Monte Carlo station was announced as up for sale and taken by the nationalized French Radiodiffusion Television Francaise to use as a relay station, for their one channel setup, for the South of France. Since then there have been some changes made and Monte Carlo stays commercial and will even get its range increased in a new attempt to impose a commercial web on France.

Biz-backed radio and tv can be beamed into France, but not from France. Monte Carlo, long a deficit since it had only a short range and did not attract too much advertising, will now get another chance when its new longrange system goes into effect in a few months.

Tele-Monte Carlo is owned by the Images Et Son Co., financed by plane builder Sylvain Floirat. This company also runs the radio station Radio Europe No. 1 and Tele-Sarre, which both beam into France from the nearby Saar. It was Europe No. 1 that recently divulged the new plans for Tele-Monte Carlo.

If this goes into effect the whole French Riviera could be serviced by this channel and existing sets could be adjusted for it for the cost of about $12. It is felt that the web will still not be a moneymaker for some time, but a good weapon to force the government into hastening a second commercial channel.

Could Be You," Bill Leyden; "Truth or Consequences," Bob Barker; "Haggis Baggis," Fred Robbins; "Today Is Ours," Pat Benoit; "From These Roots," Ann Flood; "Queen For a Day," Jack Bailey and "County Fair," Bert Parks.

Winners will be chosen on basis of achievements in advertising, promotion, exploitation, publicity, coupled with originality and ingenuity. Execs of top advertising agencies using daytime tv will be the judges.

NBC itself will boost the daytime lineup with a stepped-up campaign of air announcements and concentrated publicity material wherein each daytime show will get top billing in the NBC daily press bundle. Also headliners on daytime shows will make guest appearance on nighttime program to plug their shows. Bailey, for example, will go on the Tennessee Ernie Ford show; Leyden on Milton Berle's program; Barker on the Gobel show and women performers of the daytime serials will bob up on Perry Como's program. Nighttime talent, in turn, will make guest appearances on the daytimers.

Top execs of NBC's public relations division returned this week from a 20-city tour where they met up with promotion-publicity managers and station managers and stressed the importance of the upcoming ballyhoo.

Drumbeating the audience promotion contest were Kenneth W. Bilby, veep for public relations; Sydney H. Eiges, veep, press and publicity; Ellis Moore, director, press dept.; John Porter, director, advertising; Al Rylander, director, exploitation; Edwin T. Vane, manager, audience advertising and promotion, and Ray Johnson, manager, station promotion.

Undoubtedly, NBC's current endeavor to boost its daytime lineup was in a measure sparked by CBS-TV's recent daytime televisit week stunt which had some 49 housewives from all the states including Alaska viewing daytime fare in Gotham and telling all about in daily dispatches to home town newspapers. But of even more consequence is the competitive ABC-TV threat with the bow next week of its "Operation Daybreak."

Does Pupil 'Attendance' Via TV Entitle Chi As City to State Aid Funds?

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Educational tv, with its accredited classes at home, is causing the Illinois State Superintendent of Schools some discomfort. It raises the question of whether or not the city of Chicago is entitled to regular state aid ($200 per pupil) for students "attending" junior college courses on tv. This would even include prisoners at Statesville, a division of the state pen in Joliet.

Supt. Vernon L. Nickell last week tossed the problem at the Schools Problems Commission for a resolution. The educational station in point is WTTW, Chicago, which has been active for three years.

Nickell said he disapproved of qualifying video classes for state aid and asked that a clearer policy be established for educational tv. "I don't think you can sit out there in some parlor and count that as attendance," he said.

'DOTTO' & 'VERDICT' HOT ON BRITISH TV

"Dotto," which went blotto here as a result of "rigging" charges, and "Verdict Is Yours" are in the Top 10 shows in England, it was reported this week by Sy Fischer, exec of Frank Cooper Associates, owner of the packages.

Cooper outfit has another package, "Keep It in the Family" also reportedly scoring in English tv. Both "Dotto" and "Verdict," however, managed to get into the Top 10 during their first week on the air.

Peter Potter Shifts 'Jukebox' to KTTV

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Peter Potter will move his "Jukebox Jury" from KRCA, the NBC-TV o&o here, over to indie KTTV starting Oct. 17. Switch from KRCA has been in the works for some time, since Potter decided to put the show into syndication via videotape. KTTV show will be taped for syndication through Guild Films.

Hourlong stanza, which will go into a Friday at 9 slot on KTTV, has Hollywood stars evaluating the new disk releases.

ABC-TV's Do-It-Yourself Formula On Filming of Web Promotionals

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

ABC-TV has come up with a do-it-yourself formula filming of network promotionals that sees it cast in the role of a commercial producer for the first time. The promotionals are series of five animated one-minute spots promoting the web institutionally and programs individually, with a total of some 1,500 prints out all over the country for a saturation push.

Web is using the one-minute announcements at all opportunities, wherever a sustaining spot is available. Every affiliate has a double set of prints on each spot, and is using them on a run-of-station basis. Within the five announcements, virtually every new show and most of the old ones on the ABC lineup is covered. But use of filmed promotionals, even fully animated ones, isn't new; fact that ABC produced them itself is.

Web's Coast advertising & promotion chief, Elliott Alexander, set up the operation, which consisted of calling in Coast designer Saul Bass to design the spots and then farming out the various production elements and assembling them for the finished product. Bass, who specializes in designing motion picture titles, corporate symbols, etc., dreamed up the format and design and wrote the continuity with Alexander.

Actual animation was farmed out to indie animator Bill Hertz, former Coast head of the Shamus, Culhane commercial house. Bill Liebert composed and conducted a specal score for the promotionals. Then, with Hertz' finished negative, Liebert's score and the voicetracks of Mel Blanc, Sara Berner and Alan Reed, National Screen Service was assigned to assemble the finished product, from which prints were made. Final prints then went out to each ABC affiliate and the campaign was on. Affiliates currently have only four of the spots; fifth was dubbed last week and will be in their hands shortly.

Houston—James C. Richdale Jr., has been named veepee and general manager of KGUL-TV it was announced by C. Wrede Petersmeyer, prez of KGUL-TV. Richdale was former veepee and general manager of KOTV, Tulsa.

as chairman, are lively individualists who speak their minds frankly and never miss a debating trick.

In the current panel are two ex-Cabinet Ministers—one on each side of the political fence. One is Peter Thorneycroft, who resigned his position as Chancellor of the Exchequer at the beginning of this year because he didn't see eye to eye with his Government colleagues. The other is Emanuel Shinwell, who held office in the Labor Governments from 1945 until they were defeated by the Tories some years later. W. J. Brown, a rugged Independent, is on the Conservative side and Anthony Wedgwood Benn, a cultured Socialist, completes the Opposition team. Chairman Frank Byers plays no part other than to present the problem to be discussed.

In program reviewed there were only two topics for discussion — Archbishop Makarios's latest proposal for a settlement of the Cyprus crisis and the brighter picture presented by the latest balance of payments returns. Surprisingly, it was the latter subject that led to the more vigorous argy-bargy between the two teams. The program may be a little hard to digest immediately after the traditional Sunday lunch and could easily justify a better slot. Myro.

WHACK-O!
With Jimmy Edwards, Arthur Howard, Peter Glaze, June Whitfield, Christopher Hey, Frank Middlemass, John Stirling, David Langford, Edwin Apps, Michael Stainton, Hugo de Vernier, John Lewis, others.
Writers: Frank Muir and Denis Norden
Producer: Douglas Moodie.
30 mins., Tues., 7:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London.

Based on the events at a shady British private school, this follow-up BBC-TV series starring comedian Jimmy Edwards, is good slapstick fun. Edwards, who was at one time a school teacher, plays his role as headmaster with plenty of gusto and spits out the gags in his inimitable manner. He's a natural for the part and is ably backed by a well picked supporting cast. The script, by one of Britain's top comedy writing teams, Frank Muir and Denis Norden, is tailored to the comic's style.

New series kicked off with a yarn about a Sunday paper drive to clean up the private school racket. Edwards discovered that one of his new pupils had been planted by the paper and with the aid of his crazy second in-charge, played by Arthur Howard, saved the day via several hilarious situations.

DIE ABWERBUNG
(The Resignation)
With Rosel Schaefer, Arne Madin, Lotte Brackebusch, Fritz Schmiedel, Horst Tappert
Director: Rolf Haedrich
Producer: Hessischer Rundfunk
Writer: Erich Kuby
60 Mins.; Thurs., 8:20 p.m.
West German TV, from Frankfurt

This one, intelligently written by Erich Kuby on request by Hessischer Rundfunk, is another (the fourth on local tv) contribution to the unholy German postwar situation. It's an ideological drama about the divided Germany and its tragic consequences, depicted via the fate of an East German family in a very convincing manner.

Story concerns a well-situated West German architect who visits a befriended family in East Germany. There is nothing but talk along the 60 minutes, but the dialog between the West German and the East Germans is so tight and powerful that the audience's interest never lets up. It reveals the tragedy of freedom-abiding people who are forced to live under a regime which their view upon life simply cannot accept. The East German woman in this temporarily plays with the thought to flee with her son to W-Germany, but then realizes that she must stay for the sake of her family and (she still owns an enterprise) also her employees who believe in her.

Piece ends without much hope. Author doesn't know how to solve this East-West problem. One East German thinks that war would be the only solution (since only war would make them get rid of the regime), but the author rejects such a "solution." War would probably mean the end of everything. He hopes for another solution, even if many, many years (for many perhaps too many?) may pass by. It's a piece that forces upon meditation. It may also open the eyes of those who have it so good that they are inclined to forget about those unfortunate people who know the word freedom only in connection with propaganda slogans. Acting was satisfactory. Direction by Rolf Haedrich deserved the compliment of being outstanding. Technical credits were very good. Hans.

KEEP IT IN THE FAMILY
With Bill Owen, others
Producer: John Irwin
Director: Colin Clews
30 Mins., Mon., 8 p.m.
Associated TeleVision from London

Making its bow in the fall schedules, the British version of this American game will have to overcome many teething troubles to justify its peak viewing slot. On its first outing, "Keep It In The Family" lacked any spirit of competition, chiefly because questions were far too simple. In his first resident role as emcee of a quiz show, actor and panelist Bill Owen muffed his chores and displayed nerves. The rules of the game were not clearly or completely explained and Owen was never master of the situation.

The families contesting in the opening show each comprising five members, were hardly taxed by the questions which included listing 10 male names beginning with "A"; 10 types of footwear; and 10 games played with one ball. Prizes, however, were attractive, ranging from a complete suite of dining room furniture, to a fully comprehensive sports outfit. This game has the makings of a solid quiz offering, but first the rough patches will have to be smoothed out. Bary.

PEOPLE IN TROUBLE
With Daniel Farson, others
Writers: Stanley Craig, Nikola Sterne
Director: Rollo Gamble
15 Mins., Tues., 10:45 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion from London

The effects of poliomyelitis and how victims cope with resultant disabilities was the subject for the first in a new series of Associated-Rediffusion's "People In Trouble." The program has earned a worthy high reputation in the past for its forthrightness and candid approach to a number of delicate subjects ranging from nudism to homesexuality and, under several different titles, has explored comical and serious facets of life. The offering is smoothly filmed and edited and the probe is conducted by Daniel Farson who has a likeable manner and doesn't pull his punches.

Program reviewed had Farson talking to some polio victims who had adapted themselves to a new way of life. One, an ex-Army officer completely paralyzed except for his head and permanently in an iron lung, demonstrated how he followed his new hobby between his teeth. He was completely dependent on his Army pension—and the authorities weren't too generous he revealed. Another victim, a doctor, confined to a wheel chair, said he now felt better adapted to practicing because he had more sympathy with his patients. Farson handled the interviews with tact and a firm hand to make it an absorbing program. Bary.

THE LARKINS
With Peggy Mount, David Kossoff, Ronan O'Casey, Ruth Trouncer, Hilary Bamberger, Shaun O'Riordan, others
Writer: Fred Robinson
45 Mins., Fri., 10:15 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

Scripter Fred Robinson makes his first entry into tv with a domestic comedy series about a cockney family which smacks of authenticity and has a lot of laugh material. Offering has two very competent headliners in Peggy Mount and David Kossoff and there's a solid supporting cast. Both production and sets are good and the show looks set to capture a fair slice of the late night audience.

First situation, subtitled "Wide Open House," had Peggy Mount staging a welcome home party for the son of the house who'd just completed his National Service. Kossoff opposed the idea on the grounds that it would be expensive and that the boy had never been more than just a few miles from home. But mother, the tough member of the household, got her way while pa acted as doorman. Bary.

CAMERA TEST
With Leslie Mitchell, others
Director: Graham Watts
7 Mins., Tues., Wed., 6:53 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion from London

Associated-Rediffusion has come up with an ambitious piece of tv in this short offering. Program is designed to put little known professional performers before the cameras to do their stuff as an audition in the hope that important show biz folk might be watching—and perhaps like what they see. Show has all the informality of an auditioning session and has Leslie Mitchell introducing the acts quickly and without any trimmings.

Performers in the program caught included a song duo, a folk singer and a songstress. Before each act, the artist's name and agent was revealed. Accompaniments were supplied by a piano. Acts were nothing outstanding, but a little coaching and polish could have turned any one of them into goodish bill fillers. Bary.

Foreign TV Followup

Sunday Night at the London Palladium

With this entry, "Sunday Night at the London Palladium" returns with big league talent in its best bill of the season. Paul Robeson was the headliner and the array of supporting acts was consistently good to make it a lively and entertaining program.

On his initial tv program a few weeks back, Robeson made little or no concession to popular taste, but this time his program had wide appeal. With Lawrence Brown accompanying on the invories his songalog started with "The Bonnie Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond" and finished with "Ole Man River," the number with which he has always been personally identified. His stint was completed with "Water Boy" and "Just A'Wearying For You" and provided an effective balance. His personality was as great as his voice.

One criticism which could be levelled at the bill was that there were too many singers. In addition to the star, there was Eve Boswell and the Kalin Twins, each delivering a couple of numbers. Both were okay as far as they went, but more contrast would have been welcome. Jay Marshall provided the main comedy with his combined patter and magico act. A shrewd and well-timed routine, which put the accent on laughs. Bruce Forsyth, the resident emcee, is settling down to the assignment and handled the "Beat the Clock" spot in a helpful and friendly way. But his solo turn, which comprised song and dance and piano bit, was somewhat labored. The Tiller Girls gave another fine demonstration of precision dancing. Myro.

Chelsea At Nine

The Granada-TV policy of putting an international star at the top of the bill of its "Chelsea At Nine" weekly 60-minute variety offering, was continued when Isaac Stern headed the layout (30). The violinist gave a glittering performance of Saint Saens' "Rondo Capriccioso." Some neat camera work added impact to Stern's faultless performance and captured his concentration. The Peter Knight orch, usually capable of any musical chores, did not however on this occasion come quite up to the standard required.

Making his second appearance on the program after scoring a hit the week before, American comedian Don Adams failed to please as much as he had done previously. His material was familiar and one routine about modern art was slow and obvious. Later in the show, however, he recaptured some of his former glory with his impressions on British films Hollywood style, and demonstrated his keen observation.

A couple of Spanish dancers, Susana & Jose made a pleasant impression with a Flamenco dance routine. From Paris, The Yan Marionettes provided an average display of puppetry. One of Britain's top swing bands, Johnny Dankworth's, made nice sounds on an original entitled "The Colonel's Tune," and in a tribute to Duke Ellington, when the outfit played a Dankworth arrangement of "Don't Get Around Much Any More." Band was mounted on what appeared to be scaffolding with the sections scattered and when the cameras began to roam it proved to be distracting. As usual, the Granadiers, show's resident song and dance team, turned out a couple of faultless entries. Emcee Lionel Murton appeared to have hit the right formula for handling the program and was concise, but radiated a lot of warmth. Bary.

Yule Shopping

through the Christmas season. Bell & Howell has bought into the same skein for two dates, Nov. 25 and Dec. 9.

Bell & Howell in an extensive drive to push camera film equipment has purchased half-hour segments of "Ellery Queen" on Dec. 5 and 19, and placed still another order on NBC for "Cimarron City" on Dec. 6 and Dec. 20.

Elgin Watch Co. will attempt to hypo its Xmas sales by way of partial sponsorship of CBS-TV's "Perry Mason" on Dec. 6 and 13, and the watch company has also bought into the Dec. 4 segment of "Playhouse 90," on CBS-TV. Also on CBS-TV, Van Heusen has purchased partial sponsorship of seven "Perry Mason" programs running through the Christmas season.

Ronson lighters in a stepped up drive for sales has signed to bankroll two one-quarter hour alternate week participations on the Arthur Godfrey daytime show starting this week and winding up in the latter part of December.

At ABC-TV, Elgin Watch has agreed to co-sponsor "Cheyenne" on Dec. 2. Mennen has placed an order for Gold Crest on American Bandstand on Dec. 11 and Mars also will pick up partial sponsorship of the Dick Clark show from the first of Oct. to the middle of Dec.

In addition to the heavy schedule of participations and one-shots that is currently being placed, the drive to pick up the Christmas coin is being conducted via specials. Hallmark cards will sponsor two specials, "Kiss Me Kate," on Nov. 21 on NBC-TV and the second "Christmas Tree" on Dec. 14 also on NBC. U. S. Time is pencilled in for two specs also, the first falling on Nov. 22 and the second on Dec. 22. Both are NBC-TV shows with Jerry Lewis.

At CBS, Shaeffer Pen has inked to sponsor "Little Women" on Oct. 16 and "The Gift of the Magi," on Dec. 9. Timex Watches has penned for the "Times All-Star Jazz Show" on Nov. 10 and a second jazz show on Dec. 1. Westclox Division of General Time, not to be outdone by Timex, will sponsor "Wonderful Town" on Nov. 30.

'Plot Thickens'

one week because of his hospitalization in Florida, and Judge Matthews arranged for an examination of his physical condition through the U. S. attorney's office in Miami before next Friday.

FCC's voluntary—and surprising—actions in the Miami channel 7 and Orlando channel 9 cases left tv industry spokesmen here wondering who is next.

The commission said its decision to investigate and review the cases was triggered by information in the hands of the Harris Subcommittee, known technically as the House Legislative Oversight Subcommittee.

The Harris group has discontinued further public hearings until after the November elections, and there remains a question of whether the subcommittee will continue to function after its present authority to do so expires Jan. 3. But the death of the Harris Subcommittee does not necessarily mean that the bloodhounds are off FCC's heels. Harris told VARIETY that the House Commerce Committee, which he also heads as chairman, has authority to probe FCC anytime it chooses.

FCC announced its doublebarreled investigation of Miami channel 7 and Orlando channel 9 Thursday (2).

The commission issued a "notice of inquiry" that a probe will be launched of expart goings-on in the struggle between Mid-Florida Television Corp. and WOR, Inc., for the Orlando outlet. FCC gave the channel to Mid-Florida, which now is conducting program tests on it with the call letters, WLOF-TV. The U. S. Court of Appeals upheld FCC's decision favoring Mid-Florida last May 15.

The FCC "notice" concluded: "The commission will report the results of its inquiry and will take such further action as in its judgment appeals appropriate at that time."

The words kindling the most interest were "such further action."

In the other development, FCC notified Biscayne Television Corp. that it is withholding any action on two AM-FM applications the company has filed until it completes a probe of the grant of Miami channel 7 to that company. The applications involve the proposed sale of the company's AM and FM stations (WCKR-AM-FM) to Dade Broadcasting Co., as well as the request of the company that it's expiring FM license be renewed. The AM-FM sale application was filed May 2. Biscayne's tv station, WCTK-TV, target of the FCC look-in, has no application before FCC.

Testimony and exhibits in the Harris Subcommittee's record, FCC said, "contain allegations which raise a question as to the propriety of certain means employed on behalf of Biscayne" to win the Miami channel 7 permit. The AM-FM applications will be laid aside until the tv matter is finished, FCC said.

Meanwhile, public hearings ended late Wednesday (1) on whether the Public Service Television Co. license for Miami channel 10 should be affirmed or cancelled. Judge Horace Stern, retired Pennsylvania Supreme Court chief Justice who is acting as a special hearing examiner for FCC in the case, indicated he will strive to have his "initial decision" completed by Christmas. Attorneys involved in the proceding agreed that the record, still to receive certain legal documents, will be closed as of Oct. 10, with final oral arguments to be held Nov. 17.

IDOLESCENTS IN DUAL ROLES

All-Industry Radio Music Panel Primping for ASCAP-BMI Talks

The All-Industry Radio Music License Committee, representing a cross-section of the broadcast industry, met in New York last week to prepare for the upcoming negotiations with both the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers and Broadcast Music Inc. for a new deal. Emanuel Dannett, of the law firm, McGoldrick, Dannett, Horowitz & Golub, was selected as counsel.

The current licensing pacts with ASCAP and BMI run out this year. The broadcast committee indicated that it was ready to start immediate negotiations. In its deal with the television industry last year, ASCAP agreed to a carryover of the old pact's terms into the new deal and there's a strong likelihood that the Society will ask for a similar deal with the radio broadcasters. ASCAP is currently getting about 2% of the broadcasters' gross revenues for its blanket licenses. That now adds up to about $10,000,000 annually. BMI gets about one-half of this figure from the radio broadcasters.

Col Sales Revamp In Pop, Longhair

Columbia Records is realigning the sales setup of its pop and longhair divisions. Personnel reshuffling was made by William P. Gallagher, Col's director of sales.

In the pop area, David R. Kapralik has been set as merchandise manager for singles. He will also be manager of field communications. To increase coordination between single records promotion and popular artists' relations, Frank Campana and Robert Burrell have been named managers of single records promotion. Kapralik has set William Levy as director of field communications handling diskery's sales newsletters.

Meanwhile, at the longhair end of the diskery, Peter Munves, formerly coordinator of special merchandise, is taking over as merchandise manager responsible for the international merchandising of the Masterworks catalog. John Woolford, as manager of Masterworks promotion, will assume full responsibility for field promotion of classical product. In addition, Woolford will handle artists' relations for Masterworks, including coordination of tours and personal appearances.

Court Overrules UI On Gottlieb-Fordis '5th' Plea

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Superior Court Judge Alfred Gittleson has overruled demurrers by Universal-International in the suits of Arthur Gottlieb and Victor Fordis—two Local 47, AFM, members—who were fired by the studio for taking the Fifth Amendment before a House Un-American Activities Committee in 1956.

Ruling means that the case, which has been dragging for two years, will finally be set for a trial.

Tunesters are suing UI with the support of Local 47 and attorneys A. L. Wirin, Robert Rissman and Paul Posner.

The AFM's position is that UI violated the contract it had at that time with the union by firing Gottlieb and Fordis for taking the Fifth.

Redd-E Label's Buildup

Music publisher Redd Evans is on a buildup binge for his Redd-E disk label.

Diskery, which is now rolling with the Fields-Madera orch slicing of "Holy Mackerel," has added crooner Mel Garrett, thrush Jeanne Burns, The Idols, a new vocal group and El Rojo orch to the talent roster.

Shad Exiting Mercury

Bob Shad is planning to leave his post of eastern artists & repertoire chief at Mercury Records in November. Shad took over the top spot in the east when Hugo Peretti and Luigi Creatore switched from Merc to Roulette a couple of years ago.

Shad is now mulling a new disk tie or going into business for himself. No replacement has been set for him at Merc as yet.

20th-Fox Label's Blockbuster Mood (A la Pix) on LPs

Taking the "blockbuster" peg from its parent motion picture company, 20th Century-Fox, the 20th-Fox label is preparing a similar campaign for its LP schedule. According to diskery's prexy Henry Onorati, firm will avoid flooding the album market with releases but instead stick to a schedule that will call for about five sets a month with one blockbuster in the batch that will receive special treatment.

Initial blockbuster from the 20th-Fox diskery will be a two-pocket LP set featuring the late Glenn Miller's orch. Package will feature the soundtracks from two of 20th's pix in which Miller appeared. The films are "Sun Valley Serenade" (1941) and "Orchestra Wives" (1942). The deal for the package was arranged between the Miller estate and RCA Victor.

The Victor label came into the picture because it originally had the rights to the soundtrack sides. Some of the tunes from the soundtrack had been issued by Victor on two 10-inch LP sets but the packages were subsequently filed in the vaults when Miller re-recorded the same songs for 12-inch packages.

The Miller package, says Onorati, will be the first in a series of soundtrackers that will go under the heading of "From The Treasury of 20th Century-Fox." Onorati figures that with the move-in of so many pic companies into the disk business a new line of cooperation will develop because of the fact that many artists in pictures have been pacted by rival labels.

Onorati headed for the Coast Monday (6) to huddle with the studio brass on other soundtrack projects.

SHULMAN G.M. OF EPIC IN EXIT OF NIELSEN

Albert Shulman is replacing Bill Nielsen as general manager of Epic Records. Label, which was launched in 1953 as a subsid of Columbia Records, releases in the pop and classical fields.

Nielsen, who had been with the Columbia operation for the past 13 years and general manager of Epic since the first of this year, is now dickering with several other diskeries for a new tie. Before taking over the general manager's spot, Nielsen had been Epic's sales chief.

Shulman is moving over to Epic from Col's Custom Record division which he headed since 1955. He joined Col in 1941 and after a three-year hitch in the Army came back to the diskery as production expediter in New York.

New Destiny Label

Bob Archibald, former band musician, is swinging into the disk business with Destiny Records.

Firm, which is currently lining up artists for a recording teeoff in about a month, will hit the pop and jazz fields.

THEY WRITE 'EM AND CHIRP 'EM

By MIKE GROSS

An offshoot of the pop music biz's current "accent on youth" is the emergence of the crooner-composer. It marks a distinct difference from the old days of Tin Pan Alley when there was a definite separation between the songwriter and the singer. "Today," a vet publishing man pointed out, "the music-bent youngsters have an impulse to write as well as sing."

Beverly Ross, 22-year-old out of a New Jersey chicken farm, is the latest to get in on the crooner-composer (or in her case, writer-warbler) parlay. She's being prepped for a prime promotional buildup by Columbia Records and she's been nabbed to a cleffer's pact by E. B. Marks, with Arnold Shaw, firm's general professional manager, guiding her in a managerial capacity.

The Col push on Miss Ross marks the first time that a major label has put its energy behind a femme in the writer-singer sweepstakes. The field, heretofore, has been dominated by young males.

Doubling Scorecard

On the disclick list, currently, the crooner-composer tandem is working for Robin Luke with "Susie Darlin'" (Dot); Jack Scott with "My True Love" (Carlton); Eddie Cochran with "Summertime Blues" (Liberty); Paul Anka with "So It's Goodbye" (ABC-Paramount); and Don Gibson with "Look Who's Blue (RCA Victor); and in this week's current releases there are the crooning, composing contributions of Bobby Darin's "You're Mine" and "Mighty Might Man" on the Atco label and

Cap's 33 Hi-Fi Sets for 'Fest'

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Capitol Records is introducing one of its strongest fall album releases in company's history with the October distribution of "International Festival of Music" — 33 new hi-fi packages.

The releases, comprised of 17 new pop recordings, six FDS classical recordings, three in the Capitol of the World international series, and seven new Christmas music albums—all go out in release this week.

Artists repped in the pop catagory include Jackie Gleason, Del Courtney's orch, Billy May, Freddy Martin, Lou Busch, Stan Kenton, Red Nichols, Tommy Sands, Fred Waring, Pee Wee Hunt, Cliffie Stone, Bobby Hackett, Ethel Ennis, June Christy, the Four Freshmen, Keely Smith and Sam Butera & The Witnesses.

Lampley, Prince Added To WB A&R by Avakian

George Avakian is bolstering his artists & repertoire staff at the newly launched Warner Bros. with Cal Lampley and Bob Prince. Both Lampley and Prince worked under Avakian when he was in charge of pop albums at Columbia Records. Avakian now heads a&r at WB.

Lampley and Prince will assist Avakian in producing, editing and planning. Prince, incidentally will also record for the label. His first project will be his own composition, "N.Y. Export Op: Jaz," which was introduced this season in ballet form by Jerome Robbins' company.

The WB label is shaping as a stamping ground for exitees from the Col label. In addition to Avakian, Prince and Lampley, other ex-Columbians are prexy James B. Conkling and sales veepee Hal Cook.

Randy Wood's 'Wait Till After Xmas' For Major Splurge in Stereo Field

By HERM SCHOENFELD

A reformed skeptic regarding stereo's chances, Randy Wood, Dot Records chief, now estimates that the new disk development will provide a tremendous shot-in-the-arm to the industry during the next few months. The full impact of stereo, he predicted, will be felt immediately after the Christmas holidays when a vast number of new phonographs, equipped for stereo, will be in operation in the home.

Wood stated that such inventory problems of stocking the right amounts of monaural and stereo disks will be solved within 18 months. He was confident that by that time the industry engineers will have developed a fully and truly "compatible" stereo disk which could also be played on conventional machines. Such a development will obsolete the present monaural LPs and permit the dealers to stock up only on the compatible disk.

While the disk industry gross has tapered off somewhat from last year during the first half of this year, Wood stated that stereo is now proving to be a "rejuvenating" influence on sales. It's getting consumers into the stores to ask questions about and even to buy the stereo disks. The Dot prexy estimated that about 7% of the total album market is currently stereo.

Wood, whose sale of Dot Records to Paramount Pictures a few years

The Delayed 'Cover'

Morty Craft, artists & repertoire topper at MGM Records, believes in giving a song a second chance. Craft recently assigned "It's All in The Game" to Tommy Edwards although the crooner had cut it five years before for MGM. The new slicing is currently a hot pop seller.

Craft is now looking for a repeat of that pattern with Bill Farrell's "Circus." Farrell recorded "Circus" for the first time six years ago under the MGM banner. Now Craft is bringing out Farrell with a new slicing of the tune under the Cub label, an MGM subsid.

ASCAP's Jan.-Aug. $15,872,000 Melon; 400 at Coast Gab

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

The American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers distributions during the period between January through August of this year will total $15,872,000. Out of that coin the melon was split so that the membership received $5,448,000 in April, $5,308,000 in July, and the remaining amount goes out this month. At this rate, ASCAP's total distribution for the year will be around $23,000,000, including the foreign dividends.

Figures were disclosed Sept. 30 when approximately 400 ASCAPers gathered in the Regency Room of the Sheraton West (formerly the Town House) at a semi-annual meeting. Membership was told that the income derived from licensees, interest on U.S. Treasury notes and from dues totalled $19,291,000 for the eight-month period.

ASCAP's operating expenses, which included compensation and salaries, legal retainers, rents, etc., in this same period came to $3,418,880—the same as in 1956 and 1957.

Comptroller George Hoffman made the financial report for treasurer Frank Conner, who couldn't make the meeting.

A little excitement hit the two-hour conclave when Ned Washington, one of the west coast direc-

MICHAELIS PUTTING NEHRU ON DISK-FILM

Arnold Michaelis, president of Recorded Communications Inc., flies out Friday (10) for an Oct. 28-29 disking session with Prime Minister Nehru of India in New Delhi.

Michaelis will do the Nehru "recorded portrait" also in film form, for telecasting, besides the disking. Others in his series have been Adlai Stevenson, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Richard Rodgers, Oscar Hammerstein 2d and most recently Maurice Chevalier (still unreleased). He also plans one with Danny Kaye.

Mrs. Michaelis is accompanying, and on their return from the New Delhi appointments they will stop off in Rome, Paris and London to film and LP-record other politico and show biz personalities.

Marcuse's 'Alley' Book

Maxwell Marcuse's "Tin Pan Alley In Gaslight" ("a saga of the songs that made the gray 90s gay") is being published by Century House.

Otto Harbach has authored a foreword.

RCA Switches Disk Personnel

In a move to streamline its operation, RCA Victor made a wide reshuffle of its personnel last week in the merchandising and promotion departments.

Alfred Leonard, formerly east coast promotion manager for Victor's Red Seal division, has been upped to administrator of Red Seal merchandising. Gil McKean, who had been handling Victor's tape line, has been promoted to administrator of pop package merchandising. Both will report to Dave Finn, the diskery's merchandising exec.

In the ad-promotion-publicity department under Bill Alexander, Herb Helman has been upped to manager of the department of press and information. He'll be assisted by Bob Kotlowitz, for albums, and Jack Dunn, for pop singles. Meantime, Ann Fulchino, who was handling pop singles has been promoted to a new spot with Victor's Coast office as publicity administrator there. Also reporting to Alexander will be Bernie Miller, who was promoting Victor's artists on television but is now managing promotion for the Red Seal division.

In field personnel switches, Merritt Kirk has been named manager of field sales in the Frisco area while John Trifero has been moved into the field in the Philadelphia area. Both report to Sal Peruggi, field sales manager.

Seeco Launches New Low-Priced LPs in Cuba

Sid Siegel, president of Seeco Records, launched his new $1.98 Tropical LP line in Cuba last week. During the Havana preem of the new lowprice Latino line, Siegel also revealed that from now on the entire Seeco and Tropical catalog will be pressed in Cuba.

The pressing will be done in a new plant equipped with 10 injection mold presses. During his Cuban stay, Siegel will head recording sessions with Celia Cruz, Sonora Mantancera and Carlos Argentinos. They'll be released under the Seeco banner.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Beverly Ross (Columbia): "STOP LAUGHING AT ME" (E. B. Marks†) has a takeoff potential for newcomer Beverly Ross who gives this country-flavored tune a rocking ride for juve appeal. "HEADLIGHTS" (E. B. Marks†) is a moody ballad that gets its spinning chances from an effective multi-tracked vocal.

Keely Smith (Capitol): "YOU ARE MY LOVE" (Weiss & Barry†) is a topnotch ballad that gets a warm and likable reading and should win lots more fans to the Keely Smith side. "THAT OLD BLACK MAGIC" (Famous*) is given an energetic treatment by Miss Smith and her partner, Louis Prima.

Vaughn Monroe (RCA Victor): "GHOST TRAINS" (Hill Range†) is an offshoot of "Ghost Riders In The Sky" but without same takeoff power. "TEN CHAPERONES" (Knollwood*) sets up a latino beat and a novel lyric idea in an appealing vocal manner.

Bobby Freeman (Josie): "NEED YOUR LOVE" (Clockus-Benell†) has the r'n'r beat that usually gets the femme teeners screaming for more. "SHAME ON YOU, MISS JOHNSON" (Clockus- Benell†) is a wild rocker pegged for juke appreciation.

Dick Lee (Metro): "HAVE GUITAR, WILL TRAVEL" (Planetary*) is a swinger with a good chance to go far on the spinning circuit because of forceful delivery and bright backing. "MY LOVE FOR YOU" (Figure†) is in the big ballad groove but doesn't have enough staying power.

Neil Steven & The Dee-Vines (Brunswick): "WHAT COULD BE BETTER" (Chappell*) blends a swinging and rocking beat for the new vocal group in a way that could turn their first side into a hot spinning item. "MORE AND MORE" (Cornell*) is a run-of-the-mill rocking ballad but the group does well by it.

Dick Haymes (Sunbeam): "AS YOUNG AS YOU FEEL" (Vernon*) returns Dick Haymes to a warm baladeering groove that will make the jocks pay attention. "SUFFER" (Sunbeam†) builds a new disk potential for the crooner with a catchy beat and a winning vocal.

Gino & Gina (Mercury): "BRAND NEW PENNY" (Figure†) shines like another good spinning bet for this young duo who do it this time with a calypso-styled item. "I DON'T LOVE YOU" (Figure†) takes a pleasant lilter for an appealing vocal spin.

Larry Ellis (Dale): "NOTHING YOU CAN DO" (World*) has a catch-on chance because of the way Larry Ellis handles the rocking ballad mood. "BUZZ GOES THE BEE" (World*) flies at a happy pace that's built for lotsa juke play.

Young Jesse (Atlantic): "THAT'S ENOUGH FOR ME" (Tiger†) rocks hard enough to win a good reaction in the jukebox market. "MARGIE" (Miller-Fisher*) gets a rocking dressing but it doesn't do the oldie much good.

Jan Murray (MGM): "TREASURE HUNT" (Integrity-JanMur*) is a fairly lively item pegged on the title of Jan Murray's tv show —but let's face it, a singer he ain't. "SO LONG, AU REVOIR, ARRIVEDERCI" (Integrity-JanMur*) won't mean anything in any language.

Dottie Johnson (Metro): "PARADISE" (Feist*) gets an original jazz vocal interpretation that will probably win over some jocks. "STREET OF DREAMS" (Miller*) is paved with offbeat vocalistics that will find friends among the hip set.

Denise Lor (20th-Fox): "EVERYTHING I DO" (Victor Young*) shows off Denise Lor in a pretty ballad setting that makes for okay late-hour programming. "YOU'RE EVERYWHERE" (Bryden†) continues her slow ballad mood and it's also well done but a doubtful bet for the commercial market.

Jerry Lynn Sands (Arcade): "WHAT I WOULDN'T GIVE" (Valley Brook*) is a rocking ballad that the juke set may find enjoyable. "CRAZY IN LOVE" (Arcade*) works a neat latino beat into a fair item for the terping teeners.

Huelyn Duvall (Challenge): "JULIET" (Golden West†) is yet another title pegged on a femme name to get a rocking ride that the juke mob may find worthwhile because of Huelyn Duvall's energetic delivery. "FRIDAY NIGHT ON A DOLLAR BILL" (Golden West†) should pay off in some respects with the coin machine crowd.

EXTENDED PLAY REVIEW

Paul Bain: "THE LOVE BALLADS OF PAUL BAIN" (RCA Victor). An ex-member of the Wayfarers, Paul Bain does extremely well in solo on four folk items. Working with arrangements and orch and chorus conducted by Bill Stegmeyer, Bain gets an ear-appealing sound into "I Know Where I'm Going," "Kitty Is My Darling," "So Early in The Morning" and "Blow The Candle Out."

Best Bets

TOMMY EDWARDS.....LOVE IS ALL WE NEED (MGM).....Mr. Music Man

Tommy Edwards' "Love Is All We Need" (Sheldon) comes right on the heels of his clicko "It's All in the Game" and should cash in similarly. It's a good ballad with a rocking touch for the big payoff. "Mr. Music Man" (Yukon*) works up a neat shuffling blues beat into a likable side.*

PAT BOONE.....I'LL REMEMBER TONIGHT (Dot).....Mardi Gras March

Pat Boone's "I'll Remember Tonight" (Feist) is a slick ballad that gets top pop appeal from his easy vocal styling. Tune's from 20th's "Mardi Gras," giving it a hefty exposure potential. "The Mardi Gras March" (Feist*) has a happy Dixieland beat that will win it juke attention.*

DON RONDO.....I COULD BE A MOUNTAIN (Jubilee).....The Great Adventure

Don Rondo's "I Could Be a Mountain" (Pincus & Sons) is a solid swinger belted in a style that's surefire for big returns. "The Great Adventure" (Planetary*) offers the crooner a good beat on which to deliver an okay lyric.*

TAB HUNTER.....JEALOUS HEART (Warner Bros.).....Lonesome Road

Tab Hunter's "Jealous Heart" (Acuff-Rose†) looks like a winner for the new label because of the way he takes over a hillbilly-styling for pop payoffs. "Lonesome Road" (Paramount) is headed for strong spins, too, due to crooner's hot performance and a striking backing.*

BOBBY DARIN.....YOU'RE MINE (Atco).....Mighty Might Man

Bobby Darin's "You're Mine" (Portrait†) has all the rocking ballad ingredients that the juke set turns into a quick click. "Mighty Might Man" (Portrait†) makes the kind of noise that the kids usually go for.

MIKE PRESTON....A HOUSE, A CAR, A WEDDING RING (London).....My Lucky Love

Mike Preston's "A House, A Car, A Wedding Ring" (Peter Maurice) has a soft ballad quality but it's handled in such a way that even the rocking generation will bring it into the payoff circle. "My Lucky Love" (Bentley House†) is a light-hearted folk-styled item with a beat that's made for juke action.*

Album Reviews

Mitch Miller Orch: "More Sing Along With Mitch" (Columbia). Earlier this year Mitch Miller came along with a strong LP-selling idea in "Sing Along With Mitch." This is a natural followup and should do as well because it retains the same song-participation idea excellently led off by Miller's orch and chorus. "The Whiffenpoof Song," "Carolina In The Morning," "Shine On Harvest Moon" and "Sweet Adeline" are some of the faves in the set. And once again the lyrics are printed on the back cover to help along the "sing along" angle.

Dakota Staton: "Dynamic!" (Capitol). Dakota Staton is one of the few new singers who has made a dent in the disk picture solely through the LP route. She scored the first two times out ("Late, Late Show" and "In The Night") and "In The Night") and in this, her third LP showcasing, she once again shows that she's one of the top song stylists around today. Her jazz approach is fresh and exciting (her "Anything Goes" is a solid sampling), making the set a selling natural. "Little Girl Blue," "It Could Happen To You," "Cherokee" and "They All Laughed" are other standouts in the package which has been arranged and conducted by Sid Feller.

Melachrino Orch: "Lisbon At Twilight" (RCA Victor). George Melachrino, the British maestro, digs into the Portuguese tune catalog for the "Lisbon At Twilight" repertoire. The ballads are soft and sentimental with just enough melodic schmaltz added to make it a good package for late-hour programming and the mood music mob.

Martin Denny Orch: "Primitiva" (Liberty). Martin Denny's stock in trade has been "exotic" sounds with which he's already scored with two "Exotica" albums. For his current musical excursion Denny has selected a repertoire from such places as Africa, Burma, Trinidad, Peru and Hawaii and has picked up offbeat instruments to give an authentic feel to the melodies. It will be a hot item for those who dig the Denny sound and the cleavage on the cover model will help stimulate the sales, too.

Sue Evans: "Sweet Sue Evans" (Dot). Working with a songbag that for the most part steers away from the obvious standards, Sue Evans has come up with a quiet and tasty package that will eventually draw a following to her side. The tunes have an intime quality and come across the grooves with a warm mood that makes for easy listening.

The Playmates: "At Play With The Playmates" (Roulette). The Playmates came to the disk fore only recently with a pop click in "Jo-Ann." Group belongs to the young disk buyers and they'll be kept happy with recap of "Jo-Ann" and such other of their pop single releases as "Don't Go Home" and "The Day I Died."

Frank Chacksfield Orch: "Love Letters In The Sand" (London). The title song plus 11 other standards are given a comfortable and ear-appealing treatment in Frank Chacksfield's hands. The mood is always rich and pleasing, making a programming natural and a good buy for the mood music shelf. In the package are such as "April Love," "They Didn't Believe Me," and "You Are Too Beautiful."

Zizi Jeanmarie-Roland Petit-Les Frere Jacques-Andre Popp Orch: "Paris—1923" (Columbia). Here's a fun-packed variety package pegged on the zingy beat of the mid-'20s with a Gallic approach. It's a mixture of vocals by Zizi Jeanmaire, Roland Petit and Les Frere Jacques backed by the hip Popp orch which also comes in for some straight instrumental chores. Jeanmaire's "Charleston," Popp's "My Blue Heaven" and Petit's "I Want To Be Happy" are beauts. There are also some strictly French items and a knowledge of the lingo isn't necessary to get the musical point.

Stanley Black Orch: "Girls, Girls, Girls" (London). Stanley Black has packed this package with 32 tunes pegged on tune-titles with femme names. It's a bright musical affair, highlighted by Black's piano, and runs right through the opening "Lily of Laguna" to the "Goodnight Irene" windup.

Fernando Lamas: "With Love" (Roulette). Fernando Lamas hits the romantic song with a multilingual attack that's sure to win the femme disk buyers. In English, French and Spanish he makes the most of a fair crooning quality to a melodic setting supplied by Glenn Osser's orch. "Love Is Here To Stay," "I Love Paris," "You Belong To My Heart" (in Spanish and English) and "Passing By" (in French and English) are samples of his taste in tunes.

Luis Arcaraz Orch: "Latin Airs" (RCA Victor). Luis Arcaraz works both sides of the border for his repertoire in this package, but everything comes out with his distinctive Latino touch. Such as "I've Got The World On A String" and "Ain't Misbehavin" from gringo-land and "Perfume De Amor" and "Si Me Comprendieras" from the chile belt, make it a neatly varied instrumental set.

The Mastersounds: "Kismet" (World Pacific). The Mastersounds, a chamber jazz quintet with a quietly sophisticated modern style, climbs aboard the showtune wagon with this exercise on the Robert Wright-George Forrest score for "Kismet." It's exotically flavored jazz which gets some pretty sound effects from the vibes and electric bass and guitar.

"The Merry Yodeler" (Vanguard). Yodeling, in all its varied facets, is given a charming treatment in this collection from the Austrian Alps. Performed by native musicians and singers from that area, this collection of folk music features vocals by various femme and male singers, including one unusual yodeling bass, and a typical instrumental combo with accordion in the lead.

Ethel Smith: "Bright and Breezy" (Decca). A virtuoso on the Hammond, Ethel Smith is extending her series of Decca LPs. Backed by a rhythm combo, she pulls out all the stops of her organ on evergreens like "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," "The Syncopated Clock," "Easter Parade," "March of the Toys" and others.

Beverly Kelly: "Beverly Kelly Sings" (Audio Fidelity). The list of jazz thrushes on disks continues to grow and the latest to enter the sweepstakes is Beverly Kelly. She locks to hold her own in the competition. Miss Kelly has a bright and individual way with a song that gives it a jazz coloring of considerable appeal. Also in her favor is a tasty repertoire of evergreens neatly instrumentalized by the Pat Moran Trio. Gros.

Sissler Buys Blue Ridge

Joseph E. Sissler, producer of WTTG's teleshows, "Don Owens Jamboree" and "Blue Grass Champs," has acquired the Blue Ridge Record Co. Sissler heads a syndicate that purchased the label from the estate of the late Noah Adams, diskery's founder.

The Blue Ridge line was active in the country & western field during the late 1940s and early '50s. Many of the original disks, including those cut by Bill Clifton and Jim Eanes, will be reissued.

Big 3 Professional Dept. Put Under Norman Foley; Strupp Aide to Scopp

The Big Three (Robbins, Feist & Miller) will reorganize its professional department so that the firms will be under the overall supervision of Norman Foley. Move stems from the exiting of Murray Baker as professional chief of the Robbins firm by the first of the year.

Foley, who had been professional manager of Feist, will be in charge of the professional setup which will include Hy Ross for Robbins, Roy Kohn for Feist and Ted Black for Miller. Ed Slattery will continue as coordinator of professional activities and assistant to Mickey Scopp, Big Three's general manager.

Oscar Robbins will remain as standard exploitation manager with Al Kohn as his assistant. Coast professional activity will be maintained as before by Ed McHarg and Hy Kantor with Barney McDevitt assisting. Erwin Barge and Bill White will continue as contact men in Chicago and Cincinnati, respectively.

In another move, Werner Strupp has been brought in as administrative assistant to Scopp. Strupp has been in the music biz for the past 14 years and was formerly affiliated with BMI and the Harry Fox office.

Firm also is planning a conclave at its New York homeoffice of its domestic and foreign professional staffs during the week of Oct. 27. A similar professional powwow was held about three years ago.

This time foreign representation will be augmented by representatives of Affiliated Music Publishers Ltd. Affiliated is the Big Three foreign company owned jointly with the Day interests of London. Alan Holmes of Robbins Music Ltd., and Paddy Crookshank, Big Three's European representative, will plane in from London for the meet. Coast and midwest reps will also attend.

Agenda for the meetings will be set up by Foley in his new capacity of firm's general professional manager. He'll be assisted by Slattery. Scopp will handle policy matters covering domestic and professional activities and trade operations in general.

AFN Admits Fake On Hit-Tune Show, Gives It the Boot

Frankfurt, Oct. 7.

One of the most popular shows on the American Forces Network, headquartered at Hoechst, near here, ended its run on Sept. 28. With the crises besetting quiz shows in the States, AFN officials admitted this show has been a fake—but one that they've been able to justify in the interests of good listening.

Show, titled "AFN Request Parade," has been a half-hour Sunday afternoon roundup of "the most popular tunes" at each of half a dozen AFN stations in Germany, plus "the most popular tunes" of several leading American disk jockeys.

Listeners have occasionally queried how it is that the same tune is never repeated on the show by any of the various disk jockeys picking "the top tune" of their area. And, admitted one AFN official, "In the interests of good listening, the show has been planned in advance. How'd you like to hear a request show that consists of just the same record played eight times in a row?" he reasoned.

Show, which is aired Sunday, was generally planned the previous Monday, when the show producer, Bob Britsch of Berlin, called several AFN stations to tell various disk jockeys that they had been chosen for the next "Request Parade." DJs then either told Britsch which tune they'd select as the top for their area, to make sure of no duplication, or cut several tapes announcing several numbers as "the tops." Show was then packaged, via tape, in Berlin on Wednesday or Thursday.

Kenny Scott Leaves Everyone at Jazz Fest Out on Limb in Pitt

Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.

Kenny Scott, a young local impresario, left the performers in his "Jazz Festival" holding the bag here when two shows scheduled for 3,800-seat Syria Mosque last Thursday (2) night were cancelled at the last minute. When less than 100 showed up for the first of the pair of scheduled performances, Scott took a powder and the curtain stayed down.

Artists billed for the attraction included Chris Connor, James Moody, Johnny Griffin, Babs Gonzales and King Pleasure. Understood Scott had the same lineup two nights before in Buffalo, where he also laid a bomb, but promised the entertainers they'd be paid when he got off the hook in Pittsburgh.

Flock of others, besides the singers and musicians, got hurt. Bob Baltz, who operates an agency downtown at Volkweins, got hooked for the tickets and his time, while the newspapers were stuck for more than $2,000 in advertising. Baltz, who was already on hand at the Mosque boxoffice when the cancellation was announced, hung on to the small amount of money he had taken in to enable him to make refunds to seatholders.

More Gershwiniana

The 60th birthday of George Gershwin (born in Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 26, 1898) has keyed a flock of Gershwiniana books. Two of the best just published are "The Gershwin Years" by Edward Jablonski and Lawrence D. Stewart (Doubleday; $6.95) and Merle Armitage's "George Gershwin: Man and Legend" (Duell, Sloan & Pearce; $4.50). Former, for the first time, gives a definitive closeup on both lyricist Ira Gershwin and his famed, late composer-brother who, has eclipsed him, in public acclaim. Closeup is also literal as this is a graphic words-and-pictures book of a calibre not encountered in previous Gershwin books, of which there have been several (David Ewen, Armitage previously, and others). Many of the pix are from Ira's personal collection.

One of the best things in the new Merle Armitage book is a reprise of a 1938 piece written by Ira about George. Basically, the composer is appraised first as the man, then as a musician whom the critics, made a legend, even within his own limited time span (he died at 38 in 1937). Abel.

MGA's Ready to Battle AFM for Disks Radio-TV; Trust Funds Win N.Y. Round

WB Yens Angel Role To Get Wings Wet On Original Cast Albums

The new Warner Bros. label wants to get into the original Broadway cast album sweepstakes—and it's willing to pay for it.

Diskery execs, who've been stymied so far in their efforts to latch on to musicals projected for this season, are now mulling the angle of assisting in the financing of a new tuner so they can wrap up the original cast rights in advance.

An undisclosed script, with score already written, has been making the rounds of WB brass in the N.Y. office and it's expected that a decision will be forthcoming soon.

The decision to get into tuner financing, according to a WB exec, is to show the Broadway producers that WB, as new as it is, can record, handle and merchandise as original cast album as well as any major.

Hoagland's Educ'l Post

Ben Hoagland Jr. has been set as director of educational music at Shapiro, Bernstein. He formerly was sales promotion manager for S-B and its affiliated firms, Skidmore, Columbia Pictures, and Mood.

He has been in the educational publishing field since 1954 and at one time was with Fred Waring's Youth Workshops.

Cecil Read, head of the Musicians Guild of America, will shortly move to challenge the jurisdiction of the American Federation of Musicians in the radio-tv and disk fields. Read, who headquarters on the Coast where MGA has already won control in the major studios, stated while in New York last week that under the labor laws he can file for bargaining choice elections within 60 days before expiration of the AFM pacts. The disk industry pact with the AFM runs out Dec. 31 while the radio-tv deal expires a month later.

Read is still focusing his attack on the Musicians Performance Trust Funds which, he contends, has diverted wages that should have gone to working musicians into a general pot which is being used to buttress administration support in smaller locals. At the present time, dissident musicians on the Coast have tied up about $1,300,000 in royalties slated for the Funds.

Meantime, Samuel R. Rosenbaum, the MPTF trustee, won a round in his N.Y. court battle to get the Funds declared a valid setup. For that purpose, Rosenbaum brought suit some time ago against the major disk companies and the AFM to get a declaratory judgement in his favor. Supporters of the Coast musicians recently moved to dismiss the Rosenbaum suit.

The motion to dismiss was denied by N.Y. Supreme Court Justice Henry Epstein who stated that Rosenbaum's action was wholly justified and any attempt to transfer jurisdiction over the Trust Funds to the California courts was not warranted by the facts. "To compel the N.Y. trustee," the judge stated, "to go 3,000 miles to submit to a jurisdiction and there to litigate matters, all of whose activities are centered in N.Y., does not appeal to the court as the exercise of a wise discretion."

Victor-Camden In With Cuffo EP's To Up Yule Pot

RCA Victor has opened the Christmas season in the disk biz with an extensive release of 13 Victor and four Camden packages and a big promotion involving a free 45 EP for consumers. The dealers will be able to earn quantities of the EP for distribution to their customers via purchases of the Victor Xmas merchandise.

The Victor holiday packages are spotlighting Harry Belafonte, Perry Como, the Ames Bros., the Radio City Music Hall Symphony & Chorus, and various LP bestsellers from the catalog. One of the new offerings is titled "Christmas With Grandma Moses," with traditional songs and carols by various groups and narration by the artist who reminisces about her childhood. Among the Camden releases are sets by the Robert Shaw Chorale, Hugo Winterhalter and Domenica Savino.

The free EP, packaged in a four-color sleeve, contains five selections from the Xmas release. One side of the jacket displays a "Merry Christmas From Your RCA Victor Record Dealer" message.

RCA Victor v.p. and general manager George R. Marek said that the novel use of a 45 giveaway to consumers "has been created with the dealers' needs in mind." He stated that "we are trying to help build consumer traffic in every dealer's store in the country." For point-of-sale use, Victor has developed window displays, streamers, shopping bags and brochures.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Beverly Ross (Columbia): "STOP LAUGHING AT ME" (E. B. Marks†) has a takeoff potential for newcomer Beverly Ross who gives this country-flavored tune a rocking ride for juve appeal. "HEADLIGHTS" (E. B. Marks†) is a moody ballad that gets its spinning chances from an effective multi-tracked vocal.

Keely Smith (Capitol): "YOU ARE MY LOVE" (Weiss & Barry†) (Figure†) takes a pleasant lilter for an appealing vocal spin.

Larry Ellis (Dale): "NOTHING YOU CAN DO" (World*) has a catch-on chance because of the way Larry Ellis handles the rocking ballad mood. "BUZZ GOES THE BEE" (World*) flies at a happy pace that's built for lotsa juke play.

Young Jesse (Atlantic): "THAT'S ENOUGH FOR ME" (Tiger†) is a topnotch ballad that gets a warm and likable reading and should win lots more fans to the Keely Smith side. "THAT OLD BLACK MAGIC" (Famous*) is given an energetic treatment by Miss Smith and her partner, Louis Prima.

Vaughn Monroe (RCA Victor): "GHOST TRAINS" (Hill Range†) is an offshoot of "Ghost Riders In The Sky" but without same take-off power. "TEN CHAPERONES" (Knollwood*) sets up a latino beat and a novel lyric idea in an appealing vocal manner.

Bobby Freeman (Josie): "NEED YOUR LOVE" (Clockus-Benell†) has the r'n'r beat that usually gets the femme teeners screaming for more. "SHAME ON YOU, MISS JOHNSON" (Clockus- Benell†) is a wild rocker pegged for juke appreciation.

Dick Lee (Metro): "HAVE GUITAR, WILL TRAVEL" (Planetary*) is a swinger with a good chance to go far on the spinning circuit because of forceful delivery and bright backing. "MY LOVE FOR YOU" (Figure†) is in the big ballad groove but doesn't have enough staying power.

Neil Steven & The Dee-Vines (Brunswick): "WHAT COULD BE BETTER" (Chappell*) blends a swinging and rocking beat for the new vocal group in a way that could turn their first side into a hot spinning item. "MORE AND MORE" (Cornell*) is a run-of-the-mill rocking ballad but the group does well by it.

Dick Haymes (Sunbeam): "AS YOUNG AS YOU FEEL" (Vernon*) returns Dick Haymes to a warm baladeering groove that will make the jocks pay attention. "SUFFER" (Sunbeam†) builds a new disk potential for the crooner with a catchy beat and a winning vocal.

Gino & Gina (Mercury): "BRAND NEW PENNY" (Figure†) shines like another good spinning bet for this young duo who do it this time with a calypso-styled item. "I DON'T LOVE YOU" rocks hard enough to win a good reaction in the jukebox market. "MARGIE" (Miller-Fisher*) gets a rocking dressing but it doesn't do the oldie much good.

Jan Murray (MGM): "TREASURE HUNT" (Integrity-JanMur*) is a fairly lively item pegged on the title of Jan Murray's tv show —but let's face it, a singer he ain't. "SO LONG, AU REVOIR, ARRIVEDERCI" (Integrity-JanMur*) won't mean anything in any language.

Dotts Johnson (Metro): "PARADISE" (Feist*) gets an original jazz vocal interpretation that will probably win over some jocks. "STREET OF DREAMS" (Miller*) is paved with offbeat vocalistics that will find friends among the hip set.

Denise Lor (20th-Fox): "EVERYTHING I DO" (Victor Young*) shows off Denise Lor in a pretty ballad setting that makes for okay late-hour programming. "YOU'RE EVERYWHERE" (Bryden†) continues her slow ballad mood and it's also well done but a doubtful bet for the commercial market.

Jerry Lynn Sands (Arcade): "WHAT I WOULDN'T GIVE" (Valley Brook*) is a rocking ballad that the juke set may find enjoyable. "CRAZY IN LOVE" (Arcade*) works a neat latino beat into a fair item for the terping teeners.

Huelyn Duvall (Challenge): "JULIET" (Golden West†) is yet another title pegged on a femme name to get a rocking ride that the juke mob may find worthwhile because of Huelyn Duvall's energetic delivery. "FRIDAY NIGHT ON A DOLLAR BILL" (Golden West†) should pay off in some respects with the coin machine crowd.

EXTENDED PLAY REVIEW

Paul Bain: "THE LOVE BALLADS OF PAUL BAIN" (RCA Victor). An ex-member of the Wayfarers, Paul Bain does extremely well in solo on four folk items. Working with arrangements and orch and chorus conducted by Bill Stegmeyer, Bain gets an ear-appealing sound into "I Know Where I'm Going," "Kitty Is My Darling," "So Early in The Morning" and "Blow The Candle Out."

Best Bets

TOMMY EDWARDS.....LOVE IS ALL WE NEED (MGM).....Mr. Music Man

Tommy Edwards' "Love Is All We Need" (Sheldon) comes right on the heels of his clicko "It's All in the Game" and should cash in similarly. It's a good ballad with a rocking touch for the big payoff. "Mr. Music Man" (Yukon*) works up a neat shuffling blues beat into a likable side.*

PAT BOONE.....I'LL REMEMBER TONIGHT (Dot).....Mardi Gras March

Pat Boone's "I'll Remember Tonight" (Feist) is a slick ballad that gets top pop appeal from his easy vocal styling. Tune's from 20th's "Mardi Gras," giving it a hefty exposure potential. "The Mardi Gras March" (Feist*) has a happy Dixieland beat that will win it juke attention.*

DON RONDO.....I COULD BE A MOUNTAIN (Jubilee).....The Great Adventure

Don Rondo's "I Could Be a Mountain" (Pincus & Sons) is a solid swinger belted in a style that's surefire for big returns. "The Great Adventure" (Planetary*) offers the crooner a good beat on which to deliver an okay lyric.*

TAB HUNTER.....JEALOUS HEART (Warner Bros.).....Lonesome Road

Tab Hunter's "Jealous Heart" (Acuff-Rose†) looks like a winner for the new label because of the way he takes over a hillbilly-styling for pop payoffs. "Lonesome Road" (Paramount) is headed for strong spins, too, due to crooner's hot performance and a striking backing.*

BOBBY DARIN.....YOU'RE MINE (Atco).....Mighty Might Man

Bobby Darin's "You're Mine" (Portrait†) has all the rocking ballad ingredients that the juke set turns into a quick click. "Mighty Might Man" (Portrait†) makes the kind of noise that the kids usually go for.

MIKE PRESTON....A HOUSE, A CAR, A WEDDING RING (London).....My Lucky Love

Mike Preston's "A House, A Car, A Wedding Ring" (Peter Maurice) has a soft ballad quality but it's handled in such a way that even the rocking generation will bring it into the payoff circle. "My Lucky Love" (Bentley House†) is a light-hearted folk-styled item with a beat that's made for juke action.*

Album Reviews

Mitch Miller Orch: "More Sing Along With Mitch" (Columbia). Earlier this year Mitch Miller came along with a strong LP-selling idea in "Sing Along With Mitch." This is a natural followup and should do as well because it retains the same song-participation idea excellently led off by Miller's orch and chorus. "The Whiffenpoof Song," "Carolina In The Morning," "Shine On Harvest Moon" and "Sweet Adeline" are some of the faves in the set. And once again the lyrics are printed on the back cover to help along the "sing along" angle.

Dakota Staton: "Dynamic!" (Capitol). Dakota Staton is one of the few new singers who has made a dent in the disk picture solely through the LP route. She scored the first two times out ("Late, Late Show" and "In The Night") and "In The Night") and in this, her third LP showcasing, she once again shows that she's one of the top song stylists around today. Her jazz approach is fresh and exciting (her "Anything Goes" is a solid sampling), making the set a selling natural. "Little Girl Blue," "It Could Happen To You," "Cherokee" and "They All Laughed" are other standouts in the package which has been arranged and conducted by Sid Feller.

Melachrino Orch: "Lisbon At Twilight" (RCA Victor). George Melachrino, the British maestro, digs into the Portuguese tune catalog for the "Lisbon At Twilight" repertoire. The ballads are soft and sentimental with just enough melodic schmaltz added to make it a good package for late-hour programming and the mood music mob.

Martin Denny Orch: "Primitiva" (Liberty). Martin Denny's stock in trade has been "exotic" sounds with which he's already scored with two "Exotica" albums. For his current musical excursion Denny has selected a repertoire from such places as Africa, Burma, Trinidad, Peru and Hawaii and has picked up offbeat instruments to give an authentic feel to the melodies. It will be a hot item for those who dig the Denny sound and the cleavage on the cover model will help stimulate the sales, too.

Sue Evans: "Sweet Sue Evans" (Dot). Working with a songbag that for the most part steers away from the obvious standards, Sue Evans has come up with a quiet and tasty package that will eventually draw a following to her side. The tunes have an intime quality and come across the grooves with a warm mood that makes for easy listening.

The Playmates: "At Play With The Playmates" (Roulette). The Playmates came to the disk fore only recently with a pop click in "Jo-Ann." Group belongs to the young disk buyers and they'll be kept happy with recap of "Jo-Ann" and such other of their pop single releases as "Don't Go Home" and "The Day I Died."

Frank Chacksfield Orch: "Love Letters In The Sand" (London). The title song plus 11 other standards are given a comfortable and ear-appealing treatment in Frank Chacksfield's hands. The mood is always rich and pleasing, making a programming natural and a good buy for the mood music shelf. In the package are such as "April Love," "They Didn't Believe Me," and "You Are Too Beautiful."

Zizi Jeanmarie-Roland Petit-Les Frere Jacques-Andre Popp Orch: "Paris—1923" (Columbia). Here's a fun-packed variety package pegged on the zingy beat of the mid-'20s with a Gallic approach. It's a mixture of vocals by Zizi Jeanmaire, Roland Petit and Les Frere Jacques backed by the hip Popp orch which also comes in for some straight instrumental chores. Jeanmaire's "Charleston," Popp's "My Blue Heaven" and Petit's "I Want To Be Happy" are beauts. There are also some strictly French items and a knowledge of the lingo isn't necessary to get the musical point.

Stanley Black Orch: "Girls, Girls, Girls" (London). Stanley Black has packed this package with 32 tunes pegged on tune-titles with femme names. It's a bright musical affair, highlighted by Black's piano, and runs right through the opening "Lily of Laguna" to the "Goodnight Irene" windup.

Fernando Lamas: "With Love" (Roulette). Fernando Lamas hits the romantic song with a multilingual attack that's sure to win the femme disk buyers. In English, French and Spanish he makes the most of a fair crooning quality to a melodic setting supplied by Glenn Osser's orch. "Love Is Here To Stay," "I Love Paris," "You Belong To My Heart" (in Spanish and English) and "Passing By" (in French and English) are samples of his taste in tunes.

Luis Arcaraz Orch: "Latin Airs" (RCA Victor). Luis Arcaraz works both sides of the border for his repertoire in this package, but everything comes out with his distinctive Latino touch. Such as "I've Got The World On A String" and "Ain't Misbehavin" from gringo-land and "Perfume De Amor" and "Si Me Comprendieras" from the chile belt, make it a neatly varied instrumental set.

The Mastersounds: "Kismet" (World Pacific). The Mastersounds, a chamber jazz quintet with a quietly sophisticated modern style, climbs aboard the showtune wagon with this exercise on the Robert Wright-George Forrest score for "Kismet." It's exotically flavored jazz which gets some pretty sound effects from the vibes and electric bass and guitar.

"The Merry Yodeler" (Vanguard). Yodeling, in all its varied facets, is given a charming treatment in this collection from the Austrian Alps. Performed by native musicians and singers from that area, this collection of folk music features vocals by various femme and male singers, including one unusual yodeling bass, and a typical instrumental combo with accordion in the lead.

Ethel Smith: "Bright and Breezy" (Decca). A virtuoso on the Hammond, Ethel Smith is extending her series of Decca LPs. Backed by a rhythm combo, she pulls out all the stops of her organ on evergreens like "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," "The Syncopated Clock," "Easter Parade," "March of the Toys" and others.

Beverly Kelly: "Beverly Kelly Sings" (Audio Fidelity). The list of jazz thrushes on disks continues to grow and the latest to enter the sweepstakes is Beverly Kelly. She locks to hold her own in the competition. Miss Kelly has a bright and individual way with a song that gives it a jazz coloring of considerable appeal. Also in her favor is a tasty repertoire of evergreens neatly instrumentalized by the Pat Moran Trio. Gros.

Sissler Buys Blue Ridge

Joseph E. Sissler, producer of WTTG's teleshows, "Don Owens Jamboree" and "Blue Grass Champs," has acquired the Blue Ridge Record Co. Sissler heads a syndicate that purchased the label from the estate of the late Noah Adams, diskery's founder.

The Blue Ridge line was active in the country & western field during the late 1940s and early '50s. Many of the original disks, including those cut by Bill Clifton and Jim Eanes, will be reissued.

Big 3 Professional Dept. Put Under Norman Foley; Strupp Aide to Scopp

The Big Three (Robbins, Feist & Miller) will reorganize its professional department so that the firms will be under the overall supervision of Norman Foley. Move stems from the exiting of Murray Baker as professional chief of the Robbins firm by the first of the year.

Foley, who had been professional manager of Feist, will be in charge of the professional setup which will include Hy Ross for Robbins, Roy Kohn for Feist and Ted Black for Miller. Ed Slattery will continue as coordinator of professional activities and assistant to Mickey Scopp, Big Three's general manager.

Oscar Robbins will remain as standard exploitation manager with Al Kohn as his assistant. Coast professional activity will be maintained as before by Ed McHarg and Hy Kantor with Barney McDevitt assisting. Erwin Barge and Bill White will continue as contact men in Chicago and Cincinnati, respectively.

In another move, Werner Strupp has been brought in as administrative assistant to Scopp. Strupp has been in the music biz for the past 14 years and was formerly affiliated with BMI and the Harry Fox office.

Firm also is planning a conclave at its New York homeoffice of its domestic and foreign professional staffs during the week of Oct. 27. A similar professional powwow was held about three years ago.

This time foreign representation will be augmented by representatives of Affiliated Music Publishers Ltd. Affiliated is the Big Three foreign company owned jointly with the Day interests of London. Alan Holmes of Robbins Music Ltd., and Paddy Crookshank, Big Three's European representative, will plane in from London for the meet. Coast and midwest reps will also attend.

Agenda for the meetings will be set up by Foley in his new capacity of firm's general professional manager. He'll be assisted by Slattery. Scopp will handle policy matters covering domestic and professional activities and trade operations in general.

AFN Admits Fake On Hit-Tune Show, Gives It the Boot

Frankfurt, Oct. 7.

One of the most popular shows on the American Forces Network, headquartered at Hoechst, near here, ended its run on Sept. 28. With the crises besetting quiz shows in the States, AFN officials admitted this show has been a fake—but one that they've been able to justify in the interests of good listening.

Show, titled "AFN Request Parade," has been a half-hour Sunday afternoon roundup of "the most popular tunes" at each of half a dozen AFN stations in Germany, plus "the most popular tunes" of several leading American disk jockeys.

Listeners have occasionally queried how it is that the same tune is never repeated on the show by any of the various disk jockeys picking "the top tune" of their area. And, admitted one AFN official, "In the interests of good listening, the show has been planned in advance. How'd you like to hear a request show that consists of just the same record played eight times in a row?" he reasoned.

Show, which is aired Sunday, was generally planned the previous Monday, when the show producer, Bob Britsch of Berlin, called several AFN stations to tell various disk jockeys that they had been chosen for the next "Request Parade." DJs then either told Britsch which tune they'd select as the top for their area, to make sure of no duplication, or cut several tapes announcing several numbers as "the tops." Show was then packaged, via tape, in Berlin on Wednesday or Thursday.

Kenny Scott Leaves Everyone at Jazz Fest Out on Limb in Pitt

Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.

Kenny Scott, a young local impresario, left the performers in his "Jazz Festival" holding the bag here when two shows scheduled for 3,800-seat Syria Mosque last Thursday (2) night were cancelled at the last minute. When less than 100 showed up for the first of the pair of scheduled performances, Scott took a powder and the curtain stayed down.

Artists billed for the attraction included Chris Connor, James Moody, Johnny Griffin, Babs Gonzales and King Pleasure. Understood Scott had the same lineup two nights before in Buffalo, where he also laid a bomb, but promised the entertainers they'd be paid when he got off the hook in Pittsburgh.

Flock of others, besides the singers and musicians, got hurt. Bob Baltz, who operates an agency downtown at Volkweins, got hooked for the tickets and his time, while the newspapers were stuck for more than $2,000 in advertising. Baltz, who was already on hand at the Mosque boxoffice when the cancellation was announced, hung on to the small amount of money he had taken in to enable him to make refunds to seatholders.

More Gershwiniana

The 60th birthday of George Gershwin (born in Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 26, 1898) has keyed a flock of Gershwiniana books. Two of the best just published are "The Gershwin Years" by Edward Jablonski and Lawrence D. Stewart (Doubleday; $6.95) and Merle Armitage's "George Gershwin: Man and Legend" (Duell, Sloan & Pearce; $4.50). Former, for the first time, gives a definitive closeup on both lyricist Ira Gershwin and his famed, late composer-brother who, has eclipsed him, in public acclaim. Closeup is also literal as this is a graphic words-and-pictures book of a calibre not encountered in previous Gershwin books, of which there have been several (David Ewen, Armitage previously, and others). Many of the pix are from Ira's personal collection.

One of the best things in the new Merle Armitage book is a reprise of a 1938 piece written by Ira about George. Basically, the composer is appraised first as the man, then as a musician whom the critics, made a legend, even within his own limited time span (he died at 38 in 1937). Abel.

MGA's Ready to Battle AFM for Disks Radio-TV; Trust Funds Win N.Y. Round

WB Yens Angel Role To Get Wings Wet On Original Cast Albums

The new Warner Bros. label wants to get into the original Broadway cast album sweepstakes —and it's willing to pay for it.

Diskery execs, who've been stymied so far in their efforts to latch on to musicals projected for this season, are now mulling the angle of assisting in the financing of a new tuner so they can wrap up the original cast rights in advance.

An undisclosed script, with score already written, has been making the rounds of WB brass in the N.Y. office and it's expected that a decision will be forthcoming soon.

The decision to get into tuner financing, according to a WB exec, is to show the Broadway producers that WB, as new as it is, can record, handle and merchandise as original cast album as well as any major.

Hoagland's Educ'l Post

Ben Hoagland Jr. has been set as director of educational music at Shapiro, Bernstein. He formerly was sales promotion manager for S-B and its affiliated firms, Skidmore, Columbia Pictures, and Mood.

He has been in the educational publishing field since 1954 and at one time was with Fred Waring's Youth Workshops.

Cecil Read, head of the Musicians Guild of America, will shortly move to challenge the jurisdiction of the American Federation of Musicians in the radio-tv and disk fields. Read, who headquarters on the Coast where MGA has already won control in the major studios, stated while in New York last week that under the labor laws he can file for bargaining choice elections within 60 days before expiration of the AFM pacts. The disk industry pact with the AFM runs out Dec. 31 while the radio-tv deal expires a month later.

Read is still focusing his attack on the Musicians Performance Trust Funds which, he contends, has diverted wages that should have gone to working musicians into a general pot which is being used to buttress administration support in smaller locals. At the present time, dissident musicians on the Coast have tied up about $1,300,000 in royaltics slated for the Funds.

Meantime, Samuel R. Rosenbaum, the MPTF trustee, won a round in his N.Y. court battle to get the Funds declared a valid setup. For that purpose, Rosenbaum brought suit some time ago against the major disk companies and the AFM to get a declaratory judgement in his favor. Supporters of the Coast musicians recently moved to dismiss the Rosenbaum suit.

The motion to dismiss was denied by N.Y. Supreme Court Justice Henry Epstein who stated that Rosenbaum's action was wholly justified and any attempt to transfer jurisdiction over the Trust Funds to the California courts was not warranted by the facts. "To compel the N.Y. trustee," the judge stated, "to go 3,000 miles to submit to a jurisdiction and there to litigate matters, all of whose activities are centered in N.Y., does not appeal to the court as the exercise of a wise discretion."

Victor-Camden In With Cuffo EP's To Up Yule Pot

RCA Victor has opened the Christmas season in the disk biz with an extensive release of 13 Victor and four Camden packages and a big promotion involving a free 45 EP for consumers. The dealers will be able to earn quantities of the EP for distribution to their customers via purchases of the Victor Xmas merchandise.

The Victor holiday packages are spotlighting Harry Belafonte, Perry Como, the Ames Bros., the Radio City Music Hall Symphony & Chorus, and various LP bestsellers from the catalog. One of the new offerings is titled "Christmas With Grandma Moses," with traditional songs and carols by various groups and narration by the artist who reminisces about her childhood. Among the Camden releases are sets by the Robert Shaw Chorale, Hugo Winterhalter and Domenica Savino.

The free EP, packaged in a four-color sleeve, contains five selections from the Xmas release. One side of the jacket displays a "Merry Christmas From Your RCA Victor Record Dealer" message.

RCA Victor v.p. and general manager George R. Marek said that the novel use of a 45 giveaway to consumers "has been created with the dealers' needs in mind." He stated that "we are trying to help build consumer traffic in every dealer's store in the country." For point-of-sale use, Victor has developed window displays, streamers, shopping bags and brochures.

Idolescents' Dual Role

Bobby Freeman's "Need Your Love" and "Shame On You Miss Johnson" under the Josie disk banner. (A sidebar to the composer-crooner combination is that it sometimes works on a more adult level as evidenced by Domenico Modugno's "Nel Blu Dipinto Di Blu" for Decca.)

Miss Ross is making her move into "boy's town" via Col with a coupling of "Stop Laughing At Me" and "Headlights." In her opinion a girl has as much chance as a boy in the juve market if the material is right. Her pitch is that if the song is written and sung "out of experience" that's in keeping with "an expression of youth," it will mean something to both boys and girls.

She also feels that the songs written today by the young cleffer-singers are an expression of an "emotional awakening" and "awareness" that young America is experiencing today. Miss Ross has a rap for writers who are trying to cash in on this mood. "They are writing 'externally' and you won't find 'external' songs in the top 25."

Arnold Shaw, who has been through many music biz stages, said that the new pop music trend shows more than a writer-disk performer relationship. According to Shaw, it's now a three-way combo of writer, singer and listener. "There's an identification," Shaw said, "between the young disk buyer, the young writer and the young performer." It's a compatible parlay, he said, and it's working because everyone concerned understands each other.

Columbia's all-out effort on the Beverly Ross platter already has started rolling via flyers and wires to distributors. And this week Bill Gallagher, Col's national sales chief, and seven of his sales staffers are fanning out around the country to give the personal touch to the Ross rush.

Audio Fidelity Forms Diskery Firm in Brit

London, Oct. 7.

Sidney Frey, boss of the Audio Fidelity disk firm, said here that he has established a British record company and will be focussing a lot of his attention on skiffle music. He said that the newly formed outfit had been given the go-ahead to record, press and market platters here and he was scouting the territory to put the organization into operation.

Frey is in London with American conductor Alfred Wallenstein to wax a number of classical LPs using top British musicians. The orch is described as consisting of virtuoso British musicians specially chosen from leading London combos and soloists. The platters are being recorded in stereo using a number of Pye technicians and Pye equipment. They will be for release in the States and lated in Britain.

Inside Stuff—Music

According to Reg Stone, administrator of the Memorial Arena, in Trail, British Columbia, numerous customers were complaining about a "Grand Ole Opry" show put on a couple of weeks ago by Nashville promoter John Kelly with cooperation of CJAY disk jockey Joe Remus. The date was billed "three big recording bands," whereas it's claimed there were only six performers, consisting of Jimmy Dickens, Jim Reeves and four musicians. Show pulled only 1,200 into the 3,000-seater and was given the Bronx cheer after kicking off an hour and three-quarters late. Arena officials refused to refund admissions to squawking customers. Promoter Kelly said the talent nut was paid prior to show, adding that any make-good on tickets would result in about a $1,300 loss to the arena. Door price was $1.50, and the advance at $1.25. Deejay Remus was the contact for the country show's date.

A disk waxed by Jerry Lee Lewis, which has been criticized by a British newspaper because it allegedly "pokes fun" at the Queen, is to be released by Decca there. The record, "The Return of Jerry Lee," was made by the American Sun Record Co. Part of the waxing is devoted to an interview about the cool reception meted out to the songster during his chopped British tour. The interviewer asks: "What did the Queen say about you?" Lewis comes back with: "Goodness gracious, 'great balls of fire'" (giving a gratuitous plug to his last disk bestseller).

Mike Nevard, Daily Herald disk writer, commented: "We don't want it here." But a Decca spokesman said the platter will be released shortly on its London label. "We wouldn't release it if it was offensive," he added.

Proceeds from the sale of Danny Thomas' "The Jazz Singer" album will be shared equally by St. Jude's Hospital, Memphis, and a local charity in each city where the pitch for the disk is made. Deal for the charity angle was made between Herman Rush, prez of Retarded Infants Service, and RCA Victor which hadn't previously released the disk. The deal originally was initiated by the late Manie Sacks. The Emanuel Sacks Foundation will receive a share of the monies in Philadelphia. Album will go for a $5 contribution.

Marty Melcher, prexy of Arwin Records, has devised a plan, to be known as the Lubin-Ross Survey, with approximately $50,000 earmarked for the project. LRS, with Arwin veepee Joe Lubin and Adam Ross at the helm, is a specialized promotion to ascertain trends and changes in the record market. The idea of the project is that, prior to each Arwin release, distributors and deejays will be personally con-

STATUS OF JUKEBOXES BEAUCOUP IN FRANCE

Paris, Oct. 7.

There are only about 15,000 jukeboxes in the over 200,000 French cafes and bars, but they are multiplying rapidly. Diskeries are beginning to find it is a good way to launch a platter, and cafe owners finds the young set demands them. The playing up of the music boxes in films and theatre has also given it a standing here.

Paris and the Riviera lead in jukeboxes, but the provinces are beginning to make heavy demands for them. A turn is only 5c here and juke renters change disks about twice a month. Top calls are for rock 'n' roll in the provinces, with ballads leading in the more urbane centres.

Wide Wide Word

Greenspan & Hammerstein Making Nostalgia Pay Off With 'History' Albums

Bud Greenspan is reversing the old Chinese proverb so that it now reads, in his platter thinking, "One word is worth a thousand pictures."

Greenspan, in partnership with Jimmy Hammerstein, son of lyricist Oscar Hammerstein 2d, has become a champion of the "recorded word" via the clicko "Greatest Moments In Sports" on the Columbia label and the current "Thrill of Sports" for the same company.

The "Sports" albums are leading the Greenspan-Hammerstein team into new areas which run the gamut from "Voices and Sounds of the 20th Century," already set by Coral, "The Voices and Sounds of Norte Dame," for Columbia, to documentary disks on religious and racial topics, not yet committed to any diskery.

Blame It on Jesse

Greenspan & Hammerstein moved into the "recorded word" field with "Greatest Moments In Sports" after Greenspan had seen some film clips of Jesse Owens' Olympics heroics sans sound. It was then that the idea came to him that the situation could be reversed, that is through a replica of a sporting event with sound sans film. He sold the idea to Columbia's David Oppenheim—the label's longhair director, incidentally—and "Greatest Moments In Sports" went on to a sale of over 1,000,000 copies. This, though, with a sales [illegible] album and a razor were put in a $1 sales parlay for a Father's Day promotion. The album was a $5.98 item without the Gillette tie. The followup, "Thrill of Sports," is on the market for $3.98 without any commercial link.

Majority of the material for their "word-pictures" comes from collectors who've been holding on to recorded material from the 1890 days of the Edison transcriptions. According to Greenspan, the material comes to him in different ways: 1) It's given. 2) It's bought outright. 3) It's leased. But, in any event, he said, it takes a lot od detective work to find the old recording.

See Wider Market

[illegible] their deals with Columbia and Coral, Greenspan & Hammerstein have peddled their product [illegible] royalty. It has been a good deal, in Greenspan's estimation, but he now feels that with the entry of such major disk enterprises as [illegible] pix, all eager for indie-produced product, the producer is now in a better bargaining position.

The click of the "Sports" disks also has sparked an interest on the gab circuit for Greenspan's "reminiscences." He's booked by the Columbia Lecture Bureau, (no relation to Columbia Records), for about 12 gigs a year, which he conducts via records and film.

Although Hammerstein is active with Greenspan in the "recorded word" operation, his outside activity has been concerned with [illegible] "Flower Drum Song," which his father co-tuned with Richard Rodgers," and last season he co-produced "Blue Denim." Now he's working with Greenspan on several pilot films aimed for tv.

Capitol Sues Remington On 'Music Man' Charge Cover Is a Duplication

Capitol Records has cracked down on the Remington label for allegedly duplicating the album cover of Cap's bestseller "The Music Man."

Cap was granted a temporary injunction in N. Y. Supreme Court Friday (3). Ruling stated that it was sufficiently established that simulation exists in every detail. Judge also added that discontinuance by the defendants of the cover does not affect plaintiff's right to relief.

Cap's suit alleges that the cover of the Remington album is so identical to the original Capitol cover in design, color, typography and placement of copy and art that it leads record buyers to believe that the Remington album ($1.49) contains performances by the original Broadway cast, whereas Capitol has the only original Broadway cast recording album, priced at $5.98.

Meredith Willson, writer and composer of "The Music Man," and the Music Man Co., producers of the tuner, are joining the suit as plaintiffs.

Joyce Files Writ AFM For Cut on Haley Disks

Jolly Joyce (Agency) has entered charges with the American Federation of Musicians against Bill Haley (Haley's Comets) to collect 10% of Haley's earnings from disks over the past four years. Haley did not renew his four-year exclusive contract with the agency after its expiration on Sept. 8. Joyce also repped Haley's Comets on live dates.

Joyce has taken over an additional attraction for trouping in auditoriums, arenas and theatres. It's Olsen & Johnson heading "Yock & Roll Show of 1959," with a cast including the Applejacks, Baby Cortez, Joe August and Libby Dean.

Erroll Garner kicks off his concert tour under Sol Hurok's banner at Chicago's Orchestra Hall Oct. 12. He's due for a Carnegie Hall, N.Y., stand in January.

Top Record Talent and Tunes

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

New Outfit In Nashville Formed To Push Idea There's Coin In Corn

Nashville, Oct. 7.

Country music now has an organized "lobby" with the granting of a state charter here to the nonprofit Country Music Assn., organized chiefly to tout the idiom's commercial potential to advertisers, ad agencies and broadcasters.

Organization sparkplug Wes Rose, of the Acuff-Rose songsheet pubbery, is acting prez and one of 31 charter members, 15 of whom are signed for life, including singer Eddy Arnold, "Grand Ole Opry" g.m. W. D. Kilpatrick, and Steve Sholes of RCA Victor, New York. Charter members include singers Ferlin Husky and the Everly Bros.

"There is every indication," according to secretary-promotion director Hubert Long, "that country music is on the threshold of the greatest period in its history and it is the prime objective of this association to make this condition known to advertisers."

Group's first open meeting is slated for Nov. 20 in the WSM studios, followed by a closed session for members only to vote on officers and adopt a constitution.

RANK DISKERY BUYS INTO MAJOR DISTRIB

London, Oct. 7.

Rank Records has bought a stake in one of the biggest British firms of disk wholesalers and distributors. The company is Thompson, Diamond & Butcher. Details of the deal have not yet been revealed by the Rank outfit, but it is reportedly releasing a statement about the tieup tomorrow (Wed.).

A spokesman for the diskery told VARIETY that it was now unlikely that the label would be on the market before 1959 as there were still quite a few wrinkles to iron out. When the Rank Organization decided to enter the disk business it planned to distribute the label on a club basis, to this end it assigned the Pye company to press a large number of records, but the club plan fell through and the disks are now in storage and will probably be the first for release.

It is now understood that Pye will not handle any future pressings for Rank and it is likely that the chore will be handed over to the EMI outfit. This view is strongly supported by the fact that John Davis, the Rank Organization managing director, has been meeting with EMI toppers recently.

Malcolm McGrady, general manager of Rank Records, will make a trip to the States at the end of this month to tie up deals with a number of Yank disk firms.

Frisco Grocery Chain Bows With Longhair LPs

San Francisco, Oct. 7.

Safeway chain has scored a beat on competition by starting to merchandise 12-inch classical LP's in 137 western stores.

First of 24 LP's in Basic Library of the World's Greatest Music —sponsored by Alec Templeton's National Committee for the Musical Arts—went on sale last week at 37c a copy, with each purchase of $2.50 or more at a Safeway store. Succeeding LP's will sell for $1.37 apiece.

Non-profit national committee, whose exec secretary is Quaintance Eaton, has handed Safeway 750,000 LP's for distribution in its Coast stores. It's believed this is first time longhair records have been merchandised through groceries on the Coast.

Irving Mills' N.Y. Gabs

Irving Mills, veep of Mills, Music, is in New York from the Coast for 10 days to confer with Jack Mills, prez of the publishing house, who just returned from a European trip conferring with overseas representatives.

Mills will also see "Goldilocks," the Leroy Anderson-Walter & Jean Kerr musical which the firm is publishing. It opens Saturday (11) at the Lunt & Fontanne.

Lotsa Covers (10) For 'Houseboat'

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Jay Livingston & Ray Evans' latest tune, "Love Song From 'Houseboat'" (from the Paramount film, "Housebbat"), must have the aroma of being a hit disk and a possible Academy Award contender. Only out a few weeks, the song already has been waxed by eight different labels for a total of 10 sides.

They include Steve Allen, Dot; Sophia Loren, Columbia; Les Baxter, Capitol; Joe Reisman, RCA Victor; Ralph Marterie, Mercury; Sam Cooke, Keen; Vera Lynn and Mantovani on flip sides for London, and Johnny Nash and Don Costa, ABC Paramount.

Grand Awards Takes On Personnel in the East

Grand Awards added staffers to its eastern division.

The diskery's Enoch Light, director of artists & repertoire, has set Stuart Phillips and Julie Light Klages to assist him in the a&r department. Phillips had been with Roulette Records while Klages had been an associate director at NBC-TV.

Other personnel moves include Peggy Sholtz, formerly with Lang-Worth Transcriptions, as director of publicity; Amanda Francis, formerly with Warner Bros. in London, as exec assistant to the production department, and Hugh Dallas, formerly with Mercury Distributors in Florida, as aide to Loren Becker, GA's sales manager.

Diskery Signings

Joining the Roulette label last week were Canta Maya, Alsace-Lorraine thrush, and Jimmy Nabors, Nashville crooner.

Miss Maya is out with two sides, "I'm A Kitten" and "Ask Me," from her forthcoming album, "The Long, Long, Kiss." Nabors will bow with "There's No Tomorrow" and "I'm Working."

King's New Talent

Harold (Shorty) Baker, longtime trumpetman with the Duke Ellington orch, has been added to the King roster. Baker's first album, "The Broadway Beat," will be released in October.

Also added to King was Teddy Humphries, who's been holding down a singing berth at a Nyack, N.Y., nitery for the past several years. His first coupling is "Without A Song" and "This Love Is True Love." Other signings include the Puddle Jumpers to King's Federal subsid, and Wes Voight & The Town Three to King's DeLuxe subsid.

WB Pacts Sardo

George Avakian, artists & repertoire topper at the new Warner Bros. label, has added Johnny Sardo to the roster. Sardo is a 17-year old rock 'n' roll singer. His first sides are due in two weeks.

Rescigno To Angel

Nicola Rescigno, artistic director of the Dallas Civic Opera Co., has been signed as a conductor for Angel Records. His first assignment, be will take over the London Philharmonic Orchestra to record operatic excerpts with Maria Callas.

JULIUS MONK'S REVUE ON OFF-BEAT LABEL

A pre-production recording deal has been set by Off-Beat Records and Julius Monk's new revue, "Demi-Dozen," which preems tomorrow (Thurs.) at Monk's new New York nitery. Album, which will be labeled "Julius Monk Presents 'Demi-Dozen' At The Upstairs Room of the Downstairs," will include 15 numbers, songs and sketches, from the revue.

Album, which will be recorded the weekend after the preem, will feature George Hall, Jack Fletcher, Ceil Cabot, Gerry Matthews, Jean Arnold and Jane Connell. Material has been written by Dee Caruso & Ronny Graham, Tom Jones & Harvey Schmidt, and Cy Coleman & Carolyn Leigh.

Abbott Lutz, who prexies Off-Beat, will record the package. Monk's revue last season, "Take Five," also was put into the groove by the Off-Beat label but long after it had been running in Gotham. Label now is planning to reissue the "Take Five" package with a new cover featuring Ronny Graham.

Sock $76,600 B.O. in Coast's First Jazz Fest For 'Chair' in College

By BILL STEIF

Monterey, Calif., Oct. 7.

First West Coast Jazz Festival, just concluded at Monterey Fairgrounds, was both an artistic and financial success. In fact, when all figures are in, the Monterey College Chair of Jazz, to which net proceeds will go, should be a desirable sinecure.

Friday (3) night, the dixieland show drew more than 5,000 paid for a $21,700 take. Saturday (4) afternoon drew about 2,800 and Saturday night a sellout 6,100, for total day's take of $32,000. Sunday (5) afternoon pulled 3,000 and night show about 4,500, for day's total revenue of $22,600.

Overall, 21,500 paid admissions chunked $76,600 into the boxoffice with afternoon shows scaled at $2.50 and night shows to $5. Festival had a percentage on nearly a dozen food, softdrink, liquor and program concessions, plus rent from exhibits, and has considerable unknown potential from tapes. All this is not yet figured, but should run into thousands more.

General manager Jimmy Lyons thinks the nut will run to about $70,000, which means the pioneer Coast festival has a fine profit margin.

Festival's zenith probably was reached 1:05 a.m. Sunday (5), when Lyons had to take the mike and announce the night's show was over. Crowd, still riveted to seats, kept screaming "more, more," and it took Lyons six or seven minutes to convince them to go home—this after 4¼ hours of cool, hard-bop and Afro-Cuban jazz.

Dizzy Gillespie was a sort of patron saint to the festival. He emceed dixieland show, backing Lizzie Miles superbly; came back with his quintet next night and gassed the crowd with such breathtaking numbers as his version of "My Man"; made impromptu appearance late the same night with the Cal Tjader Quintet and on final afternoon he

Dot's 'My Line'

CBS - TV's "What's My Line?" is going into the groove.. In a deal set between Bob Thiele, Dot Records veepee, and Bob Bach, associate producer of the panel show, an LP pegged on the show's "mystery guest" segment is being prepped for release around Christmas.

The LP will be culled from "What's My Line" kinnies when Steve Allen was a member of the panel. Allen is a Dot pactee. Other panelists on the LP will be Dorothy Kilgallen, Bennett Cerf and Arlene Francis, with John Daly hosting.

Package will have about eight "mystery guest" bits. When the panelists are about to identify the "guest," a buzzer will blot out the name so that the disk can have a play-along quality. Identity of the "mystery guests" will be given on the album's liner notes.

Tops Records, WB Settle Lawsuit

Tops Records and the Warner Bros.' music companies, who have been involved in an extensive series of lawsuits and counter-suits involving several million dollars in claims, have amicably settled their differences out of court. The various suits were dismissed in the courts on motions by attorneys Max Fink and Gordon Files, representing Warner Bros., and Irving Glickfeld, for Tops.

Warner Bros.' publishing firm, the Music Publishing Holding Corp., originally sparked the legal actions by suing Tops for disk royalties and copyright infringements. Tops countered with an anti-trust action against WB, charging that the withholding of their music catalogs from the diskery was in restraint of trade.

Peggy Lee Enterprises Set Up for Music, Video

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Singer Peggy Lee has formed Peggy Lee Enterprises for consolidation of all her activities, which include several publishing firms, as well as a production unit for tv and theatrical films.

Jim Hines, Miss Lee's personal manager, George Stuart and attorney Woody Irwin are partnered in the new company.

LONDON RECORDS' PUSH ON 24 MONAURAL LP'S

London Records, which has been stressing stereo for the past few months, is hitting the monaural market with 24 LP items for a fall push. It's diskery's first LP release since June.

Highlighting the LP releases are "Swinging Brass" with the Cyril Stapleton orch and "National Anthems of the World." Several of the LP items were in London's first stereo release last month and the majority of the balance is in the second stereo release.

The second stereo batch consists of 31 items with three operas spotlighted. Renata Tebaldi's "Madame Butterfly," which is in the new series, was recorded during June and August.

Second release in London's new low-price Richmond line features seven classical sets from the London catalog and nine new pop entries.

Fred Jackson Quits Mills In London for Planetary

London, Oct. 7.

After six years as European general manager of Mills Music Ltd., Fred Jackson is quitting. He plans to start in partnership with Planetary-Kahl of America. He will be managing director of Planetary-Kahl (London) Ltd., and will handle the British and Continental business of the firm, which has sizable Latin American, jazz and pop catalogs.

Jackson, who takes up his new job next Monday (13), will almost certainly be succeeded at Mills by Cyril Gee, his assistant. The new music publishing setup will, for the time being, operate from Jackson's home until suitable offices are found.

Cook Roading for WB

Hal Cook, [illegible] Bros. sales veepee, hit the road early this week on a midwestern trek to dickery's distributors.

He'll be gone for about three weeks.

Band Reviews

LARRY GREEN ORCH (8)
Hotel Muehlebach, K. C.

Larry Green is the latest in a string of piano maestros who have held forth in the Terrace Grill of the Hotel Muehlebach where there is the double assignment of playing for dancing and backup for the floor show. Green, a vet maestro, fulfills nicely on both counts, succeeding Danny Ferguson, who held forth through the summer months.

The Green pianistics has surrounded himself with three reeds, two trumpets, string bass and drums, with Frank Collins, drummer, stepping down to warble an occasional ballad. Essentially, the Green style is on the commercial side as required by hotel rooms of this type (his previous assignment was the Hotel McCurdy, Evansville), and fits this deluxe spot nicely.

It's the first time in here for Green & Co., and they are committing themselves admirably from the start. There is considerable embellishment of the music in Green's keyboard work, as he even fills between sessions, at times, with more established numbers. He also has the added assignment of m.c. for the floor shows, and is proving to handle this in acceptable fashion. Crew is likely due to stay for several weeks. Quin.

PETER BARRY ORCH (6)
Windsor Hotel, Montreal

Since this historic hotel changed ownership some 12 months ago, the entertainment policy in the Embassy Room has been varied and rather haphazard. Although started with a formula based on a femme thrush and a small band for customer hoofing, the lack of spenders and a limited budget soon put a crimp in the entertainment angle. However, with the Peter Barry orch moving in for a four-week period, a definite effort is being made to rejuvenate this dining room.

Barry has played every major spot in town directing combos of all sizes from a trio to a full band and for this engagement has assembled a group of six with fine results. Although most of Barry's arrangements lean to society-type music, he breaks sharply from the usual reserve of hotel's atmosphere with the occasional dixieland belter. This refreshing new note together with Barry's rep with those who like to dance plus the no cover, no minimum is pleasing the regulars and building a new, young crowd. Newt.

tacted to determine what the buying public wants in recorded music. After a compilation, the diskery will be able to determine how much promotion and sales should be put behind each platter, and also what type of disks should be cut.

Jolsonia never previously issued in disk form is being featured this month on Joe Franklin's WABC-TV "Memory Lane" show in a memorial to Al Jolson who died eight years ago this month. Material consists primarily of tape recordings from the old "Kraft Music Hall" show, some of which have been released by Decca Records. Franklin, who claims to receive more requests for Jolson memorabilia than all other oldtime artists combined, is planning a "Jolson Sings Forever" half-hour show weekly in November.

Cleffer Pat Ballard has purchased a building site on property in Troy, Pa., once belonging to his great-grandfather, who was the town's first merchant, and is building a home there. Ballard plans to commute, mostly by phone, carrying on his r&r business from the quiet of the sticks which he says is an antedote for the Big Beat. "In Troy you can hear a gnat yawn," Ballard reports, "and if I'm gonna love the kids by day I gotta get tranquil at night!"

Singer Artie Wayne's initial album for Epic Records will be somewhat nostalgic. Wayne, as a tribute to the late Victor Young, will record all of the music from "Inside Music," a tv pilot shot several seasons ago and which costarred Wayne and Young. All the music telepic was penned by Young and includes such tunes as "Sweet Sue," "Golden Earrings" and "A Hundred Years From Today." Jerry Fielding will orchestrate the session. Wayne, incidentally, claims he has film rights to Young's biog.

Dimitri Tiomkin's score for WB's "Old Man and The Sea" is being geared for a push on FM stations. Columbia Records and Warner Bros. are aiming a special promotional campaign at the nation's 558 FM stations. The FM push is being made at the instigation of Tiomkin who believes that the medium has been generally overlooked by pix and that the Col LP would be a "natural" for FM exposure.

SHAPIRO IN EUROPE ON COL-EPIC MISSION

Nat Shapiro, international artists & repertoire coordinator for Columbia and Epic Records, left for Europe yesterday (Tues.) for three weeks of confabs with Col's overseas affiliates in Holland, Germany, Italy, Spain, France and England.

In addition to presenting new product plans to Col's outlets abroad, Shapiro will help set up merchandising and promotion tie-ins for both forthcoming and current tours of the Continent by Duke Ellington, the Hi-Lo's, Jimmy Rushing, J. J. Johnson, and Kai Winding (already abroad) and Johnny Mathis, Norman Luboff, Guy Mitchell, Johnnie Ray and Frankie Laine, all of whom will be in Europe this winter.

Shapiro also will huddle with Philips and Durium (Italy) artists and a&r execs to set future releases for Col's "Adventure in Sound" series, including those by Renato Carasone.

Shapiro also will work out plans for expanded distribution of Col's subsids in Mexico, Argentina and Brazil.

Shiffrin to Seeco As Sales and A&R Chief

Jerry Shiffrin has switched from Roulette to Seeco as director of sales and artists & repertoire. He had been sales manager at Roulette for the past six months. No replacement has been set at Roulette as yet.

At Seeco, Shiffrin will report to firm's prexy Sidney Siegel in his handling of distributor relations, merchandising, acquiring new talent and disk jockey promotion.

Before joining Roulette, Shriffrin had been associated with Archie Bleyer's Cadence label.

Mitzi Gaynor on Qui Verve

Set for Junket to Jolt Up Jockeys and Distribs On Her Album

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Mitzi Gaynor is going to make sure her initial solo album for Verve Records is a big seller. Actress-singer, like the "traveling saleslady," will be making the door-to-door canvass beginning next month to aid in the promotion and sales of the still untitled album.

Miss Gaynor is convinced that the only way her platter can get off the ground—is for her to go out and give it a personal boost. She has selected Boston and Philadelphia as the two cities she will first tackle, and plans to spend as long as one week in each spot. In addition to talking to the deejays and distributors, she will meet with her fan club reps to encourage them to aid in the promotion of the album—just as they do for her film, "South Pacific."

One thing is for sure, according to Miss Gaynor—she will not do any tv shows because she doesn't want to compete with her starring role in the Rodgers & Hammerstein film.

Pete King arranged-conducted the album which is comprised of standards and was waxed in stereo.

Bikel SRO $4,200

Theodore Bikel pulled in $4,200 for his concert at New York's Town Hall Saturday (4). Folk singer filled the 1,600-seater plus 50 standees and another 50 seated on the stage.

It was his first N. Y. concert.

Fox Publishing Co. Forms Synchro Library in Brit. As Pact of O'seas Links

Fred Fox, veepee of Sam Fox Publishing Co., is back from Europe after setting up new overseas ties for his firm.

He has launched a new English company devoted to the distribution of music background tapes in the British Isles and the Continent. The new firm, Synchro Recorded Music Library, Ltd., will be under the direction of Dennis Berry, formerly connected with Paxton's of London. New standard and popular companies are now being established along with Synchro under the overall supervision of Allan Crawford. Fox also is prepping representation of other American catalogs in tape, educational and pop areas for England and the Continent.

Fox, who is chairman of the international committee of the Music Publishers' Assn., also huddled with committee reps David Adams of Boosey & Hawkes, and Frank Colombo of Ricordi. Fox's report to MPA stressed the desirability of setting up separate operations in three district areas of the music business—popular, symphony-educational and background tape libraries.

In addition to repping the Fox Publishing Co. catalog, Fox worked on the catalogs of firm's affiliates, Movietone Music Corp., Hollywood Songs, Choral Art Publications, Reynard Publishing and Stargen Music.

On the home front, Fox has brought in Lewis Roth as director of the educational department. Roth previously was educational director of Shapiro-Bernstein and on the staff of Mills Music.

Reds Nyet Jazz In East Germany

Frankfurt, Oct. 7.

Latest crackdown in the Commies' continuing battle against jazz in East Germany saw the arrest of members of three juvenile clubs who were devoted to jazz and who "dared" to name their clubs after popular American jazz centers, according to word received here.

Police in Leipzig are tracking down and arresting members of the "Broadway Band," "42d Street Band" and "Capitol Band" because the young East Germans have dared to listen to "Western" music and to pick American jazz and rock 'n' roll singers as their heroes.

The juveniles have been emulating their American counterparts, with crewcuts and sideburns, and wearing levis, and the crowning blow to the authorities is that these young people aren't being faithful to the East German singers who are "politically acceptable."

soloed with Gregory Millary's 78-man symphony orch.

Louis Armstrong band, with clarinetist Peanuts Hucko and Velma Middleton, played strong opening show, doing usual "Mack the Knife," "Blueberry Hill," "Jazz, Jazz, Jazz." Armstrong tricked up the act with his familiar vaude stunts, but when he got to work was at his best.

Miss Miles, making her first appearance at any U. S. festival, caught the audience with English and French vocals and pianist Burt Bales' Dixielanders, on same bill, got nice hand.

Drummer Shelly Manne's group and Mastersounds topped Saturday afternoon bill.

Bobby Troup emceed Saturday night, devoted to finest small groups in U. S., plus tremendous singer Ernestine Anderson.

Gillespie quintet warmed up crowd, and Jimmy Giuffre Trio, which really needs more intimate atmosphere than open-air arena, did fine work. Gerry Mulligan Quartet's set got a big ovation and Max Roach Quintet capped this with five numbers in hard style.

Then came the festival's triple pinnacle. Modern Jazz Quartet did three numbers from John Lewis' score from the French film, "No Sun in Venice." This was caressing, splendid music. Miss Anderson, who at 31 may well be the best jazz singer extant, did half a dozen numbers which knocked out the crowd, and Cal Tjader group, first with clarinetist Buddy De Franco and next with quintet, kept audience screaming.

Millar's Symphony played excerpts from Stravinsky, Hindemith and Milhaud Sunday afternoon. Dave Brubeck Quartet performed with symphony, and MJQ premiered Andre Hodeir's "Around the Blues," Werner Leider's "Divertimento" and wound up with Lewis' "Queen's Fancy."

Sunday night, with Mort Sahl emceeing, Harry James' new big band bowed, scoring especially with swing-conscious older folk. Brubeck quartet and Giuffre trio reappeared, as did a number of individual jazzmen to wind up in a jam session with James' band.

ULTRAPHONIC HIGH FIDELITY

AGVA Nixes Self-Insurance Plan, Seeking Bids on Accident Policy

The American Guild of Variety Artists' Welfare Trust Fund is now putting out bids for insurance firms to underwrite the accident policies. Bids will go out to approximately 15 firms starting tomorrow (Thurs.).

Step was taken after the board decided against going self-insured at this time. Studies had been made by an actuary which would have entailed disaster insurance by an outside firm.

The decision against self-insurance in favor of going after new bids temporarily ends a point of contention between the employer and union trustees. The employer trustees about a year ago had recommended that the union sign a new deal with Lloyds of London, current underwriter, since that firm had promised savings of about $60,000 during the year just passed. The employer group was in favor of taking up the bid, especially since a new contract would have carried a cancellation clause after a period of notice. However, the union reps, desiring to try self-insurance, voted against the new Lloyds plan.

The Welfare Trust Fund gets its receipts from insurance premiums paid out by employers. Those hiring talent on club dates pay the fund $1, of which Lloyds gets approximately 40c. Acts hired by the week have policies taken out at a $2.50 cost, on which the fund makes a much smaller profit. The $3.50 weekly premium for ice show acts and acts in hazardous situations has been eliminated, and all turns get the $2.50 rate. Policy pays up to $7,500 in death and hospital benefits.

'Cisco' Rodeo 60G Vs. Memphis Rain

Memphis, Oct. 7.

Faced with a terrific opening day rain and windstorm, which crippled moving traffic here, the annual Mid-South Fair's nine-day run finished strong in the final days and showed only a 7% decrease in attendance over last year.

Final figures from Fair Chief Bill Wynne for the run (Sept. 19 through Sept. 27) showed that 368,147 attended, about 28,000 behind 1957. The fair also suffered another weather bombardment with a steady rainfall on the Saturday following the opener, which forced cancellations of two skedded rodeo matinees.

The Ken Roberts rodeo grossed some $60,000 for 16 performances at a $2.75 top. Duncan Renaldo (The Cisco Kid) along with his horse Diablo and sidekick "Bad Man" Matts lured the youngsters and their families to the arena.

The Riverboat Follies with Eddie Peabody, Mollie Bee, Candy Candido and the Teddy Phillips' orch, grossed $14,000 for another 16 performances at $1.50 top. The Follies was 5% over last year while the rodeo showed a letdown of about 10%.

Despite the two days of heavy downpour, the midway shows and rides racked up a 27% increase over 1957.

Isle of Capri New Tag Of Cave in Vancouver

Vancouver, Oct. 7.

Cave Supper Club, longtime sole Vancouver nitery, switches to Latin decor under new name of Isle of Capri in January. Benny Poitras bought the spot in a co-op deal with Louis "Pancho" Adelson last July.

Nitery will close until mid-February for a facelifting and reopen with current booking policy of some U. S. acts but using a hefty quota of native talent.

Cuisine, never ballied by previous operator Isy Walters, plays up steaks and Mexican and Italian menu. Resident terpline was axed and Clarke [illegible].

VILLAGE GREEN IN N. Y.

Village Green, a new cafe in the Greenwich Village section of New York, is slated to open Oct. 16 with a new faces policy.

Edith Piaf Shaping Up To Work Again in 1959

Edith Piaf has advised Waldorf-Astoria veepee Claude C. Philippe that she hopes to be out of the cast next week and should be able to perform again after the first of the year. She experienced a bad auto crackup in Paris last month which necessitated impressing Marguerite Piazza as substitute at the New York hostelry.

Eartha Kitt will be the Xmas-New Years holiday attraction opening Dec. 22 for a month, by which time Miss Piaf should be able to make the trip. Last New Year's period Pearl Bailey was the draw, and the year before it was Lena Horne.

Gordon MacRae follows Miss Piazza Oct. 22, and Harry Belafonte is booked for Nov. 17.

Sinatra Big in Philly Without Being There; One Ruse Blows a Fuse

Philadelphia, Oct. 7.

Using the Frank Sinatra label to kite business has become standard locally. Among those flying high with the Sinatra tag, the Chancellor Room was in the lead last year, when owner Joe Marcucci decorated all available wall space with the actor-vocalist's photos. Marcucci is also a partner in Chancellor Records which has Frankie Avalon and rock 'n roll groups in its talent roster.

Several months ago Bill Rodstein fashioned his Latimer Club in similar style, tagging one section of it "The Sinatrama Room." Besides life-size stills he added the familiar touch by reproducing a telegram from Sinatra expressing good wishes to the wife and children. A local Philly realtor has he office of his Wildwood motel plastered with glossies and favors special guests with a "Come Fly With Me" platter.

The latest bit of Sinatra exploitation by a West Philly luncheonette owner created the biggest splash and got the most attention. Owner Frank Proetto, added something new to the usual interior decoration inspired by the singer. He had a fake newspaper-type headline printed saying the singer would be at his place on Sept. 26.

This caused a near riot, and one of the worst traffic jams in the neighborhood's history. Teenagers were out in hundreds with cameras. Many refused to budge after the ruse was exposed. The proprietor had also hypoed his promotion by an announcement over a Camden radio station.

So that everything would be "legal" there actually was a Frank Sinatra in the spot, known as "Yock's." He was an 18-year-old Villanova student from South Philly.

Paar as Aladdin's Lamp For Ford & Hines on Coin

Impact of the Jack Paar show as a showcase for acts is indicated by the phenomenal price rise being obtained by Ford & Hines, who appeared recently on the NBC-TV show for two nights in succession. Prior to these appearances, the best salary this team had rated was $750, at the Eden Roc, Miami Beach. Since then, however, their maximum will be obtained by a stand at the Tropicana, Las Vegas, which will net them $3,500.

However, the new minimum price is now set at $1,500 in niteries, and they've been signed for a series of stands which leaves no vacant time until February.

Plus Eden Roc, they have been pacted for the Latin Casino, Philadelphia; Holiday House, Pittsburgh; Beverly, Cincinnati, and elsewhere.

In addition, the duo have signed with MGM Records. The pair will do four sides, with Miss Hines set to do four as a single.

CHI CHEZ PAREE SETS NAME BILLS TO APRIL

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Chez Paree, which for many months now has been booked pretty much hand-to-mouth, has firmed its star roster well into next year.

The 26-year-old nitery currently has Nat King Cole and Henny Youngman, with the McGuire Sisters and Dave Barry following. Shows thereafter will topline Tony Martin, Eydie Gorme and the Vagabonds, Louis Prima & Keely Smith, Red Buttons and Cathy Crosby (over New Year's), Sammy Davis Jr., Jerry Lewis, Xavier Cugat & Abbe Lane, and Dean Martin. Latter is down for an April 5 teeoff.

Atlantic City Track Becoming a Haven For The 'At Liberty' Crowd

Philadelphia, Oct. 7.

The strict clampdown by the Liquor Board has wiped out most of the smaller local saloon showplaces and lean days have fallen upon the variety acts.

A sizable batch of entertainers are now employed at the Atlantic City racetrack. Prexy John B. (Jack) Kelly could put on a passable bill without having to go outside. Former vaudevillian, songwriter and song plugger Jack Boylan is director of admissions and parking, and is responsible for most of the oldtimers working.

Among the performers engaged at Pleasantville are: Dancer Bill De Mayo, personnel manager; Dick De Mayo, formerly with the Pansy the Horse act and head of AGVA in Philly; Jon Tay, magician; Jack Spangler, emcee once with the "Follies"; Walter J. Walters Jr., ventriloquist; Tony Sharabba, ex-Jan Garber vocalist; Joe Feinberg, film player; Johnny Roche, singer; Clarence Daunton, ragtime piano man, and J. McNamara, of McNamara's Band.

Ella Thin $2,300, Mpls.

Minnapolis, Oct. 7.

Norman Granz's concert presentation, "An Evening With Ella Fitzgerald," drew a poor $2,300 at the 4,500-seat Auditorium Theatre here Saturday (4).

House was scaled at a $4 top.

Reno's Mapes and Golden Fold Cafes But Harrah's Goes Round-the-Clock

Reno, Oct. 7.

Two of Reno's major hotels last week shuttered their plush theatre-restaurants and pinkslipped the entertainers as an apparent expense saver. At the same time, another downtown club announced an around-the-clock entertainment sked.

The Mapes Sky Room closed its doors to entertainers and gave notice to the Eddie Fitzpatrick band, the Skylets (8) and all other Sky Room personnel. The Golden Hotel closed its Mardi Gras Room and terminated the Hank Penny-Sue Thompson revue and Freddie Bell & The Bell Boys.

Harrah's Club, located back-to-back with the Golden, initiated a new policy with a 24-hour schedule of lounge acts. Six alternating groups play the grind. Harrah's has no theatre-restaurant facilities but books top names for the casino lounge.

Charles W. Mapes Jr., owner-operator of the Mapes Hotel, said publicly that the Sky Room was closed because of numerous requests to use the facility for private parties, banquets and dances. Veteran observers, however, noted the big room was closed at the same time last year, in a period when the tourist dollars become less numerous and show biz slower.

Mapes said last season he closed the Sky Room to shows to allow its use for private groups while a ground-floor restaurant in the hotel was being remodeled.

The Golden, in its seasonal routine move, shuttered the Mardi Gras Room and its hotel casino at the same time. The adjoining Bank Club casino, under the same ownership, made no change in operation.

Bill Harrah, operator of four clubs—two at Lake Tahoe and two in Reno—began the unprecedented 24-hour sked at the Reno main club. He has also indicated he will continue with big names during the off-season months at his Lake Tahoe clubs. Most spots at the lake shutter after the Labor Day weekend. Harrah has shows (Vic Damone, Teresa Brewer, Ernie Kovacs, Edie Adams, etc.) booked into November. Liberace, who closed at Harrah's Tahoe club a week ago, Sunday, did turn-away biz during his three-week date.

Reno's other major hotels—the Riverside and the Holiday—plan no changes in entertainment policies.

Shirley Jones (Mother) Making Her Nitery Bow

Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.

Now that her baby has arrived, Shirley Jones (Mrs. Jack Cassidy) will be leaving Hollywood at the end of the month for a nitery tour and one of her first appearances will be here in her hometown at the Twin Coaches, where she opens Nov. 14. It's the same place where the small community she was born in, Smithton, tossed a testimonial banquet for her right after she had scored on the screen in 'Oklahoma!' and "Carousel." It will be Miss Jones' cafe debut.

She'll work in the turn with her husband, a singing veteran of Broadway musicals. Smithton has already bought out a night during the Jones-Cassidy engagement even though actress' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Jones, have since moved from there into the city.

Stompin' at the Savoy Now a Memory; Harlem Dancery Auctioned Off

A historical part of Harlem show biz did an exit last week when effects of the Savoy Ballroom were auctioned off. The famed stomping grounds will be razed to make way for a huge Mid-Harlem Housing Development.

The Savoy, opened in 1926 by Moe Gale, played some of the great names in the musical world. Although it catered to Negroes, it was widely patronized by ofay jazz buffs who came to see some of the top bands in the music industry. Its most famous bill was a "battle of swing" between Benny Goodman and the late Chick Webb. More than 10,000 were turned away that evening, circa 1936. Both represented the top outfits of their respective races. As a side battle, Gene Krupa competed on the drums against Webb. The frenzy of that evening is still discussed reverently among today's jazz scholars.

Remembrances of Carl Brisson

By ABEL GREEN

The saga of Carl Brisson, who died in his native Copenhagen at 64 two weeks ago, is an Old World show biz tradition carried over into the New World which, perhaps, knew him better as "the older girls' Sinatra," a billing coined for him by a VARIETY reviewer.

Basically, Brisson (born Pederson) was a romantic lead whose Prince Danilo made his "Merry Widow" a London and Continental European success for many years. It was for this reason that Paramount brought him over for filmusicals in the 1930s when Par found how well Maurice Chevalier, another import, was doing for the b.o. in America.

In his later nitery career, in Svensk-belt cities like Minneapolis, Milwaukee and St. Louis, customers often reserved the same table by the week, attending six nights in a row. He had a way with the moneyed ringsiders of Danish, Norwegian and Swedish extraction, by including folk and drinking-toast songs, which was shrewd b.o. all the time.

Brisson's wife, Cleo, was a twice-a-night ringsider, leading the applause as a one-gal claque, and while this smacked of the "Milton Berle's mother" routine it differed somewhat with the former Cleo Willard (Willard Sisters, a gymnastic act originally.) It was traditional with European music hall and operetta for the swooning femmes to throw posies at the handsome lead and come back night-after-night. Mrs. Brisson carried the tradition over to America when, after his filmusical contract ("Murder At The Vanities," etc., from whence stemmed his theme song, "A Little White Carnation" and "Cocktails For Two"), her husband went into the class cafes. Her regular ringsiding also served the more practical purpose of gauging his material for best audience values, often shifting in impact from the dinner to the supper show.

First With Mike?

Brisson's individualistic personality brooked little patience with copyists. It is probably a fact that he conceived the idea of taking the mike off the pedestal and circling the cafe floor in more intime close-up with the ringsiders, especially for "Carnation" and kindred ballads. For some seasons he was particularly vexed with a chantoosie who, he felt, "copied" him too soon after he conceived this hand-mike innovation.

Brisson's age was officially reported as 62; his producer-son Frederick says he's 64; his veteranship might indicate he was nearer 70, all of which further accents his youthful appearance. For a time many in show biz thought father-and-son were brothers.

Brisson maintained a New York penthouse apartment at the Navarro on Central Park South yearround and whenever in town worked out daily at the nearby N.Y. Athletic Club. He was justifiably proud of his waistline and physique. The "hepatitis" which felled him was actually cancer of the liver. His fetich for dental hygiene bordered on a phobia; his DDS, also at nearby Central Park South, was compelled to tell the actor to "save your money, and don't come so often for examinations."

Hub Storyville's Names & Combos

Boston, Oct. 7.

George Wein's jazz nitery, Storyville, is changing format somewhat with booking of names like Myron Cohen and Roberta Sherwood. Both have been signed for dates after the first of the year, in January and February.

Ahmad Jamal is current at Storyville through Sunday (12) and Sarah Vaughan opens Wednesday (15). Buddy Rich is inked for Oct. 27-Nov. 2; Tommy Edwards, Ernestine Anderson, Nov. 3-9; George Shearing, Nov. 10-16; Buddy Hackett, Nov. 17-23; Anita O'Day, Nov. 24-30.

Wein is booking Benny Goodman into Symphony Hall on Friday (17) at price sked of $2.20, $3.30 and $4.40; and a jazz concert with Four Freshmen, Dave Brubeck Quartet, featuring Paul Desmond, Maynard Ferguson and his orch, Sonny Rollins Trio, Oct. 31 at Symphony at the same ticket spread.

Don Albert's Keyhole

San Antonio, Oct. 7.

Don Albert's Keyhole Club will open Oct. 31 with two shows. Albert, a trumpet player with name orchs years ago, is his own emcee.

Blues singer Olive Brown, tap dancer Keny Dunlap, exotic terper Kitty Freeman, comic Peaches Allen and others will be on the bill. A band is yet to be named.

7TH ARMY'S HYPO ON GI SHOWS

The High Cost (250G) of Undress

Philadelphia, Oct. 7.

The high cost of dressing nudes was pointed out by Wilbur Clark, owner of Las Vegas' Desert Inn, when he was here for the American Hotel Assn. convention. Clark is a member of the syndicate which recently took over operation of the Stardust Hotel in the Nevada gambling capital.

He described as "fabulous" the business being done by the Stardust's cafe and casino, and attributed it to the importation of the Cafe Lido show from Paris. The French floor spectacular is noted for its undraped femmes and the hotelman was asked if nudity was to become an added attraction in the desert resort along with the galloping dominoes. (Another Vegas spot, the Dunes, is featuring a Minsky revue.)

"I object to the word 'nudity,'" Clark said, "There's a way of doing these things with taste. You have to see the Lido show to appreciate what I mean. It cost us $250,000, the most expensive wardrobe bill I've ever paid, just to dress those nude girls."

Pitt Hotel Strike Clipping All Show Biz; Niteries Suffer Most

Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.

Hotel strike here, first since 1946, is giving already beleaguered show business an added kick in the pants. Five inns have been hit, Penn-Sheraton, Roosevelt, Pittsburgher, Sherwyn and Webster Hall, where pickets took up their posts shortly after midnight Tuesday (30) when negotiations between management and service workers' union became deadlocked. Only top downtown place still operating at full steam is Carlton House, which has a contract running until June 1.

Insiders look for an extended lockout that may even run as long —53 days—as the '46 strike since factions look nowhere near a possible basis for agreement.

Effects are being felt everywhere, but particularly among the niteries and taverns, which depend a lot on out-of-town visitors. Conventions right and left have been cancelled in the wake of the walkout, siphoning off hundreds of thousands dollars worth of revenue all over town, in addition to the direct loss itself.

Musicians are being hard hit, too. Number of local bands had been booked for parties and banquets in connection with the conventions and they're out the window. Penn-Sheraton had opened its new Harp and Crown a few days before the strike and that room was using a trio, a harpist and at least one act. Couple of the other hotels also had lounge entertainers.

Theatres can always count on trade from visitors, and that's going to cut in. With Nixon currently opening its legit season with "Li'l Abner," not only will boxoffice be hurt but housing of actors becomes a problem, too, although a couple of the smaller but less desirable hotels downtown are still in operation.

The two Golden Triangle niteries, New Arena and Copa, are going to get hurt the most since they depend for a lot of their trade on the traveling crowd. Likewise vulnerable are the flock of bars on Grant St. almost across the street from the Penn-Sheraton; their barometers can usually be scaled to the percentage of hotel reservations.

Cost of the '46 strike was placed at over $5,000,000 in lost wages and revenue to the hotels alone, and probably at least half that much more to other dependent businesses. At present rate of exchange, the figures are likely to be much higher unless a quick settlement is made. And at the moment that seems very unlikely.

Restyle Pr. of Wales Bill In Kath. Grayson's Exit

London, Oct. 7.

Kathryn Grayson has bowed out of her Prince of Wales vaude season, which was due to begin last night (Mon.), because of indisposition. As result, the entire bill has been rearranged.

The layout is now headlined by Dickie Valentine, Joan Regan and the King Bros. and also features Roy Castle, Joe Baker and Jack Douglas, Harry Bailey and a number of supporting acts.

Milt Trenier Singling

Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.

Milt Trenier, youngest of the four Trenier Bros., quit the act at the end of its engagement at the Copa Saturday (4) night to go out on his own as a single. He's being replaced this week in Newark by Denny Trenier Jr., son of the act's road manager.

Parting was said to have been amicable with Milt Trenier placing himself under the personal management of Dick Gabbe. Move had been planned for some time. Treniers are originally from Pittsburgh and got their start there.

D.C. Pigskin Club Budgets 75G For Halftime Shows

Washington, Oct. 7.

George Preston Marshall, who keeps his hand in show business while running his professional football team here, has budgeted $75,000 for six of the biggest halftime shows of his career during hometown games of the Washington Redskins.

Marshall, onetime actor, director and producer, has arranged for dancing elephants, a short National Symphony Orchestra concert under the baton of Howard Mitchell, a new 16-man chorus and other acts to join his 100-man band to fill the 12-minute halftime period with spectacle.

The money he has set aside will also purchase a new revolving all-aluminum stage, light enough to be moved on and off the field in two minutes, and a new portable RCA sound system.

This season will be the first that Marshall will not be assisted in staging the halftime shows by Corinne Griffith, silent film actress who is his wife. They are now separated. Miss Griffith, who conceived many of the most original shows presented at halftime over 25 years, is now living in Beverly Hills, Calif. With Barnee Breeskin, former Washington bandleader now in the public relations business here, she wrote the football team's song, "Hail to the Redskins."

Marlboro cigarettes and Amoco gasoline, sponsor of broadcasts of Redskins games over 41 tv and 80 radio stations in the Southeast (arranged by CBS), will pick up about half of the cost of Marshall's halftime shows this year.

Marshall originated the halftime spectacle when he started the Redskins in 1932—and has had such

RUSSELL'S 'MISS WORLD' STINT

Finals in the beauty contest, with femmes from 30 countries entered, will be held Monday (13) and will be telecast by the BBC.

12 'PRO' TOURERS IN EUROPE LOOP

Stuttgart, Oct. 7.

On the heels of the stir created by the VARIETY story about the inferior shows offered servicemen overseas in their officers, noncommissioned officers and enlisted men's clubs, Seventh Army headquarters here has come up with a highly practical decision on shows offered its servicemen abroad.

It has decided to expand the number of Seventh Army Entertainment Branch shows, consisting of its own talented personnel, and offer the military in Europe 12 free touring shows a year instead of the seven formerly presented annually.

The shows consist of a cast of from 10 to 16 talented servicemen —comedians, singers, dancers, musicians—plus several Wacs, who are auditioned throughout the Seventh Army Command (world's largest land army which under its NATO commitments concentrated most of its strength along the lonely borders dividing East and West Germany).

Director and producer Constantine Thomas auditions the servicemen and selects those to be assigned to the soldier shows. The men are given assigned or temporary duty to Seventh Army's Entertainment Branch for about five months—one for rehearsing the show, and four for touring.

Then the group tours through the area covered by the U.S. Army in Europe, especially concentrating on the remote areas—where if there are any professional paid shows at all provided through the Officers, NCO or EM clubs, they are generally small and inexpensive groups.

Each individual Seventh Army show tours for four months, and idea of the new setup will be to increase performances from the current 95 to 125—with the men doing as many as nine shows in six days.

A professional production staff, choreographer, arranger, comedy writers, put the shows together. Most are hour-long musical revues.

Since the pro entertainment supplied Seventh Army units in out-of-the-way places is very rare and not very professional, this will give the servicemen a chance to see their own buddies entertaining—and give the GIs, many of whom have a show business, radio or tv or film background, a showcase, plus providing added experience for them.

Latest production under this new plan is a musical revue with singers Pfc. Al Cohn and Pfc. Darrell Askey (formerly with the Singing Waiters at Greenwich Village's Champagne Club); comedy skits written by Pfc. Norman Kline and Pfc. Paul Gottlieb, utilizing Pfcs. Dick Belkin, Don Ginsberg, Dan Brickly, Bill Lobosco; dance numbers featuring Pfcs. Ray Becker, Pete MeMaci, Wayne Gerou and Jim Smith; sextet of modern jazzmen (all soldiers, naturally), with arrangements by Pfc. Paul Bauerfeind (formerly with CBS), costumes by Pfc. Bob Rosinek, scenery by Specialist-4th Class Ben Schechter, lighting by Pfc. Nelson Roddman.

GLOBAL MAGICO FEST IN LONDON OCT. 20

London, Oct. 7.

Top magicians from all parts of the world will be participating in the annual magic festival, which will run for a week at the Scala Theatre beginning Oct. 20.

The show is being presented under the auspices of the Magic Circle. Among the artists who will be appearing are Channing Pollock, U. S. magico currently at the Pigalle Restaurant; Amazing Randi from Canada; Slydini, an Italian-American; this year's Dutch amateur champion, Peter Pit; while the only femme performer will be Claudine, daughter of the now retired Claude Chandler.

Big N. Y. Nabe Spots Drop Name Lure In Bid for Convention-Banquet Biz

Elimination of talent as a major factor in bidding for the convention and banquet business in New York's nabe spots is probable this season. The four major large-seaters this season have adopted a strategy of keeping the nut low. Occasionally there will be a splurge, but the usual fare will be moderately priced acts.

The deciding factor in the elimination of the talent sweepstakes is Ben Maksik's Town & Country Club, Brooklyn. Since his petition in Chapter XI of the Federal Bankruptcy laws, Maksik has been forbidden by the court to go over a $3.500 show budget. It's the same kind of nut that the Elegante, Brooklyn, and Boulevard, Rego Park, L.I., will use. All feel that they can get representative shows for that kind of coin. The Golden Slipper, Glen Cove, L.I., is expected to have even lower expenditures.

Selling accent will consequently hinge on food deals, calibre of cuisine and facilities, with the promise of a good show inherent in every deal.

Maksik had been spending as much as $40,000 weekly for headliners in order to fill his spot. Jerry Lewis got that kind of money and gamble paid off handsomely. However, other deals didn't work out, and heavy losses resulted in some instances. Court took cognizance of the risk involved in heavy talent expenditures and restricted the budget.

Another factor that entered the deliberations on the amount to be spent on shows was the decision of the Casa Seville, Franklin Square, L.I., to restrict its use of shows to weekends or none at all, and go for catered business only. The Queens Terrace, Woodside, L.I., eliminated talent sometime ago to concentrate on party trade.

While such a development isn't healthy for the talent business in general, the remaining niteries welcome the situation since it takes top earning acts out of competitive markets, and elevates the values on the lower brackets. It insures much more work for the categories of talent that really need the work and do not have to retire midyear on the advice of accountants.

The major casualty in this situation are the lines. The $3,500 limit curtails the use of chorus girls, although Maksik will use a Buster Burnell line at first. Lines will be absent from the other nabe spots.

However, the midbracketed talent will be able to look forward to what will be banquet circuit on the nabe spots.

Empire Roll Call

Glasgow, Oct. 7.

Frank Mathie, manager of the Empire vaudery, celebrating 40 years in show biz, has handled more American acts than any other house manager hereabouts.

Those who have played his theatre in the past four years alone include Frankie Laine, Four Aces, Don Cornell, Bernard Bros., Billy Eckstine, Billy Eckstine, Billy De Wolfe, Hoagy Carmichael, Rosemary Clooney, Guy Mitchell, Cab Calloway, Deep River Boys, Eve Boswell, Crew Cuts, Al Martino, Harry Secombe, Jerry Colonna, Slim Whitman, Howard Keel, Eartha Kitt, Tex Ritter, Sarah Vaughan, the Teenagers, the Inkspots, Vic Damone, Connie Francis.

The Deep River Boys are currently headlining at the Glasgow house for the 12th time.

Fla.'s Wait & See Stance on Names Vs. %'er Squeeze

Miami Beach, Oct. 7.

The Gold Coast hotels are holding off on the buying of names as long as possible. Some headliners have been bought, but the bulk of the requirements are still to be lined up.

The bonifaces are still hoping to get the top level of names. Some have made trips to Hollywood to talk to some of the toppers, but so far the response has been indifferent. The operators are trying to get headliners such as Frank Sinatra, Jack Benny, Dinah Shore, Danny Thomas, Marlene Dietrich and others.

Once it's established that the bulk of these headliners aren't moving away from their swimming pools, or cannot make Florida because of film or video commitments, operators will go to work in other directions.

Those already signed for Florida include Joe E. Lewis, the Eden Roc; Sophie Tucker, the Latin Quarter; Tony Martin, the Diplomat, and Lilo also for the latter spot.

The agencies have tried to apply pressure, but apparently it's still too early to get responses from the bonifaces. The agencies have told the hotelmen that the longer they wait, the less talent will be available to them, and the names which could have been purchased earlier in the season for less money will carry higher pricetags come late October and November.

Appoint Robert H. Kent Mgr. of Greensboro Aud.

Greensboro, N. C., Oct. 7.

Robert H. Kent was named manager of Greensboro's War Memorial Auditorium last week. The building is under construction and will be ready for use late in 1959.

Kent, 36, manager of the Fayetteville, W. Va., War Memorial Auditorium and former manager of the Charleston (W. Va.) Civic Center, was formerly basketball coach at Beckley College in West Virginia and was associated with a sporting goods company. He is expected to take over his duties immediately at $9,600 a year.

El Perper is company manager and Maury Tuckerman stage manager for the Grenadier Guards and the Massed Pipers and Dancers of the Scotch Guards on the present tour under management of Sol Hurok.

Busy Max Bygraves; TV-Vaude-Concerts

Glasgow, Oct. 7.

Max Bygraves, a click here on a vaude date at the Empire Theatre, is readying a 60-minute act for BBC-TV Christmas Day. Comedian-singer will also headline for ATV on "Sunday Night at the London Palladium" Oct. 19.

Bygraves, who played to SRO biz here, follows with a week at Birmingham Hippodrome and a concert at Leicester, Eng. He is also huddling with film chiefs for a new pic, following his latest, "Cry from the Streets." He will star in a new revue at the London Palladium next April.

Modugno's Hub Date

Boston, Oct. 7.

A variety show is set for the Boston Arena Friday (10) with Domenico Modugno, riding on "Nel Blu Dipinto Di Blu," headlining, plus Ford & Hines, comedy team; Lecuona Cuban Boys, Rina Tell, soprano; Carlo Ranierl, impersonator.

Thomas Nazzaro is producing the show through MCA. Price scale is $1.65 to $4.40.

K.C. Coronation in Own Building At $7.50 Top; Kovacs & Adams' 1-Niter

Kansas City, Oct. 7.

Number of new twists will be incorporated in the Coronation Pageant which takes place here Oct. 17, kicking off the annual American Royal Livestock and Horse Show, Oct. 18-25. Coronation event will be held for the first time in the American Royal's own building on the edge of the stockyards district, breaking tradition in moving from the downtown Municipal Auditorium.

Coming in to appear at the Friday night event only are Ernie Kovacs & Edie Adams. There will be the annual crowning of the American Royal queen, presentation of society belles, the "Botars," and a 35-piece orch directed by Jack Lee. Show will be produced by Richard H. Berger, production director of the Starlight Theatre, who has annually doubled on these events in recent years.

An innovation in the coronation program will be a special intermission, stretched to 30 minutes so that guests may stroll through the animal pens adjacent and see the farm stock and horse flesh which will star during the following week of the show. A tab version of a horse show also will be presented Friday night by way of wising up the patrons for what's to come.

A policy change also will see a Kansas City girl crowned queen for the first time, in contrast to former practice which drew the queen from outside K.C. in tribute to the trade territory.

Also new this year will be a top price for the coronation of $7.50, against $6 which prevailed at the 8,000-seat auditorium. The A.R. building seats only 6,200, necessitating the change. The building, incidentally, is undergoing a considerable dolling up for the occasion.

The daily horse shows will have a number of added attractions, including the 32-man troop of Canadian Mounties who will appear throughout the show. "Whizzo," popular clown on KMBC-TV, will appear in several events of interest to children. The annual Saturday a.m. matinee of the Rodeo Kids will be held on the final day.

The sweeping changes are being made to give a sharper focus to the basic livestock and horse show theme and to center all activity in the American Royal, it was explained by Dallas Alderman, president, who is back in harness after recently suffering a broken leg.

PLAYBILL RESTAURANT TO HAVE LEGIT MOTIF

It's costing as much to build New York's newest theatrical eatery as it does to produce an average Broadway musical. Approximately $300,000 is being shelled out by the Zeckendorf Hotel Corp. for the Playbill Restaurant, which preems Oct. 26 in the recently-refurbished Hotel Manhattan, N. Y.

The room, which will have facilities for about 250 diners, plus a bar, will have legit motif. Decorated by Melanie Kehane, the spot will be patterned along theatre lines in having the menu in Playbill form, the service staff dressed as ushers, the cashier's desk as a boxoffice, the cloak room a "Prop Room," the ladies' powder room as "The Make-Up Room" and restaurant seating in simulated "boxes."

The wall of the Playbill bar will be dominated by the first theatre mural ever done by legit caricaturist Al Hirschfeld. The picture of a typical opening night intermission, caricatures the first-stringers and other regularr preem patrons. It will include Wolcott Gibbs and Herbert Bayard Swope, who have died since Hirschfeld finished the drawing.

'Capades' Whammo 490G

Cleveland, Oct. 7.

"Ice Capades," one of Cleveland Arena's top money-makers, did it again by boosting attendance 31.2%, over last year's figures.

Management claimed a smashing $490,000 in 25 performances, from estimated attendance of 165,226 at $3.75 top.

acts as the Ted Shawn dancers, waltzing bears, Carmen Cavallaro, Harold LeRoy, chorus girls, barbershop quartets and Meyer Davis' society orchestra through the years.

The top show has always been the last of the season here, in December, when Santa Claus makes a surprise entrance, always by a different form of transportation. And ideas have almost been exhausted by now. The old gent has entered by helicopter, rocket, circus car, horseback, parachute, Brink's armored truck, inside a Christmas tree and train, among others.

The new 16-man chorus (eight of whom sing professionally in New York as the Brigadiers) has made its bow out of town—at the Redskins' first league game, against the Eagles in Philadelphia, Sept. 28.

The Redskins Band, under the direction of Richard H. Viancour, is easily the best dressed in pro football, with white uniforms and huge, fuzzy white feathered Indian chief's headgear.

Marshall is in complete charge through the actual production, keeping in telephone contact with several locations on the field simultaneously.

Circus Acrobats Aren't Born, They're Educated In Soviet 'Four-Year' Plan

Washington, Oct. 7.

Moscow's four-year Circus School —where gymnastics and equilibristics are taught along with geography and physics — is described in the new issue of the magazine, USSR, published in English by the Russian Embassy here under a Russian-American agreement.

The author, Mikhail Dolgopolov, explains: "The course of study is four years. The first two are devoted to training in acrobatics, gymnastics, juggling and equilibristics. During the third year the student turns to specializing in the type of performance for which he has shown the most inclination. In the senior year, he prepares for his final examination with the teacher's aid.

"All circus school students receive state scholarships or stipends, the size of which depends upon their progress, and all tuition is free," Dolgopolov reports.

And, he says, "plenty of jobs" are waiting for all graduates in the 51 stationary circuses in the Soviet Union, along with 15 traveling tent circuses which visit "more than 150 cities each year." Also, there are "more than 50" traveling circus companies which perform on "variety theatre stages" in small towns and at collective farms.

Circus Review

Cirque Medrano, Paris

Paris, Oct. 3.

Jerome Medrano presents circus revue in two parts, "Bravissimo," by Walter Farnedi, Jacques Prely; staged by Geo Sandry; choreography, Miss Doriss; sets and costumes, L. Aguettand; music, Giovanni D'Anzi. With Rino Salviati, Raoul Delfosse & Christian Duvaleix, Guido Basio, Anedda Mandolins (6), Dorris Girls (18), Ghezzi Sisters (3), Salvatore Scandurra, Michele Marconi & Andre Rancy, Likajos (3), Tux, Wiskys (2); $2 top.

In an effort to renew itself and keep abreast of the rising music halls, this permanent one-ringer is now more a revue-in-the-round than a circus. This one mixes Italo locale, bel canto singers and vaude numbers with a couple of French comedians who give it a thread by their adventures on the run from police in Italy.

It moves briskly and has a fair eye value and enough diversion for the young trade. But it does not loom as the thing that will give this circus back its crowds of yore. Only circusy things are a girl dancing with a horse, a trapeze entry, and turning the ring into a tank for clown falls.

Christian Duvaleix & Raoul Delfosse have some moments as the French tourists involved in haunted houses, dreams of ancient Rome, etc. Rino Salviati is a sugary Neapolitan singer while Guido Basio is a syrupy tenor. It is okay for those going for the bel canto. Anedda Mandolins (6) supply a nice authentic pizzicato air.

Ghezzi Sisters (3) are a hefty femme group who do some savvy acrobatics for good mitts. Salvatore Scandurra eats plates, pots, nails, etc., but act is not for the queasy as he has a tendency to cut himself and drag it out. Tux is a deft juggler who foots kitchen utensils onto piles on his head, and the Wiskys (2) add a good trampoline interlude. Likajos (3) fight a duel over a shapely girl, and Tosca De Lac does fine arabesques and one-hand swings on the trapeze.

Classiest act is Michele Marconi & Andre Rancy as a dancer terps with a horse in not only imitating it but assimilating its stance and gaits. It is eyecatching, smart and applause-getting. Dorris Girls (18) do all sorts of dances and are young and goodlooking enough, plus being decorative, to overcome the lame choreography and gauche dancing.

In all, this is passable entertainment for those with circus leanings, but it lacks the derring-do and tinsel associated with this old form of show biz. This does not add to circus precepts, and is just another step in Medrano's searching for a direct new formula for a segment of show biz that has been wavering here for years. Music, sets, costumes and general production credits are good. Mark.

Brussels Counts Up Fiascos

long before the Expo opened, by extravagant rules. Nobody seemed to care at the time because hopes rocketed high: the Fair was to be a hen laying only golden eggs, every invested franc would multiply. Apparently everybody was in the illusion that fortunes would spring up mushroomwise. When hard facts dispelled that illusion and customers pulled thin purses, when not even expenses got covered and no tax relief could even be considered, the wailing began. But the Expo offered no wailing wall to lean against; neither was there a possibility to pull out. Contracts had been signed, clauses had to be respected. It is expected that many of the victims, while swimming against treacherous currents, have lost not only their investments but everything they possess.

The amusement park, perhaps the most disappointing fixture at the Fair, was most disastrously hit. Right from the beginning there was no real public response. Small wonder too: it offered nothing but a glorified local fairground. The heralded "best and most up-to-date Coney Island in the world" never came to pass. Only Saturdays and Sundays brought a semblance of interest to this very average amusement park. The Palladium, billed as "the biggest music-hall in the world" (with names of Sinatra, Judy Garland, Nat King Cole waved as bait but never booked) closed down almost as soon as it opened. It was subsekuently forced into existence again, functioning on very modest prices, and it is said that losses are appallingly high, a casualty amongst many others.

More than once, in this unhappy Fairland, concessionaires said. "A signature on a contract is like a noose around one's neck." Electricity was supplied them only at much above normal rates, not by the official Brussels electricity company but by the Fair which, controlling everything, made up its own prices. In fact a general dissatisfaction with prevailing conditions — these even extending to Merry Belgium, where not everything has been rosy either but which has nevertheless fared much better in spit of crushing taxes— has been noted here.

Cinerama was knitted into the patchwork of this so-called Amusement Park. Cinerama at $1.10 and $2, with the additional charge of the 30 francs (60c). Fair ticket, make this a real luxury.

The highlight was stolen by the Russian Kinepanorama with a 20 francs (40c) admission and plenty of queues to keep the boxoffice healthy and happy. This Russian Cinerama was just as impressive as its American counterpart, same process even slightly improved and propaganda values difficult to match. Between Cinerama and Kinepanorama, latter has won the battle.

The Soviets, Poles, Czechs and Hungarians, all with well-stuffed shops, if not exactly practising democratic prices, boomed; for th prospective buyer there is the at traction of having acquired some thing from an "aloof" country.

Another peculiar phenomeno has been the sudden appearance, i the heart of Brussels, of souveni shops all bearing the names of Iro Curtain countries. What was no sold at the Fair will undoubtedl come in handy here.

As for the motel situation righ from the start these hastily erecte "shelters" for unsuspecting travel lers were labelled "perfectly un comfortable" and "unduly expen sive" by irate victims. A barrag of well-founded criticism subse quently hampered the popularit of these motels whose operatin results have been disappointin to say the least.

ELLINGTON'S 1ST DATE IN BRIT. IN 25 YEARS

London, Sept. 30.

The Duke Ellington Orch will make its first appearance in Britain after a gap of 25 years when it opens a concert tour at the Royal Festival Hall next Sunday (5). The band will be presented by Norman Granz in association with Harold Davison and will feature Johnny Hodges and Ray Nance. On the British end of the swap is the Ted Heath outfit.

The Ellington orch will play 18 twice-nightly concerts and one-nighters in major towns. The majority of the stints will be at Rank theatres. Final date will be at the Gaumont State, Kilburn, Oct. 26. The next major American band attraction planned by Davison is the Count Basie orch which is skedded to do a tour next February.

Cuban Tropicana Sending 80-Person Unit to N.Y. For Travel Org's Shindig

Because next year's world travel convention of the American Society of Travel Agents will be held in Havana, the Tropicana nitery is sending to New York its entire floorshow of 80, including a 20-piece native Cuban orchestra, to entertain the ASTA group Nov. 3 at the Waldorf-Astoria. New York is the site of this year's conclave; last year the travel agents convened in Madrid; in 1956 they met in Chicago, and the year before that in Lausanne, Switzerland.

Because of the multi-billion dollar business that world tourism is today, the ASTAites get top VIP treatment from hoteliers, restaurateurs, et al. The Tropicana, Havana, show will serve as a sort of preview of the 1959 brand of hospitality the Cuban capital has promised.

Some 2,000 travel agents will come, in off-season, i.e., around this time, to New York and are billeted among the Commodore, Roosevelt and Biltmore. Some who are extending their stays are also at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Benito Ruiz, head of the Cuban Tourist Bureau Commission, is escorting the Tropicana show on its five-day visit to the U. S., climaxed by the Monday night (Nov. 3) gala.

For the first time, other than Easter Sunday services, Radio City Music Hall is opening its doors to a Monday (3) morning semester, at which Gov. Averell Harriman will speak. This, incidentally, is tantamount to "invading" opposing gubernatorial candidate Nelson Rockefeller's domain, especially as the next day is Election.

Randy Wood

ago sparked the rest of the pic companies to enter into the disk biz, said that the mutual exploitation values between the disk and pic industries has been fully established. He said that there is no doubt that hit songs like Pat Boone's "April Love" and "Love Letters in the Sand," Debbie Reynolds' "Tammy" and the flock of Elvis Presley pic songs have boosted the film b.o. substantially. As for the flock of film players who have recently made their bow on wax, Wood believed that few of them will make it on disks.

The importance which the picture makers give to disk exploitation is evidenced now by the fact that disk artists & repertoire men are asked to comment on the score in the pre-production phase. For instance, Wood was called in a month ahead of Par's shooting of "Mardi Gras" to go over the score with writers Paul Francis Webster and Sammy Fain. The aim, Wood said, is to come up with a pop song which is exploitable on disks. Since the Hollywood tunesmiths are aware of how important this is, they cooperate fully in making the necessary changes in the score.

Mabel Mercer's OK Recital In G'wich Village at $4.60

Gus Schirmer Jr. has a keen eye for a cult. In bringing in Mabel Mercer for the kickoff of his "Monday Nights At Nine" diversions to the intime Cherry Lane Theatre in New York's Greenwich Village, he also brought along the fans who've flocked to her chantoosing at eastside saloons (she's doubling currently from the R.S.V.P.) for the past several years. And at a flat $4.60 admission, sans booze, it's a neat trick in any promoter's book.

Schirmer now has a double-barreled operation going for him at the Cherry Lane. With his clicko production of "The Boy Friend" on every night but Monday, the open night looks to be a full one if he can sustain the calibre of the Mabel Mercer "diversion." Thrush will follow her bow (6) with performances on Oct. 13 and 20 and then "Monday Nights At Nine" will have to look to someone else to pull 'em in.

Right now the series is in capable hands. It's a tough assignment to hold down a stage for more than two hours with nothing more than a songbag, a staircase, a red velvet chair and a lectern for props and a piano and bass assist in the pit but Miss Mercer does it with ease. The repertoire has been programmed with care and enough mood-changes to hold interest throughout.

Most of the repertoire consists of chic little items from the pens of Alec Wilder, Bart Howard, Alex Fogarty and Cy Walter, which she's popularized in cafes, but they all serve to showcase her stylized phrasing and dramatic warbling. Some are just hints of tunes but she puts enough body into it to get the message across. And when she goes really dramatic as in a series of songs out of the Maxwell Anderson-Kurt Weill score for "Lost In The Stars," she's deeply moving. Rodgers & Hart, too, come off well in her moody interpretation of "Little Girl Blue."

It's an arty musical exhibition and that dead end street (Commerce) in the Village is the right setting for it. Gros.

HANKER FOR ANKA

Tokyo, Sept. 30.

Touring Canadian singer Paul Anka has received an offer to star in a Shochiku picture after his singing appearances ended here Sunday (28). The film would be called "Chimney Girl" and the bouncy balladeer would play a tourist aboard a Tokyo Bay excursion boat singing some songs and having romantic overtones with Japanese actress Yoshie Mizutani.

Problem appears to be monetary, with Anka seeking dollar payment.

SOOCHA RENAY

The Dallas Morning News:

DALLAS AFTER DARK by TONY ZOPPI

Renay a Smash In Any Language

Soocha Renay, about the nicest dish of Hungarian goulash to hit our town since Zsa Zsa Gabor, made her Century Room bow here Thursday night. Easily the most sophisticated entertainer to appear here since Liberace, Miss Renay could easily emerge as the surprise act of 1958.

She combines a delightful flair for Continental humor with a pleasing delivery in a 45-minute presentation which bears the stamp of Anna Sosenko's gift for perfection.

La Sosenko, as you probably know, was the guiding genius behind Hildegarde's climb to stardom. It appears safe to assume she will do equally as well with her most recent protege.

Soocha, which probably means "Terrific" if spelled backwards in Hungarian, is a condensed version of the United Nations. She sings fluently in French, Italian, Spanish, German and English. Her material is almost entirely original and touches on such delicate subjects as "L'amour in a Jaguar;" "Rock and Roll in Russia;" "Cowboy Infatuation in Budapest;" and "Calypso in China."

Only pop tunes offered during her well-paced stint were "Volare," and "Don't Blame Me."

BLESSED WITH a marvelous sense of humor, the headliner kept the proceedings moving with delicious bits of nonsense between songs. Even some of the lines which were supposed to be comparatively serious, came out funny.

The burlesque on American adult westerns is especially hilarious and the discussion of the handicaps one meets while trying to pet in a foreign car is a gasser.

A piano-vocal duet with Joe Richman on a French interpretation of "Love Is A Many Splendored Thing" provided one of the evening's highlights. As for the Reichman band, it cut one of the toughest scores of the year in its usual expert fashion.

In closing, we make the prediction that the Renay show will become one of the biggest box office draws of the season. Not since the aforementioned Liberace played the Adolphus has the room offered such a smart brand of entertainment.

As for Miss Sosenko; who said lightning doesn't strike twice in the same spot?

Dallas Times Herald:

RINGSIDE TABLE with DON SAFRAN

Launching a New Star Into Orbit

REVIEWING STAND: Considering that the Air Force is in the midst of a convention in this city, it is only appropriate that the Adolphus Hotel launch its own version of a guided missile.

And the new star is Soocha Renay, who comes packaged and custom-made by Anna Sosenko, who has previously lit the fuse to Hildegarde's career.

But Soocha is an original creation, patterned after nobody and off and winging to major stardom in her own Viennese manner.

Soocha's act is practically all special material, all clever, much of it sophisticated and humorous, and all in good taste. And Soocha herself is a magnificent interpreter of her material, with a comedienne's timing and all the glamour of a chanteuse.

Her version of the "International Rock 'n' Roll," done in seven languages is an hilarious and subdued takeoff. But so is her oriental version of calypso, which she explains may be dated in the U.S. but has just reached China.

Soocha, in this country seven years, will soon be the rage of it. She has the style, class, material and, not least of all, the tutor. If she isn't the best new act of the year, she must be, at least, the second best.

Joe Reichman's orchestra did their duty with their customary zeal and skill.

MacDougall Card Trick Show for GIs Is Both Entertaining, Instructive

Frankfurt, Sept. 30.

USO has proved itself unusually perceptive in booking a show apropos for the military on this side of the Atlantic.

It's Michael MacDougall, author of "Gamblers Don't Gamble," "Danger in the Cards," "MacDougall On Dice" and a syndicated column. In a laugh-provoking and thought-provoking tight 40 minutes, entertainer MacDougall proves that he's much more than a gambling mathematician—he's a man who knows a raw deal when he's confronted with one. With a rapid-fire patter Mickey stressed that while his own card cut-ups are sleight-of-hand magic, the same tricks are employed by plenty of cheats in uniform.

MacDougall is a mighty fast man with the spiel and with the cards, and his 40 minutes evaporate as fast as the cards slide through his facile hands. He has an ad lib for every occasion, and rates his highest applause by picking two local bridge players who shuffle and deal the cards, then beating them at every trick with his own invisible stacking.

His pretty partner-wife, Diane Navarro, proves a plus assist on a couple of outside card tricks. Show, titled "Gambols of 1958," has been a must for service clubs. Haze.

Jamal 3, Dakota Staton Credited With the Draw At Health's Carnegie Bash

Ted Heath began his third annual trek in the U.S. at New Yorks' Carnegie Hall Friday (3) in tandem with the Ahmad Jamal Trio and Dakota Staton. Although the British bandleader has a solid following here via his London Records releases, it was the Jamal group and Miss Staton who mainly can be credited for pulling in sold-out house biz for the 8:30 p.m. and 11:30 p.m. performances.

Jamals' keyboard is ably supported by a bassist and a drummer who lay down a hefty rhythm beat to support the leader's riffing. It's not substantial concert hall stuff but he does manage to bring in enough imaginative tinkling to keep the aud interested.

Miss Staton, building steadily via her Capitol albums, reprised numbers from her clicko sets, "In The Night" and "The Late, Late Show" as well as her latest release, "Dynamic." Tunes and styling were familiar to virtually everyone in the house, but they still can't seem to get enough of her. "Her Cherokee," "My Funny Valentine," and "Misty" are just a few of the items that kept the house happy for more than a half hour.

Memories of Carl Brisson

during the Kerensky (1917) uprising as result of street fighting. The authorities had told all foreigners to play it safe and stay away from windows; the younger Pederson's curiosity brought him too close to a window at his hotel and a stray bullet got him.

Both Carl and Cleo Brisson's superb physical condition, apart from defying the years, saw them taking Xmas-New Year's swims off Hay Island (Conn.), where they frequently visited Ed and Pegeen Fitzgerald. The neighbors were astounded at the pair churning up the sound in midwinter. Incidentally, the Fitzgeralds' WOR plugging of Brisson, when he came into the old Club Versailles, N.Y., then an unknown quantity, had something to do with his impact. Fitzgerald had just gotten back from Denmark and knew first-hand how big an idol Brisson was in his native land, in England, and throughout Europe.

It was by prearrangement that Greta Garbo, then a film extra in Sweden, was called onstage by Brisson during one of his Scandinavian personals as a "comer"—she was heralded as a little girl who had started working in a barbershop.

While eventually big in the U.S., Brisson's heart was in his native Denmark. He had been twice decorated by the Danish and Swedish governments. Gustaf II of Sweden, long a tennis buff, was sojourning in Paris in 1922 and made the French capital the occasion of first decorating Brisson as the first civilian air passenger crossing the channel via the old British Imperial Airways.

Good Business Man

Brisson was ever a shrewd business man. He owned a chain of clothing stores in Denmark, a la the Robert Hall operation. A line of Brisson vintages and spirits also carries his name.

Brisson was originally a ballroom dancer and one of the best. Both as an acrobatic act and later as a dancer, where language was no problem, being a "dumb" act, he was widely accepted in almost every land where he toured extensively before settling down into a romantic song-and-dance leading man.

A Great Dane canine was his trademark, for obvious reasons, but also because he basically liked animals. The pigeons from Central Park know that the Brisson penthouse had a special trough for them. An unlikely pet such as a turtle became his traveling companion in later years, and it was a running gag to his intimates how he'd catch flies to feed the turtle.

When Brisson came into The 3 Crowns restaurant in New York everybody knew it because of his lavish manner of entertaining with accent on the aquavit-with-beer-chasers. One of fans, a little French girl whose devotion belied any suspicion of any romantic attachment, virtually became a family retainer, as his personal aide. She has been through a series of operations (eyes, etc.), all at the Brissons' expense.

Brisson's favorite story concerned his uncle who bought a seven-plot family area in a Copenhagen cemetery and who visited it almost daily, just to sit in the shade and cogitate. One day he came to Carl and asked would he approve changing the location of the plots—the uncle's mortal remains, it appears, would be in the shade and "I prefer to be buried in the sun," he told the actor. Brisson acquiesced.

CHI HIGH ON JAZZ WITH TWO ENTRIES

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Current jazz prosperity in Chicago is underlined with the launching of two more showcases.

Pat Moran Trio and chirper Bev Kelly, longtime fixtures at the old Cloister Inn, have just kicked off a jazz policy at Stelzer's Restaurant in the new Lake Meadows housing spread just south of the Loop. At the north end of town, Tom Sullivan's (nee Irv Benjamin's steakery) opens Oct. 31 with singer Lurlean Hunter and the Charlotte Polite Trio, with likelihood the combo will develop as house band.

Windy City just missed on a third new jazzery when the bankroller backed out of the proposed VIP Room, which was to have opened Sept. 27 with Barbara Carroll spotlighted.

Stomping at Savoy

there and it was the first ballroom to showcase the famed King Oliver and Louis Armstrong. It was axiomatic that an ofay band of any school didn't actually meet the test until it passed muster at the Savoy. Those who qualified included Rudy Vallee, Guy Lombardo, the Dorsey Bros., Glenn Miller and many others. Visitors to that shrine of music included Winston Churchill and Greta Garbo. The Savoy was also the inspiration of a song, "Stompin' at the Savoy," by Edgar Sampson and Benny Goodman.

Gale is now toying with the idea of recreating the Savoy on another site. He's studying the realty locations, costs and will reopen another Savoy, if feasible. Gale is reluctant to let this rich piece of Harlem musical history pass completely.

Gale would also open with the same basic idea that started the original ballroom. He felt that Negroes should have the same fine dance facilities offered to the palefaces in midtown New York. It was to be a ballroom for Negroes and operated by Negroes. Although it shared billing as the top Negro showcase, along with the late Cotton Club, it's pointed out that Negroes weren't too welcome at the Cotton Club for a long time. The Savoy strove to become part of the Negro community and accomplished this aim during its lifetime.

Empire, Glasgow

Glasgow, Oct. 2.

Max Bygraves (with Bob Dixon), Three Brittons, The Falcons (3), Mink Devine & Barbara, Fred Lovelle, Garland Girls (3), Claudine (with Old Stephens), Three Orchid Dancers, Bobby Dowds Orch.

On this showing Max Bygraves can be classed, easily, as the U.K.'s prime entertainer. Playing to SRO biz, and with an easy charm and polish that derives from experience in vaude, comedian does a virtual Danny Kaye with a one-man offering that brings warm mitting and much appreciation.

Garbed in smart evening suit, slim and handsome, boyish-looking Englishman, who has made much headway recently via discliks, sings happily, gags with topicality, and wows both adult and juve outfronters with his travesties. Singer also knows how to use his hands to artistic effect, a fact crystallized in his own tune "Hands." He receives strongest ovation of any entertainers at this house in many months.

Bygraves, not long back from guesting on the Perry Como tv show in N.Y., is accompanied by his longtime pianist Bob Dixon, himself an acquisition via ivory-tinkling know-how and also pokerface in comedy.

Mink Devine is baggy-breeched musical clown who indulges in familiar piano madness, plays xylophone well, and makes comedy byplay with femme partner Barbara, a looker. Exits to good palming.

The Falcons score strongest hit of a mixed-quality support layout. Two males and a rubber-limbed distaffer knock each other about with careless and carefree abandon; nimble-moving femme, particularly, wins big yocks, and act garners top palming. The Three Brittons, two males and a femme, register well with cycle skill and club-tossing, and do worthwhile work on unicycles. Claudine is an attractive femme magician, aided by a male partner; her poodle-appearing trick scores with its surprise and skill.

Fred Lovelle is ventriloquist who projects voice into old-man character in suitcase, duets with his dummy, and pleases with imaginary lilliputian character on his hand. The Garland Girls, attractive trio of redheads, do overlong act that doesn't equal their lack of singing talent; chirpers also dance, but need act to be sharpened as well as injection of savvy in the chirping dept. Three Orchid Dancers open both segments adequately.

Alhambra, Paris

Paris, Oct. 1.

Roger-Pierre, Jean-Marc Thibault, Colette Dereal, Don Lurio & Co. (6), Quatre De Paris, Trio Martelli, Wilson, Keppel & Betty, Andre Gely, Claude Stiermans Orch (15); $2 top.

The comedy team of Roger-Pierre and Jean-Marc Thibault have built their four-week vaude stint at the big Alhambra-Maurice Chevalier into a revue-like affair. A series of sketches, running gags and dance interludes are interlarded with a few house numbers. Wit, inventiveness and warmth keep this moving along and gloss over the few weak spots to make this a vaude revue which should do a neat biz here, but is too limited for any export values.

Pierre & Thibault have come up from the boites and their skits are sometimes outlines of a comic idea which hit in boites, where there is more audience complicity, but can seem too skimpy to cross the ramp in a big house. They have managed to overcome this hurdle in adding scope to most of their sketches, but sometimes fall down on the many quick inserts and running gags for curtain changes.

But, on the whole, this is racy and disarming and Pierre's sophistication and Thibault's more universal good-guyism combine to make them an engaging pair with a strain of the poetic mixed in with their comedics. Neat observation and satire also enliven their humor.

Colette Dereal is a good skit foil and displays some fine caricatural ideas in song takeoffs, while Andre Gely, Nono Zammit and Pierre Laurent are fine in the fill-in repeat gags and interludes. Don Lurio & Co. (6) bring a zesty group of terp segments into it. Don Lurio is much better than his troupe. He gives a needed breath of ease and fantasy to the usually earthbound pop dance picture here.

A few lookers help with the sketches, and the Trio Martelli, Quatre De Paris and Wilson, Keppel & Betty are the number fillers. Martellis are a knockabout dance act with two men throwing around a little girl for good sight and comic values. Quatre are a singing group with a tendency to oversell their numbers. Wilson, Keppel & Betty is a funny team taking off on Egyptian dances.

Claude Stiermans orch (15) gives good support to this pleasant show. This formula may now help the Alhambra give the still straight vaude Olympia Music Hall a run for its money this season. Future headliners will follow the same format at the Alhambra. Mosk.

Apollo, N. Y.

Illinois Jacquet Band (12), Mickey & Sylvia, Andy Rose, Wanderers (4), Ruth McFadden, Pigmeat & Freddie, Mona Desmond, Bunny Briggs; "Port Afrique" (Col.)

For the current session the Harlem vaudes abandons the rock 'n' roll pattern for some cool jazz dished out by tenor sax man Illinois Jacquet supported by the fancy stepping of Bunny Briggs and the hip dueting of Mickey & Sylvia.

Program gets off to a slow start with the first three acts adding little to the fare, and it is not until the Wanderers get up to do their stuff that the house become alive. Leading off is Mona Desmond, billed as sexciting and exotic. No matter what the billing says, Miss Desmond is a bump & grind artist who shakes her way through her act with only a so-so amount of dexterity. Pigmeat & Freddie, an act with frequent bookings at the Apollo, fail to register. Pigmeat, dressed in his customary baggy clothes, draws on material which is on the tired side. Although his stuff is geared for the colored constitutents, his gags do not get the normal quota of laughs. A follower of the rock 'n' roll cult, Rose runs through "Love Oh Love" and "Just Young" in dull fashion.

The Wanderers quartet is one of the most exciting groups to play the 125 St. theatre in weeks. The boys have plenty of class to go along with their finely blended voices. In no time at all they go through a repertoire which includes "Gonna Live Till I Die," "Madamoiselle" and "Thinking of You." Ruth McFadden, another house regular, has improved her warbling since first caught. She does right by "Paper Moon" and "My Darling."

Bunny Briggs adds to the show with his fancy stepping. Mickey & Sylvia blend their voices well and have the basics of showmanship down pat. Numbers are characterized by originality.

Illinois Jacquet wraps up the package scoring easily with two original compositions, "Cool Blues" and "Blow Illinois, Blow." In both numbers Jacquet plays the sax like he owns it. The jazzman has surrounded himself with some top talent, all of whom give a good account of themselves. Bern.

L'Olympia, Paris

Paris, Sept. 29.

Luis Mariano, Raymond Devos, Larry Adler, Amin Bros. (2), Trio Ariston, Wasta, Claude Goaty, Jean-Marie Preslier, Pilar De Oro & Alfred Gil Co. (11), Suzanne Gabriello; $2 top.

Luis Mariano is a hinterland disk bestseller and star of vintage-type operettas still working the French stage and film musicals. But for musichall boards he is somewhat lacking. Mariano has some strength in his tenor voice, but his songs are mainly in the "June-Moon" rhyme category and his stance, movements and song intros are all precious and a bit gauche.

He runs through a flock of syrupy ballads and then does some big-lunged standards, a la "Granada," which are okay. Mariano looks a better bet for his usual callings than for the more demanding vaude boards

Fortunately, the show is filled out with two solid names, and a group of fillers of top calibre, to make this a soundly-spined show. Raymond Devos and Larry Adler get the lion's share of the program kudos.

Devos emerges one of the top standup comedians here in a savvily staged act. His humor borders on the supernatural and is underscored with wise shafts of emotion. With his sure tempo, timing and miming, Devos' work is of top yock content.

Adler goes with ease from Bach to the blues in his sure, masterful harmonica stint. Skipping through a Bach "Gavotte" with delicacy, and into "St. Louis Blues," lowdown and haunting, by way of Gershwin and a couple of standards this is first-rate programming and mitts are mighty.

Claude Goaty is an okay chirp with good phrasing and delivery. But there is a lack of originality, and her songs are better done by others. Jean-Marie Preslier gives out with patter on the troublesome current events here. He sometimes hits, but misses too often to make this anything but an acceptable filler.

Trio Ariston are a dynamic acro-dance group with flair and precision to make their comic and serious doings into a solid act. Amin Bros. (2) are one of the classiest risley acts to be seen in some time here. One backs to a table and foots the other into whirling, dervishing arabesques to get gasps and big reaction from the audience. Wasta does a pleasing oldtime knockabout act.

Pilar De Oro & Alfredo Gil Co. are a smartly costumed, precise Hispano dance group of eight girls and three men who provide eye-catching interludes. They help give the show production dress and dimension. Suzanne Gabriello is witty and elegant as the femcee who goes through a series of dress changes along with each act.

After drawing practically a four-week SRO session with the Platters, the Olympia is now well into its season and shows vaude to be a very much alive thing in this town. Mosk.

Stig Lommers Revue

(Svend Asmussen Show)

Malmoe, Sweden, Sept. 27.

Boerge & Arvid Mueller present Svend Asmussen and orch (6), Preben Uglebjerg, Lulu Ziegler, Dan & Baxen, Judy Gringer, 3 Attilas, Kjeld Noerregard. At Soedra Teatret, Malmoe (Sweden); $2.50 top.

Svend Asmussen, 42, whose LP's appeal also to Americans, is the star of this very amusing and highly enjoyable little (in all, 17 persons) revue. Versatile Danish artist is not only a violin virtuoso, bandleader and singer, but also a splendid comedian. A showman par excellence, his musical arrangements are original, imaginative and very funny with regard to the parodied lyrics. His "Little Rock 'n' Roll" number even has a serious slant: It's a combination of Negro spirituals (with stage lights out) and fast r&r (while lights are on) with the lyrics riding an tongue-in-check attack against the happenings in Little Rock. "Nights in Naples" has saucy lyrics as Asmussen and his soloists appear as typical Italianos, with black hair, crooked noses, etc. Again another pokes fun at Swedish folk bands and their narrow-minded musicians. All very amusing.

Next to Asmussen, Dan & Baxen, Danish clowns, rate big. Both are howlers all through. They enact musicians of the longhair type and their zanies evidence much skill and imagination. Acclaimed as Denmark's best clowns at present, they recommend themselves for the best houses.

Preben Uglebjerg, another Danish fun-maker, does a good job with "I Love Paris" bringing this tune (via the different mentalities) the American, British and German way. He also has a number with Judy Gringer which is highly suggestive, but this is nothing unusual in Scandinavia. Lulu Ziegler contributes a number of songs, while the Attilas come along with various (mostly sexy) dances.

All in all, it's a well balanced, eye-filling (the costumes are very colorful) show. A stout b.o. click. Hans.

Ted Heath

half of the bill, is in the U. S. on an exchange deal with the Duke Ellington orch. His is a highly polished orch that sends out a beat with plenty of musical savvy. He showcases pianists Stan Tracy, trombonist Keith Christie and vocalist Dennie Lotus to good effect, making it a well-rounded musical presentation.

His songbook includes such as "High Noon," "Exactly Like You," "I'm Beginning To See The Light," "Somewhere Over The Rainbow" and "Crazy Rhythm." Its' varied fare in expert hands but it doesn't seem to be enough of a lure to bring in the customers for a payoff. Gros.

Progress-Crazy Japan Teams Kabuki With Modern Escalated Restaurant

By DAVE JAMPEL

Tokyo, Oct. 7.

Playing to dwindling business in a nation rushing to update itself, kabuki will receive a hypo with a 5,000,000 Shin Kabuki-za (New Kabuki Theatre) in Osaka skedded to debut Oct. 30.

Builder Kunizo Matsuo, topper of the Sentochi Theatrical Co., heaved with pride when discussing his investment which he told VARIETY his world travels have convinced him will result in the world's best theatre.

He explained that the house will seat 2,000 and have a dining room accommodating 1,500. With exhibitions of Japanese tradition and a two-way escalator connecting its three floors, Matsuo believes his theatre would become a world showplace.

Conceding the decline in popularity of kabuki to its present state of financial dependence, Matsuo said a kabuki operation can reap profits from theatre concessions.

He said he also plans to modernize scripts and productions for the Shin Kabuki-za in an effort to recapture the lost segment of audience. Now, he offered, the younger generation is indifferent and even adult Japanese have difficulty understanding kabuki's 300-year-old stylizations.

Now negotiating with Sol Hurok for a U. S. kabuki tour in 1960, when Matsuo gets to Washington he said he plans to present a statue of the famed fierce samural warrior Shibajaku for a place among the cherry blossoms. He will also contribute a bunraki-sized (two-thirds life size) kabuki doll to a U.S. museum.

Saranac Lake

By Happy Benway

Saranac Lake, Oct. 7.

Among the new appointments on odd jobs while recuperating: Switchboard operators, Elsie Schreyer, Virginia Godwin, Lindsay MacHarrie, Steven Mantzner; mail delivery, Max Rosenthal; downtown shoppers, Elsie Schreyer and Joseph Shambaugh; delivery of packages and papers, Shambaugh; official greeter, Benton C. Ressler.

Kay Rudolph checked in on our third floor for the usual o.o. and rest routine.

Bob Cosgrove, Columbia Pictures staffer, after four weeks here kicked over a virus and left to end his summer vacation in the downtown actors colony at the Miller Cottage.

Thomas Scotti, a Metro staffer for over 25 years who regained his health here, in for that yearly checkup and drew an all-clear.

Bill (& Mack) Jennings, blackface comic of yesteryear, is fighting off bursitis at the Beacon Chambers, Boston.

Ray Tietzen, IATSE member from Gotham, all agog over the visit from his wife Jean, who came in from N. Y. and his sister Sally Allen who planed in from Miami.

New Acts

JERRY COLONNA
Songs
45 Mins.
Tropicana, Las Vegas

Jerry Colonna's new act is getting warm endorsement from habitues of the Tropicana Hotel lounge, where the popeyed comedian-musician with the improbable mustache fronts a very fine Dixieland group. Colonna himself plays the trombone with finesse, and turns the spotlight over to other members of the band for impressive solos. Star sings with his w.k. unique delivery such numbers as "Road to Mandalay," "Chicago Style," "I Love Life" and "Ebb Tide," getting hefty yocks with each.

His all-vet music men are Chico Alvarez on trumpet; Phil Gomez, clarinet and sax; Bernie Billings, sax; Bill Campbell, piano; Fred Thomas, bass; and Charles Lotus, drums. Carolyn Gray, a pretty blonde who used to chirp with the Gene Krupa orch, capably handles the distaff vocals.

The Colonna name, plus word-of-mouth about the music and showmanship, is a virtual guarantee that the act will do business. Duke.

DOROTHY LOUDON
Comedienne
14 Mins.
Blue Angel, N. Y.

This trim, talented young performer obviously has been around but not in VARIETY's files. She is ideally suited for a room of this type since her rapid-fire, glib delivery of the double-meaning dialog is put across with elan.

Miss Loudon takes the audience into her confidence immediately by plainly stating she's about to sing several dramatized skits. Opener is "Love Comes Easy in Louisiana," which is loaded with lilting lyrics and double-entendre but which pleases the patrons. Her second offering, smartly geared for this room, is tagged "Westport" but it concerns married couples throughout suburbia. No punches are pulled in socking over the sex angle in this.

Comedienne has some smart ad libs and sharp intro remarks for each routine. She wisely bows off while still ahead via her song version of a "Ruth Snyder-Judd" number. One could question the taste of such a grisly subject but Miss Loudon clowns it up enough to put it across. Comedienne looks like a sure bet for anybody's saloon. Wear.

GEENE COURTNEY
Songs
40 Mins.
Le Cabaret, Toronto

Breaking in a new act here, with arrangements by Ken Welsh, Geene Courtney is a snake-hips, blonde looker who not only sings but also dresses in a sexy, black-lacquered evening gown. She not only has the voice but the body. With her table-hopping and style, plus the mike, she is definitely in the intimate classification, together with that choice of numbers that got a double helping from the customers, both male and female, in this posh nitery.

Miss Courtney opens with a swaying "Lullabye of Broadway," with up-to-date lyrics, segues into "Rhythm in Blues" and "He Belongs to You;" then for a tempo change into "Good Man is Hard to Find," with a restrained grind finale. She is a big bet for the class saloons. McStay.

THE IDIOTS (6)
Comedy, Songs
30 Mins.
Stardust, Las Vegas

Freddie Morgan and Mousie Garner, former sidemen with the Spike Jones orch, have formed a group starring themselves which they call "The Idiots." Bang-browed Morgan, with a robbery face, and Garner, whose kisser could pass for a chubby little mouse, are top-level artists both as slapstick zanies (where their timing and facial expressions are perfect), and as musicians. Morgan, who cleffed "Mr. Banjo," scores as a plunnker, and Garner's 88ing is smoothly integrated into the shenanigans. The boys have $16,000 worth of comedy props, and they use them generously.

Ideal foil in the skits is a gorgeous, big-bosomed Amazon called simply Mlle. Lisette. Solid backing in the music department is given by the balance of the group: Dickie Phillips on bass, guitar and violin; Bill Hinrichs, accordion; and Homer Escamilla, drums.

"The Idiots" is an act that should click strongly in any situation where uninhibited humor is welcomed. Duke.

LYNN CORY
Songs
13 Mins.
Gatineau, Ottawa

Lynn Cory is a short, brunet looker with a clicko set of pipes. She's been thrushing in niteries less than a year and still lacks some showmanship savvy and staging, but when she builds her stint stronger she could make a definite dent in the canary slots. Femme has plenty potential in the visual range but it will be her piping that will boost her to what career heights she might eventually hit.

At this stage, she's good for disking and radio. With trimming and tightening, stint would be okay for niteries and television. Gorm.

Hotel Roosevelt, N. Y.

Sammy Kaye Orch (19), with Lynn Roberts, Larry Ellis, Ray Michaels, Hank Kanui, Jay Blassingame Bond, Johnny Amoroso, Three Kaydets; $1-$2 cover, no minimum.

Sammy Kaye is back again, this being his second engagement this year and fourth appearance in the Roosevelt Grill. And Neal Lang, general manager of the Hotel Roosevelt, should take a bow for bringing back the "swing and sway" maestro so soon, judging from the opening night crowd. Kaye's recent launching of his own tele show is reflected in the new audience, plus the more conservative patrons, always a familiar sight at the Grill. Kaye's aggregation obviously appeals to both the youthful, effervescent crowd and the heavier-spending older generation.

The current Kaye combo, boasting 19 with the balladeers and vocal groups, is one of the sharpest he has had in years. This stems partly, of course, from working on tv. He has a whole new batch of warblers plus some oldtimers like Jay Blassingame Bond and Johnny Amoroso. Kaye's band now has four sax and four brass.

The new femme vocalist is Lynn Roberts, a comely, willowy miss who measures up to Kaye's rep of always having an attractive gal singer who can "cut" it. One of her better numbers is "Everybody Loves A Lover." Another fresh face is Hank Kanui, who goes in for Hawaiian tunes. One of his topflight songs is "Little Brown Shack."

Larry Ellis, also new, teams up with Bond, for excellent returns with "Bird Dog," one of the comedy songs put over. "Way Down Yonder in New Orleans" is a group effort that had the dance crowd swinging. Ray Michaels, another new balladist, is standout with "Volare."

Other tunes made popular by Kaye include "Did You Ever See a Dream Walking," "Hurry Back To My Heart" and "Yearning Just For You."

Victor, who has been at the Grill for 34 years, still is the affable maitre d'. Wear.

Hotel Statler, Wash.

Washington, Sept. 30.

Ada Cavallo, Steve Kisley Orch (9), Bob Kasha Combo (3); $1.50 cover.

Opening the new season, the Statler's Embassy Room has never been as beautiful. Rich shades of gold and Madison Ave. gray and skillful use of lights give the place a look of elegance and intimacy. Two small fountains cascading water are tricky additions.

The Embassy abandoned its former big-name policy several years ago as a loser. Its present talent, signed to stay indefinitely, adds up to an enjoyable, relaxed evening.

Ada Cavallo, who has previously sung in other Statlers, has a top-notch voice handsomely tailored for the supper club atmosphere. Surrounded by four violinists, she does a great job on the slow, sentimental ballads. A native of the Dominican Republic of Italian parentage, she can sing sweet and hot in six languages, including Greek and Portuguese. Fast-moving Spanish numbers are a specialty.

Steve Kisley, who has made a big hit with Embassy regulars, is in his seventh year at the spot. Added this time to alternate with Kisley's society orch is a trio led by Bob Kasha, superb Hungarian pianist who spent many years with Sammy Kaye.

Strengthening the Embassy Room's local appeal are excellent service and good food. Carp.

Cafe Andre, Montreal

Montreal, Oct. 1.

"Up-Tempo 59", with Pat Galloway, Sylvia Gillespie, Joan Stuart, Doug Chamberlain, Frank Blanch; music and lyrics by Roy Wolvin; produced by Jack Greenwald and Ian Ross; direction and choreography, Brian Macdonald; additional dialog and songs, Doyl Klyn, Dave Broadfoot, Don Garmaise, Bernard Solly; $1.50-$2 cover.

The second edition of "Up-Tempo" is a decided improvement over the first revue which played a few weeks last spring in this same upstairs room of Fernard Racicot's Cafe Andre. Current layout is more mature and talented, and devoid, for the most part, of the collegiate humor and local references of the initial effort by producer Jack Greenwald and writer Roy Wolvin.

Although credits for the show are many, material has been, with a few exceptions, more carefully selected. After a slow start, tempo is definitely "up" for balance of revue, clinching with a rousing musical satire on "Oedipus Rex" by Wolvin in the style of an amateur drama group. Doyle Klyn's "Ritzy" number reveals a new writer with a sense for unusual lyrics and given an added, but sometimes confusing, boost by Brian Macdonald's choreography. Blonde Joan Stuart evidences sock comedic qualities in all appearances, particularly atop a stool in a revealing red gown doing a torchant in Monroe-Mansfield tyle. Pat Galloway is a looker and her sophisticated and rather deadpan comedy style contrasts nicely with the broad but deft playing of Sylvia Gillespie.

Both males in show are slow to start; seem unable to get into the spirit or the dialog (which is heavy-handed) until midway through offering, then both are convincing, highlighting with a song-and-dance item by Wolvin and Tim Porteous on Quebec politics. Kudos go to Wolvin for lion's share of the writing and music and to Ed Assaly for the arrangements. Andre Trudel has designed some pleasant sets for the small stage and Margo Marsh's costumes are clever and colorful. "Up-Tempo" is in for an indefinite run. Newt.

Beverly Hills, Ciney

Cincinnati, Sept. 26.

Billy Williams Quartet, The Szonys (2), Lindsay-Sapphire Dancers (9), Bill Raymond, Gardner Benedict Orch (10), Jimmy Wilber Trio, Larry Vincent; $3 minimum, $4 Sat.

Reestablishing local fave ratings after long absence, the Billy Williams Quartet and the Szonys contribute a load of class entertainment to the double frame in Beverly's lush Trianon Room. Backing them admirably in a fast 65 minutes is the location line of Lindsay-Sapphire steppers and band batoned by Gardner Benedict.

Giselle Szony and brother Francois justify "continental dancing stars" billing in two five-minute routines of ballroom and interpretive patterns, concluding with their famed "Sleeping Beauty" ballet treatment.

Running through 15 or more tunes in 40 minutes is duck soup for high tenor Billy Williams and his mates, Eugene Dixon, bass; Ollie Jones, baritone, and Buddy Smith, tenor. Repertoire includes their top Coral recordings, with heavy mitting for "Paper Doll," "I'll Walk Alone" and "Mad About Cha." Calvin Shields, drummer and hotcha hoofer, and Bill Stanford, pianist, leave the bandstand to join in brief capers near closing.

Mary Lou Bleser, promising localite, leads the Lindsay-Sapphire group in Parisian and Latin numbers, with Bill Raymond as singer and emcee. Koll.

Mocambo, Paris

Paris, Sept. 30.

Waliyanes African Ballet (10), Cecile Devil, Denis Moroso, Nancy Halloway, Oleg Bajot Orch (6), Leopoldo Frances; $5 minimum.

Plush 100-seater boite, with a small stage and leopard skin walls and blackamoor-statuette lighting fixtures, comes up with a new show in keeping with its decors. Waliyanes African Ballet (10) are a group of Senegalese dancers and singers who are able to give an exotic air to the show in spite of being cramped on the small stage.

Warrior terp segments, verve and frenetic displays, accentuated by tasteful costuming, make this an okay entry and will probably draw those wanting the offbeat in club fare. Three acts surround the various interdudes of the Afro group.

Nancy Halloway is a plump, good looking, Yank sepia songstress. Poured into a sequin gown, she gives out some special material and cha-cha-cha. Somewhat listless, she does not manage to overcome this in spite of good possibilities in her puckish, sprightly voice. When she solves mike technique and underlines her songs with the proper physical stance, and removes the tired edge, she might emerge a good standard singing act.

Denis Moroso gives out with some suave, familiar gadget magico bits for okay effect. Cecile Devil displays competent pipes but not the individuality or projection for anything but orch chirp possibilities. Oleg Bajot Orch (6) gives good dance music for the postage stamp floor and Leopoldo Frances is an asset in his frenzied Latino song pipings.

Snug boite gets the monied set and looks to become a staple here. It is off the Champs-Elysees. Dinners are also served. Mosk.

Grady Hotel, Atlanta

Atlanta, Oct. 4.

Gretchen Wyler, Alan Marlo, Shepard Coleman, Don Grimes Orch (6); $3 minimum.

Gretchen Wyler has added another star to her crown. She now is a fullfledged night club artist. Blonde singer-dancer won her spurs — and vigorous plaudits— when she opened at the Paradise Room, following pianist Carmen Cavallaro, No. 1 on manager Lark Bragg's list of names under room's new policy.

Miss Wyler exhibits no nervousness in the new facet of show biz, possibly due to the fact that her husband, Shepard Coleman, fronts the band (he's a cellist) and does a good job of accomp. Dressed in fetching skintight satin that covered her from shoulders to shoe tops, she offers a program that includes tunes from musical shows she has appeared in, "Guys and Dolls," "Damn Yankees," "Silk Stockings" and her break-in role in "Charley's Aunt." From the latter she sings and dances a la Ray Bolger with "Once in Love With Amy" and, of course, PR patrons join her in song. She had previously appeared in Atlanta four years ago in "Damn Yankees" for Municipal Theatre Under-the-Stars, so customers demanded—and got—"Whatever Lola Wants."

Other numbers that score are "Mack the Black," "Hurray for Love" and the jazzed-up version of "Frankie and Johnny." Miss Wyler intersperses just the right amount of terping with her songs and displays flashes of a talent for comedy which could be exploited more in her act. On the whole, however, it can safely be said that Gretchen Wyler has arrived as a nitery entertainer. She sets a torrid pace, mops her brow and gives out with the song and dance routines that are real crowd pleasers.

Bandleader Roy Grimes doubles as emcee and harmonica virtuoso Alan Marlo opens show with a selection of numbers that, while pleasing, are too loud for customers in front rows. His harp is attached to an electrical speaker gizmo that's tough on the eardrums and it should have a soft pedal on it somewhere.

Cavallaro did smash at Paradise Room for two weeks and so did Miss Wyler during her first week. She played to turnaway business this weekend (4) with football crowds overflowing all eating and dancing spots in city and environs.

Bragg has booked the Coronados to follow Miss Wyler, starting Oct. 13, and Somethin' Smith & The Redheads for two weeks beginning Oct. 27. Luce.

Drake Hotel, Chi

Chicago, Oct. 3.

Betty O'Neil, Jimmy Blade Orch (6); $2 cover.

Fine soprano pipes, lotsa poise and a well-conceived catalog add to a favorable audit for Betty O'Neil's Camellia House bow. Chantoosie has neatly anchored her stint to her musicomedy credits, bagging especially nice reaction via an olio of hits from Broadway tuners. Medley bases in her lament that she's yet to wear a lavish gown in legit.

Chirper's special stuff is fresh and first-rate, including "49%" (of my heart is pure), "Sailor Johnny," and an item called "Keeping Up With the Kennedys," a dandy spoof of the Massachusetts clan that features a smart ringside gimmick. Patter is direct and sensible.

Miss O'Neil's in for a month, and she gets excellent support from the Jimmy Blade tooters. Pit.

Steak & T., Atlanta

Atlanta, Oct. 4.

Jean Shannon & Brooks Bros. (2), Rick Lansing, Teddy Bart, George Morgenstern, Sam Wilhoit Orch (3); $2.50 minimum.

Atlanta's newest dine and dancery, Steak & Trumpet, got off to a disappointing start due to a plethora of counter-entertainment and bad weather. Although customers were conspicuously absent, entertainment dished up rates top-drawer.

Jean Shannon, Kay Thompsonish blonde, is a capable comedienne, fully equipped with shapely gams, a strong voice and an ability to dance, mugg and sell a song. Her agile partners, the Brooks Bros., prove excellent foils for her, especially in the terp department. Everything group does is fast, which means the 35-minute turn skips by in a hurry.

George Morgenstern, acts' arranger, presides at piano during act and Don Brooks choreographed the stanza.

Miss Shannon, in spangled toreadors, gets act rolling with a belting rendition of "All the Things You Are," followed by a comedy calypso turn with the boys, with funny hats, to "Man's Smarter Than Woman." Changing the beat, she sings "Fever" and "I Got Rhythm," that merited the hand the sparse audience accorded her.

Just to prove she can handle the sweet stuff, Miss Shannon sings "I Don't Want to Walk Without You" and the finale finds her and the Brooks freres lathering their way through a flapper routine, complete with nostalgic tunes and the Charleston, to a fine final reception.

Ted Bart, singer, doubles as emcee and Sam Wilhoit and crew abet pianist Morgernstern for show and dancing.

Mickey Morano is manager of Steak & Trumpet, which has been remodeled and can seat 240. Spot began life as Joe Cotton's Steak Ranch and has gone through a series of hands before Morano, who formerly owned the Anchorage Room in the Clermont Hotel, took over. Luce.

Village Vanguard, N. Y.

Irwin Corey, Carmen McRae, Don Abney Trio; $3.50 minimum.

Although there's nothing new in the Vanguard setup this semester, returnees Irwin Corey and Carmen McRae make it all worthwhile and should help along the biz at Max Gordon's Greenwich Village hangout.

Thrushing in a neat jazz vein, Miss McRae continues to show the vocal prowess that brought her from a Harlem joint, to Birdland to her current stature as a Decca disker. Repertoire includes hipped-up versions of a flock of evergreens. They all get an added fillip in her hands.

In her songbag are such goodies as "The Man I Love," "How Long Has This Been Going On," and "I Get A Kick Out of You." The instrumental backing, and good, too, is by the Don Abney Trio.

Corey continues to tickle the Vanguard crowd with his assortment of dissertation, digression and demoniac attitudes. His logic is far out on some cloud of his own making but it's founded on material that reaches the earth people. Even his abuse of ringsiders is taken by the tablers with good humor and without embarrassment, which is to their credit. Gros.

Blue Angel, N. Y.

Current show at this Herbert Jacoby-Max Gordon operation shapes as the best at the eastside spot in many months. Also one of the biggest bills, its popularity is attested to by capacity biz nearly every night. Minimum has been tilted to $6, with three shows scheduled for both Friday and Saturday nights. There's only one holdover in the current lineup, the comedy team of Mike Nichols & Elaine May, understandable because of the way they mop up at every show.

Outstanding new entry of this show is Dorothy Loudon, singing comedienne who had her audience clamoring for more with her unusual ditties and humorous delivery. She is discussed at greater length in New Acts.

The Nichols-May combo has retained the "Telephone Information" routine as well as the audience-ened segment, this time having to do with a foot doctor. They have added "Adultery," as carried out by Americans, British and French, for uproarious returns. Their closing routine, tabbed "Waiter," is an adroit portrayal of the passing of time for a couple meeting by chance at a night club.

Jo March, an attractive blonde who strums her own guitar accompaniment, handles folk songs like a veteran. Her fine diction and easy delivery make her an audience pleaser.

Martha Davis, who has been here before as a single, now is billed as "& spouse" (Calvin Ponder). But she still is the major portion of the turn, with her infectious songalogs and piano gymnastics putting the act over solidly. Ponder strums the bass fiddle and joins in duets with his wife. Current lineup of songs and instrumental bits included "Ma, He's Kissing Me," "Darktown Strutters Ball," "He's Funny That Way," "Love Is So Peculiar" and "Won't You Come Home, Bill Bailey." This act is a strong signoff for a well-balanced show. Wear.

International, N. Y.

Alan Gale, Arnold Dover, Kay Brown, Pato Paterno, Boots McKenna Line; $5 minimum ($10 opening).

Alan Gale has come in under entirely different circumstances this trip. He has been a boniface, a show packager, and now he's in at the Jack Silverman spot as an act. With the exception of weekends, he's doing one show nightly, albeit a lengthy one. He hands out massive doses, his minimal stand being an hour—which represents an extreme cut from the amount of time he usually takes.

Gale apparently has a huge following in town. The International, with the largest capacity on Broadway, had the ropes up at his preem, and advance bookings indicate healthy biz during his four-week tenure. His following is generally from those who savvy Yiddish. While the bulk of his turn can be understood by those not familiar with the language, the non-kosher crowd sits through a lot of blank stretches.

Gale is an expert in getting a response. He draws from a rich nostalgic vein in tracing his youth, and from some warm folk humor in speaking of his co-religionists. There are some questionable bits of material which could easily be eliminated without weakening his turn. But in all, he's one of the big deals in the world of Yiddish-slanted entertainment.

The surrounding principals comprise Arnold Dover, who appeared on previous Gale shows, locally, and Kay Brown, who disks for MGM. Dover is a skilled impressionist. The Negro performer gets believable characterization and has good lines. His Ed Sullivan takeoff is among his best and for this audience he pulled a Menasha Skulnik portrait which was vastly amusing.

Miss Brown is a careful worker. Her arrangements are well tailored, the couturiering is good, and her pipes show fine grooming. However, her act needs some overhauling for optimum effectiveness. As presently arranged, each number must stand on its own; there's no buildup and no climax, which detracts from her overall turn. The crowd, however, likes her.

The Boots McKenna production comes off well, with good costuming but somewhat dated themes. Something new in production has been added with this show. Pat Paterno, who has been working the eastside intimeries, is the production singer, presumably to get big-room experience.

Something new has also been added to the music. Mike Durso, for so many years at the Copacabana, has moved over, and gives the backing an additional note of competence plus knowhow on the terp music. Jose.

Limelight, S. Monica

Santa Monica, Cal., Sept. 30.

Barbara Dane, Newport Harbor Jazz Sextette, Chamber Jazz Sextette; no cover or minimum.

Operators of Pacific Ocean Park have dipped way back into Prohibition Days nostalgia in gimmicking up this plush cellar saloon for the beach trade. Downstairs spot, under POP's restaurant row on the boardwalk in front of the new amusement pier, has a tobacconist-newsstand "blind," with entrance into the bar itself gained through dummy phone booths. The "fun" is carried to the ultimate via a speakeasy peephole and the customers' passwards, "Joe sent me."

Even though the McCoy speaks before '33 were rarely as plush as this one, Limelight is a lively saloon and the speakeasy atmosphere may make it a hangout of sorts. Walls are papered in a flashy red frieze; there are plenty of paintings of full blown nudes on all the walls and behind the long bar; the leggy cocktail waitresses are in flapper clothes; the jazz bands keep blaring and its cheap, the only tab being the price of the drinks that are drunk.

Ceiling is awfully low, however, for such loud bands and its doubtful that many customers will be able to spend any considerable time drinking in such bedlam. The old speaks went in more for the blues and the ballads, the theory being that once a customer got to feeling sorry for himself he did that much more drinking. Also, the quieter music was better for the romantic couples, and it's this factor that Limelight should capitalize on, considering its bathing suit location.

Vocalist Barbara Dane is a nice-looking blonde with an okay voice for the prohibition-days songs. As for the two bands, Newport Harbor Jazz Sextette and Chamber Jazz Sextette, both are good on the driving rhythm numbers and both sound exactly alike. Scho.

Sands, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Oct. 1.

Judy Garland, Kings IV, Texas Copa Girls (13), Antonio Morelli Orch (22); produced by Jack Entratter; $3 minimum.

Judy Garland has no dancing boys with her in the Copa Room; her act is pure Judy Garland, and on opening night it was Judy Garland at her best. Her voice was clear at all times, it was on pitch, she had perfect intonation, she showed confidence, and there was no wavering. If the quality of that first performance is repeated for the two-week run, then Jack Entratter has for himself a gem of a package.

Star's repertoire for this stint includes "When You're Smiling," "Come Rain, Come Shine," "I Can't Give You Anything But Love," "Zing Went the Strings of My Heart" (with a bit of seemingly impromptu terping), a delightful surprise in "Purple People Eater," "You Made Me Love You," "For Me and My Gal," "Trolley Song," "Do It Again," "The Man That Got Away," "Rockabye Your Baby," "Over the Rainbow," and for an encore, "Swanee."

The Kings IV are good musicians, good singers and good showmen. Balancing the bill, they offer such numbers as "76 Trombones," "Till the End of Time" and "Hallelujah." A holdover production number is the curtain-raiser for the show superbly backed by the Antonio Morelli orch. Duke.

Statler Hotel, L. A.

Los Angeles, Oct. 3.

Dorothy Shay is making her first return visit to this town in two years—and it's going to pay off with a lot of hay at the Statler. The songstress is perched here for the next two weeks.

It's difficult to understand why the management of this fine downtown spot hasn't brought in an attraction such as this sooner because it's the best booking the Terrace Room has had in some time. Miss Shay is an entertainer for the masses, both for the sophisticates and the so-called hayseed, she's that satisfying.

Attractively attired in a glove-fitting gold gown, the brunet singer embarks on a repertoire of new and old material. For the city dweller it is as tasty as steak and eggs, for the country tourist, as appetizing as hominy grits. She pleases with a variation of novelties such as "A Song About A Mountain Gal," "You Gotta Have Charm," "You Should Have Mentioned It Before" and a terrific interpretation of Sigmund Romberg's "Stout Hearted Men" with a chorus backing by Skinnay Ennis' orch. Miss Shay, in spite of her intentional country mannerisms, displays a great deal of sex-and-charm throughout her turn.

As she hips along the stage with off-color songs and gags, all to the liking of the patrons, she spiels snappy lines. There must have been an abundant quota of hitched folk in the capacity crowd because they roared with approval. She also scores with a takeoff on "Carmen" and winds with her favorite "Feudin', Fussin' and Fightin'."

Skinnay Ennis' house band continues supplying a danceable rhythm which keeps the spenders jamming the floor. Current show holds through Oct. 15. Kafa.

Sahara, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Oct. 1.

Martha Raye, Ben Yost's Royal Guards (4), Lou Wills Jr., Saharem Dancers (12), Lou Basil Orch (11); produced by Stan Irwin; production numbers, Sonia Shaw and Bill Hitchcock; sets, Fred Pons; $3 minimum.

Martha Raye's uninhibited nitery turn is back in the Congo Room as naughty and bawdy as ever, once again showcasing the star as probably the top femme clown of our day. She uses jokes and gestures that wouldn't be accepted outside of a night club, but somehow she manages to weave an overall act that is at times exciting, mellow, boisterous and very funny. She tosses in the proper amount of nostalgia, and lends her stylized pipery to such numbers as "Hello Again," "Manana," "Feets Too Big," "Love For Sale," and her trademark, "Mr. Paganini." Ray Barr knows exactly how to blend her lyrics with the 88.

Ben Yost's Royal Guards (4) are robust and confident in their delivery of "Volare," "Sing Brother Sing," "Hoover Salesman," songs from "Student Prince," and an Irish medley. In the finale, Miss Ray does a funny bit with the boys as the fifth Royal Guard.

Lou Wills Jr., back here after a couple of years' absence, clicks with his acrobatic comedy dances which feature complete body flips. His impresh of a square dance caller in the Catskills is a big laugh-getter.

An original Shaw-Hitchcock production number called "Take Back Your Sack," is a clever plea for a return to femininity in fashions. Gorgeous gowns by designer Lloyd Lambert are modeled by the Saharem Dancers (12), and the vocals are competently handled by Dick Summers. Lou Basil's orch neatly juggles the notes for the entire production, skedded for four frames. Duke.

Eddys', K. C.

Kansas City, Oct. 3.

Allen & DeWood, Lillian Briggs, Tommy Reed Orch (8); $1-$1.50 cover.

The Eddy brothers are replaying Allen & DeWood, the comics having appeared here last holiday season, and are making it a first time for Lillian Briggs. The two acts pace off 40 minutes in workmanlike fashion, and the net result is a show well worth the seeing. Tommy Reed and orch are in for the first time and add considerable to the proceedings, with Reed doubling as m.c. and the band backing the acts ably throughout.

Miss Briggs in the opening spot quickly shows her feel for phrasing and sizzling a song via "How Could You Believe Me." She's even more intense on "Some of These Days," and then reels out her hit record, "I Want You To Be My Baby," for a tear-it-down on her trombone. She does as well by "Rock-a-Bye Baby" and closes out with "Saints Go Marching In," making 20 minutes of rhythm highly appreciated by the house.

Allen & DeWood rate as comers among today's younger comics, with Marty Allen doing the buffoonery and Mitch DeWood feeding the straight lines. They direct comic punches at topics of the day, get a load of laughs out of a sequence on the first man on the moon, and baseball player Joe Higgins. Their standby episodes of the Jap soldier captured in a Pacific Island cave, the story of Polly the Penguin and the vision of the imaginary bartender are as punctuated with laughs as ever. Carmen Cavallaro and unit play a return engagement opening Oct. 17. Quin.

Crescendo, L. A.

Los Angeles, Oct. 3.

Mary Kaye Trio, Ray Browne, Frankie Hudec, Bill Lollotti, Rene Touzet Orch (6); $2 cover, 2-drink minimum.

Any way you look at it, the Mary Kaye Trio is just as its newest album says: "Too Much." And if that doesn't quite describe the business to be done during the group's fifth engagement at the Crescendo, it's a cinch at least that the coffers will swing to one the hottest Sunset Strip nitery bookings in some time.

There's something new about the trio, a point solidified in the opening show by an obvious concentration on more singing and less clowning. Content of the act—aside from the identifying "My Funny Valentine"—is completely new, and there has been a move toward more solos and duets, a clear indication of the trio's artistic versatility.

All these switches are generally for the good, although such Kaye-made arrangements as "Fools Rush In," "Lonesome Road" and "Mad About the Boy" are too much a part of the group to let them fall completely by the way. Spending most of its time in Las Vegas, where it was the first of the name acts to play the lounges, the trio has returned to Los Angeles with less "cuteness." Ad libs are still there—Frankie Ross is too adept at them to be subdued—but the clowning has been planned, with an amusing parody of "Volare," titled "Lasagna," and a striking impersonation of Louis Prima and Keely Smith.

Mary Kaye's haunting tones are given complete play in such thought pieces as "Lazy Afternoon"; she's joined by Norman Kaye in top dueting of "Don't Blame Me" and Ross joins her for a rousing "Baby Knows Best." Together, the trio scores solidly with a unique arrangements of "In the Still of the Night" and garners earned ovations time after time.

First show found the threesome onstage for 45 minutes, and from all appearances they could have continued through the second show without leaving the platform. Backed excellently by Ray Browne, Frankie Hudec and Bill Lollotti, with Rene Touzet's orch playing between shows, the trio remains at the Crescendo for three weeks. Ron.

St. Regis, N. Y.

Constance Moore, Milt Shaw Orch, and Ray Bari Ensemble; $2 cover, $3 Fri. and Sat.

Constance Moore has no difficulty in establishing an instant rapport with her audience at the St. Regis' Maisonette. Wearing a smartly-designed strapless black Empire gown with a white satin bodice and long white gloves, topped with stunning blonde hair and a winning set of melodic pipes, she comes out in the midst of the diners and with a soundly chosen group of titles as well as special material by Earl Brent, scores all the way down to the finish line. The big mitting she gets for her routine is indeed well deserved.

Miss Moore is especially strong in the fetching Brent numbers, "You've Never Been Blue," "Hot Dog Stand in Paris" and "Forty Cups of Coffee." She delivers these ditties most tellingly and attempts a community sing bit with a whopping amount of brightness.

She also proffers a medley of "From This Moment On" and "Breezing Along With the Breeze," "Just in Time," "Will You Still Be Mine," along with "You Do Something to Me" and "Do It Again." At no time does her song repertoire sag. Her topical patter and references to both Texas and Alaska, not to mention her allusions to current New Yorker cartoons, dovetail nicely with the overall routining of her show.

Miss Moore fits in handsomely with the decor of the Maisonette, without doubt one of the smartest hotel dining spots in Gotham. The Maisonette is a warm blend of both the modern and classical with murals that posses an almost De Chirico look, depicting fragments of Roman sculpture such as the Forum and Arch of Constantine against a pale blue sky with occasional flecks of floating clouds It emphatically makes for spaciousness and leisurely dining.

For dance music there's Milt Shaw's orch and the Ray Bari ensemble, worthy editions to the room. Rans.

Fairmont, San Francisco

San Francisco, Oct. 2.

Julie Wilson, sporting a new, fashionable brunet wig but the same old bewitching smile and figure, returns to Frisco with a snappy, 40-minute show which delights the check-grabbers.

She comes on with a showtune, "Good to Be Alive," belts out a couple of semi-standards, "It's All Right with Me" and "Witchcraft," but devotes most of her show to specialties—with the accent on what she certainly has, sex.

Miss Wilson looks in great shape in a handsome black and flesh-colored gown and when she wants to turn on the volume, does so nicely. Opening night, unfortunately, she was handicapped by a cold and the rather slow tempo of Ernie Heckscher's orch, both conditions which time will shortly revise.

Her intimate, scratchy-voiced patter between songs is generally a delight, though it's occasionally lost in the cavernous Venetian Room because she talks too fast and low. She shows a sharp sense of humor, especially in a bit involving a long feather boa and her own version of a bird's mating call, and has great audience rapport. She's booked through Oct. 22. Stef.

Gilded Cage, Boston

Boston, Oct. 2.

Norm Crosby, Bobby Carle & The Blendaires (4), Joyce Dale, Phyllis Payne, Barbette, Hilary Rose Trio; $1.50 minimum.

It's a new format for Louis Cohen's plush gaslight era 200-seat Boylston St. boite and a switch from the Gay '90s revues with comic Norm Crosby headlining a well-paced show running an hour and 45 minutes. Crosby turns in slick brand of comedy along with emcee intros.

Working from atop the stage bar, Crosby gets yocks with freshened material served with right timing which sets up whimsical mood. Transversing the length of the 50-foot bar, Crosby works directly to stool sitters with a routine running from politics to medico gags. He ad libs with rapid fire obbligato and wins salvos. He racks up mile-a-minute laughs.

Mimicking personalities in burlesque fashion he segues to ridiculous historical nonsensities, and weaves in variety of dialects. Primarily he's a storyteller, but for this stint concentrates on one-line snappers that reflect flexibility.

Bobby Carle & The Blendaires, Decca group of four tux-clad youths playing accordion, electric guitar and drums, with Carle in lead spot, open with big volume "Volare" to instantaneous mitting. Running through current pops to oldtime faves, with accent on swing, they turn in a neat, well rounded stint. They showcase their disk, "A Time To Love," in dramatic style for fine returns.

Joyce Dale, blonde belter, gives out with some rock versions of "Street Where You Live" and "Up Lazy River." Phyllis Payne, brunet chirper, is off on a ballad stint with "Tenderly," "C'est Si Bon" and "Ciri ciri bin" to open the show in rousing style. Barbette, oriental terper, does her own special Arabian Nights version, colorful business builder. Hilary Rose Trio cuts the show in slick manner. This show exits Oct. 12. Black Crook Revue skedded to open Oct. 13. Guy.

Continental, Houston

Houston, Oct. 3.

Gordon MacRae, assisted by wife Sheila Stephens, gives a versatile performance that brings top applause from a capacity opening night audience shoehorned into the International Club's Continental Room.

After "Enchanted Evening," he leans heavily on the "Oklahoma" score, to the delight of the nabobs in this nitery in the Shamrock Hilton Hotel. His 55-minute show has everything. He does takeoffs on Cagney, Godfrey, Presley, Como. Miss Stephens does impressions of Hepburn, Zsa Zsa, Lena Horne and Dinah Shore. There's audience participation in a couple of numbers, a medley of standards and, for call-backs, the "Soliloquy" from "Carousel" and a finale husband-and-wife bit.

The MacRae vocals never better, and his runs from soft to volume display excellent range. Personal conductor Van Alexander batons the Henry King orch in a fine backing.

When the MacRaes close here Oct. 15, Betty Reilly comes in for two weeks and the Billy Williams orch returns also. Skip.

Cloister, Chi

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Dick Havilland, Meg Myles, Ramsey Lewis Trio; two-drink minimum.

With Dick Havilland untested here, this three-weeker counts on stacked Meg Myles, third-timing on Rush St., to lure 'em. Once inside this cellar, though, the shoppers can claim a fair bargain.

Havilland blushes out nice reaction with his string of digressive, double-entendre yarns. Blue stuff's merit is moot, but comic charms yocks by cloaking it with dry, erudite manner that runs to six-bit words rattled off in book narrative fashion. He's also up with some whimsical indigo lyrics that mine laughs as much for their atonal delivery as for their meaning.

Slimmed but still impressively sculpted, Meg Myles, in floor-length gown and chi chi coif, cuts a demurely tempting appearance through a thoughtful 20-minute songalog that includes an offbeater or two such as the "Molly Malone" folk tune. Throaty piping sometimes is a bit too stylized, but the total effect is pleasant for generous mitting. Ramsay Lewis trio backstops with a good beat. Don Adams and Lonnie Sattin are in Oct. 21. Pit.

Chez Ernest, Montreal

Montreal, Oct. 1.

Christiane Breton (with Walter Eiger), Bob Peters; no cover or minimum.

Diminutive Christiane Breton has probably performed in more cafes and saloons in Montreal than any other Gallic chirper, and she is one of the few local singers who have shown definite improvement over the past few years. Currently heading the layout at Chez Ernest, Miss Breton enhances rep with her gamine-like qualities. Her style is not unlike that of Patachou. Femme reprises the established faves with a flourish, intros the new numbers from Paris and breaks overall pacing neatly with an occasional English item.

As stature and voice are the controlling factors with a singer such as Miss Breton, the bulk of her material is of a breezy, semi-belting nature rather than of the torchant variety. On present engagement, Miss Breton has the sock pianoisms of Walter Eiger to back her songs and this talented 88'er means the difference between a good or just so-so performance. Newt.

Tropicana, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Oct. 1.

Red Buttons, George Tapps Dancers, Ladies of the Ensemble (13), Nat Brandwynne Orch (17); produced by Monte Proser; $3 minimum.

Red Buttons makes his first Vegas appearance in three years, and the Tropicana exposure is impressive. He's on for 55 minutes, and not once did he lose his first-night audience. The turn is new, and most of the material is fresh on the Strip. He wisely doesn't overdo references to "Sayonara," and is very funny with a bit spoofing Maurice Chevalier's "Thank Heaven For Little Girls" number in "Gigi"—Buttons asks in song why they don't write songs about little boys.

Special material by Eli Basse and Sid Kuller is appropriately clever and singable for Buttons, and he scores with some new lyrics to his w.k. "Ho-Ho" tune. Throughout the stint Buttons is graceful with his delivery, and he gets rewarded with liberal yocks and mitting.

George Tapps and his dancers (5) share the bill, which is somewhat streamlined compared to past Monte Proser spectaculars here. The Tapps terpers present a production featuring Rodgers & Hammerstein tunes which is powerful in its simplicity. The musical and dancing transitions are ingenious; Tapps himself is a great soloist, and his two girls and two boys are perfectionists. Nat Brandwynne and his orch (17) weave the four-week show with artistry, and it's decorated by 13 stunning dancers and showgirls. Duke.

Ritz Carlton, Montreal

Montreal, Oct. 1.

Jacqueline Jourdan, Johnny Gallant, Paul Notar Trio; $2-$2.50 cover.

Jacqueline Jourdan, a brunet thrush from Paris making her first Canadian appearance in the Ritz Cafe, shows signs of being a comer but is still not ready for rating with the usual talent offered by this boite. Of better than medium height for a femme, Miss Jourdan has several things in her favor which should do much to establish her in the chantootsle field.

She is a looker, appearance and grooming are good and she is bilingual. Latter talent is still somewhat in the phonetic stage, giving her English numbers a hesitant quality which results in an uneven performance, but the desire is there and experience should overcome the rough spots. Songalog is varied but needs something more original in the way of special material to get her out of the routine groove. The day of the import with an accent and a trim figure who could get away with trite offerings is finished, particularly in Montreal.

House 88'er Johnny Gallant and the Paul Notar trio back Miss Jourdan's sessions ably and split dance interludes between times. Thrush is in until Oct. 14. Newt.

Society, London

London, Oct. 3.

Diana Decker, Gypsy Adan & His Tzigany Players, George Birch Orch; $3.50 minimum.

Diana Decker, a talented and attractive American artist who has been resident on this side for some years, is a versatile performer who is at home in any sphere of show biz. She's starred in vidfilms, played legit, motion pictures, et al. Now she's doing a return date at this fancy restaurant and her performance is stamped with her personality.

Although suffering from a heavy chill (which could be barely recognized by the ringsiders), Miss Decker gives out with a gay and breezy routine carefully geared for the audience. The act is a deft mixture of special material, impressions and pops and it adds up to a slick 20-minute cabaret show.

Her takeoffs on James Stewart and Katharine Hepburn have an uncanny realism; she gets the voice as well as the mannerisms. Her opener, "Girl who Likes to Get Around," sets the pace and the mood but, surprisingly, her songalog includes "Wonderful, Wonderful Thing," a number which has always been associated with Julie Wilson.

The resident Gypsy Adam Tzigany group has always been a special feature of the Society and provides an entertainment of its own. The show is ably backed by the George Birch orch. Myro.

Frisco's Retort

little provincial city will take opera only if it has a star."

Adler, general director of the Frisco Opera, rose to the bait with a series of rhetroical questions:

"Is opera in the U.S. 'worth speaking of outside New York City' if an organization such as ours performs for about 11% of our city's population in comparison with the Metropolitan's 7½%? Attendance at our 1958 season to date has averaged 97% of capacity."

(What Adler was saying was that the Met performs for about 600,000 persons in New York, while the Frisco Opera performs for about 87,500 persons in Frisco. If Frisco and its environs were consolidated into a borough system such as New York has, Adler would have to project his percentage against a population of 3,500,000 instead of 800,000—as he very well knows, since he sells tickets all over the area.)

"Is it important to opera in the U.S. for us to have presented international artists like Tebaldi, Del Monaco, Baccaloni, Simonato, Valletti, Gobbi, Schwarzkopf, Rysanek (as well as important conductors and stage directors) in American debuts?

"Are premiere performances of Walton's 'Troilus and Cressida,' Poulenc's 'Carmelites,' Honegger's 'Joan of Arc at the Stake,' Cherubini's 'Medea' and an evening of modern Carl Orff operas meaningless for the standards of opera in America?

"Is the fact that the city and citizens of San Francisco have given an opera house as home to opera and symphony an indication of support and interest?

"Is the annual financial help given by the city . . . a proof of public support?

"We do not consider ourselves beggars when we appeal for contributions to the annual funds drive . . . which, with the guarantee system of subscribers, easily wipes out deficits unavoidable in any opera organization."

Adler said "big opera companies should help the smaller ones" and added the Met is "the mother of us all."

He concluded:

"We are proud of the importance of the San Francisco Opera Company, which seems to be more highly rated in European operatic headquarters and wide musical circles in the U.S. than it may be on 39th Street."

Naturally, this all made lovely copy for the Frisco dailies, which dutifully printed chunks of it.

Pope's Anxiety

viction that he can overcome obstacles and avoid erroneous solutions, and rise after every fall and return to the right path, progressing from good to better via the use of his freedom and his faculties.

"It is not to be denied that even a somewhat superficial entertainment can rise to high artistic levels and be classed even as ideal, since man has shallows as well as depths," he stated.

The Holy Father has always stressed his concern for youth. In last year's Encylical, he reminded the young that it was their "grave obligation to check and control that natural and unrestrained eagerness to see and hear anything. And they must keep their mind free from immodest and earthly pleasures and direct it to higher things."

Many times the Pontiff stressed the need for guidance of Catholics in matters of film entertainment. However, his remarks usually seemed directed to Catholic nations, such as Italy and France. For instance, he wrote last year: "Unquestionably . . . one must repudiate the manner of acting of those who from excessive indulgence admit films which, for all their technical brilliance, nevertheless offend right morals; or, though they appear on the surface to conform to the moral laws, yet contain something which is contrary to the Catholic faith."

In his "Miranda Prorsus" Encyclical last year, Pius XII urged the establishment of national film centers, thus moving the Catholic position from defense to positive action. Declaring himself "inspired" by the Pope's views, Msgr. Albino Galletto, executive secretary of the Pontifical Commission for Motion Pictures, Radio and Television, said last July: "The days of the scissors are for the most part over. The time is past when our work consisted only in eliminating the worst parts of films. It is now the objective of Catholics to promote and propagate films which are both morally and artistically good."

Chided Television

In his comments on television, the Pope took a harsh view last year. "The practice of this art, hitherto not controlled by the reins of prudent counsel, has already inflicted serious harm on individuals and on human society," he declared. He urged Catholics to give the art their "active cooperation" and, again, he expressed his concern for the minds of the young.

Roman Catholic concern with films, and now with television, has grown with the realization that both media tackle subjects well beyond the confines of pure entertainment. The Church readily acknowledges the power of the screen in education and international communication, but it constantly clashes with the commercial motivations of producers of both films and tv shows. What the Pope has been saying for many years is that entertainment must be uplifting. Unfortunately, the economic demands are such that it rarely pays to turn out the kind of "idealistic" shows urged by the Pontiff; nor does the public respond to films on "moralistic" grounds. Human nature being what it is, it is the very opposite of the "ideal" that draws people into the theatres, and the situation is not improved by the often forced "positive" endings.

Nevertheless, the reign of Pope Pius XII has been marked by a notable change in attitude on the part of the Roman Catholic hierarchy, putting emphasis on positive action and shifting away from the purely negative approach, concerned more with fighting "evil" than with encouraging the good.

Bernstein 'At Home'

Victor Borge. While he waggles his baton to conduct Berlioz's "Roman Carnival," his jazzy shoulder movements and his jiggly capers on his toes astonishingly resemble the late Paul Ash when the "stage-band policy" was rampant at Balaban & Katz's Oriental Theatre in Chicago.

That traditionalists may not fancy the Philharmonic's new Thursday previews is for sure. But it was not planned for them, but to give the orchestra an extra "event" to sell the public. (Symphony musicians are paid by the week to render "services"—either as rehearsals or performances). Some will complain that this is too much a showcase for the talents of one man. Will other, or guest, conductors emulate Bernstein? That remains to be seen. Could they? His is a flow of verbiage rare even among professional articulators. Possessed of an admirable diction, a rounded baritone and a poise which must be envied, though some may charge "conceit," this versatile figure is, whatever else is said, removing longhair's old hat.

His chatter is not brief and those who don't delight in talk, or a lecture at the concert, will not delight in the long-winded "spoken program notes" which Bernstein first introduced via the tv program, "Omnibus." At Carnegie, he uses a chest microphone and gestures freely. Indeed it would be impossible to imagine a more "outgoing," chummy, easy, raconteur-like conductor.

Bernstein will be much in sofa and table talk this autumn. "Evolution" is the esoteric point for a venerable gazette of the amusement trades like VARIETY. For civilians, it comes close enough to "revolution." The leader will hear 76 trombones of praise and perhaps a like number of blows on the conservative nose-bladders.

And where were the dancing girls?

Legion 'B's

dropped 40% compared with 1956-57.

A VARIETY survey of the Legion's ratings for the year ended Oct. 1, 1958 (which is the Legion's year), shows that the Catholic rating body reviewed a total of 396 feature films of which 350 were American and the remaining 46 foreign. In the prior year the Legion reviewed 418 pictures.

An accurate comparison with 1956-'57 is impossible since, starting with the Dec. 12, 1957 bi-weekly issue of its rating sheet, the Legion introduced the new A-III rating. In that period, between Dec. 12 and Oct. 1, the Legion covered a total of 325 films, including 283 from Hollywood and 42 from abroad.

Within that total alone, the unit handed out 108 A-I ratings (Unobjectionable for General Patronage), of which 99 went to American films and 10 to foreign; 88 A-II ratings (Unobjectionable for Adults and Adolescents) with 81 going to the Americans and seven to imports; 76 A-III ratings (Unobjectionable for Adults) divided into 67 for Hollywood and nine for foreign films; 47 "B"s of which Hollywood got 36 and imports 11, and five "C" or condemned tags, all of them going to foreign films.

On the American films alone, the percentages were A-Is 35% of the total Hollywood volume reviewed; A-IIs 28%, A-IIIs 23% and Bs 12%. Taking in foreign and domestic, the percentages were A-I 33%, A-II 27%, A-III 23%, B 14% and C 1%.

By way of comparison, the Legion's own report for 1956-57 showed the following percentages for the total product reviewed: A-I 33%, A-II 31%, B 33% and C close to 3%.

Were one to lump the A-III and the B ratings for 1957-58 together in the "B" category, where most of the A-IIIs likely would have gone, it would turn out that there would have been 123 B-rated films, or about 37% of the total. Allowing for some of these pictures in A-II, the overall percentage probably would have come about approximately the same way as last year, i.e. 33% which, with the exception of 1955, was the highest in Legion history.

The breakdown of foreign vs. domestic in the VARIETY survey of the Legion statistics will not necessarily correspond to the final figures when they are issued by the Legion since there's a question of definition of what constitutes a foreign film. The Legion office refuses to give out the figures, maintaining that it must first report them to Bishop William A. Scully in Albany. Scully is head of the Episcopal Committee on Motion Pictures. Head of the Legion is Msgr. Thomas F. Little. Working with him is the Rev. Patrick M. Sullivan, S.J., who is assistant executive secretary.

Pictures condemned by the Legion during the full year ended Oct. 1, 1958, included two from Britain, two from France and one from Sweden. In the "B" category, the French took the cake with five, followed by two each for the British and the French, one for the Italians and another one for the Swedes. Condemned ratings on subtitled imports have virtually no meaning. When these pictures are dubbed, however, as was the case with "God Created Woman," it's a different story and the "C" rating does loom as an obstacle in getting circuit dates.

The Legion statistics bear out observers' impression during the year, i.e. that the Catholic rating body has eased up a great deal and today is willing to accept as "adult" what, a comparatively short time ago, it would have attacked as "immoral." The A-III rating has served a convenient channel for pictures which, in the past, would have had to be given a "B" tag for want of better identification.

Among the American films rated A-III during the past year have been "Hot Spell," "The Long, Hot Summer," "The Young Lions," "Bonjour Tristesse," "Cat On a Hot Tin Roof" (generally conceded one of the sexiest films of recent years). "The Key," "The Defiant Ones," "A Certain Smile," etc. Among the B-rated releases were "King Creole," "A Farewell to Arms," "Pal Joey," "Wind Across the Everglades," etc.

See South African Legit Changing; Indigenous Plays and Actor's Union

Johannesburg, Sept. 30.

Legit in South Africa is undergoing significant change for both actors and authors. For the latter, it's an upbeat in productions of locally-written works. For the former it's the recent organization of the South African Actors Equity Assn.

The increased play being given native scripters is reflected in this city, where three of the top theatrical entries are of indigenous origin. The trio comprise a drama, a comedy and a musical.

The drama, "The Kimberly Train," by an anonymous author, has created the biggest stir because of its controversial theme—a colored girl posing as a white. There's been speculation that the play, presented at the Library Theatres, was written by a colored author with first-hand knowledge of such a situation.

The comedy, at the Brooke Theatre, involves Cecil Wightman, popular South African comedian. He's appearing in a visual version of his radio show, "Snoektown Calling," a satire, set in a mythical South African town. "Ever Since Eve," Anthony Farmer's all-South African tuner, with music and lyrics by Ralph Trewhela, is being presented at the "Y" Theatre.

In the case of Equity, the organization met recently to elect officers and to lay the groundwork for stablizing conditions for South African professional performers. Radio performers Don Davis and Hugh Rouse were elected chairman and vice chairman, respectively; while actor Robert Lang was named secretary and James Kantor was chosen treasurer and legal advisor.

It's figured that the new union will give top priority to two matters, payment of actors for rehearsals—long a bone of contention between artists and managers—and the problem of amateurs, whose part-time work, particularly in radio and legit, is considered a threat to the security of the professional performers.

Arena Stage Looks For Best Season, But Needs New D.C. Spot for 1960

Washington, Oct. 7.

The Arena Stage, opening its eighth season Oct. 21 with "The Front Page," is successful and happy in the old "hospitality hall" of the Heurich Brewery in Washington's Foggy Bottom district, where it moved in 1956. But it can't stay there, because it's in the way of a new bridge to be built across the Potomac River. It will have to move when construction commences in 1960.

The fact that it will have to change quarters again isn't deterring plans for the 1958-59 season. Eight plays, each to run four weeks, are being scheduled by managing director Zelda Fichandler.

If it were not for that bridge project, the 500-seat Arena Stage could stay where it is and be a next-door neighbor of Washington's proposed new Cultural Center, provided $25 million is raised privately to build that center in Foggy Bottom.

But the Cultural Center will displace a neighbor of the Arena Stage, the National Historical Wax Museum, now on the center's site. The museum, biggest of its kind in the country, is a financial success, its backers claim.

Slated for the 32-week Arena season following the Hecht-MacArthur opener are three one-acters, Arthur Miller's "A Memory of Two Mondays," William Saroyan's "Once Around the Block," and Tennessee Williams' "The Purification"; followed by Agatha Christie's "The Spider's Web," G. B. Shaw's "The Devil's Disciple," Emlyn Williams' translation of Turgenev's "A Month in the Country," O'Casey's "The Plough and the Stars" and Fry's "The Lady's Not for Burning."

The eighth play had not yet been chosen, and a place is being left in case a likely property becomes available later. Last season's closer, "Summer of the 17th

Mex. Prof. Higgins O.O.'s B'way Version of 'Lady'

Manola Fabregas, who will co-direct and play Prof. Henry Higgins in the Spanish-language version of "My Fair Lady," due to open this fall in Mexico City, is currently in Manhattan for a few days studying the musical at the Mark Hellinger, N.Y. He is the son of the Mexican actress, longtime star-operator of the Teatro de Fabregas.

Big ballyhoo is in prospect in connection with the Mexican production which will break-in in Monterrey prior to opening in the capitol. Aernaves de Mexico, the airline which arranged Fabregas' trip to New York, will carry Ed Sullivan and a party of American entertainers to the opening, and Sullivan will incorporate the Mexican premiere glamour in his television program of that date.

160 Paris Shows Include 5 Yanks

Paris, Oct. 7.

Paris is in for a busy legit season. Over 160 productions are planned for presentation during the 1958-59 semester. The prospect of many of those being in the quality groove is good since the lineup includes offerings by several promising newcomers and a number of successful yet playwrights, who were absent from the local scene last season.

Imports, which were principally responsible for bolstering the generally lacklustre '57-'58 session, will get heavy play again this semester. Included among the Broadway-originated plays set for production here are "Two for the Seesaw," "Look Homeward, Angel," "Inherit the Wind," "Happiest Millionaire" and "Auntie Mame." Also slated for production is an adaptation by Jean Pierre Aumont of Irwin Shaw's "Lucy Crown" and an adaptation by Andre Obey of Reginald Rose's "Twelve Angry Men."

Domestic product includes Jean Canolle's "Lady Godiva," Jean Anouilh's "L'Huluberlu" ("The Muddlehead"), Marcel Achard's "Bagatelle," Louis Ducreaux's "La Folie," Henri De Montherlant's "Don Juan," Alexandre Breffort's "Riddidine," Felcien Marceau's "La Bonne Soupe," Pierre Boule's "William Conrad" and plays by Andre Rousin and Eugene Ionesco.

Several revivals are contemplated and about 12 of last season's hits will be back on the boards for, at least, part of the semester. One-man shows and vaude bills, featuring singers, are also getting heavy legit house bookings.

The operetta-styled musicals, which continue to be a top b.o. draw here, are relighting for the new season. They include "Mon P'tit Pote" ("My Little Pal") at the Boino, "Valses De Vienne" at the Chatelet, "Tete De Linotte" ("Wooly Head") at the ABC, "Symphonie Portugaise" at the Gaite Lyrique," "Coguin De Printemps" at the European and "Naples, Baiser De Feu" ("Naples, Kiss of Fire") at the Mogador.

Manchester Break-In For U. S. 'West Side Story'

London, Oct. 7.

"West Side Story" is set for its British start at Manchester Opera House on Nov. 14. After 27 performances it will transfer to the West End, opening at an unspecified theatre in the first week of December.

The entire cast of 32 performers will fly from New York. Previous all-American musical casts to be seen here since the war have been "Oklahoma" and "Porgy and Bess."

A production of "The Captains and the Kings," by Leo Lieberman, is planned by David March, head of a Coast talent agency.

But No Clean Shirt?

San Francisco, Oct. 7.

Wolfe Kaufman, manager of Old Vic's sixmonth U.S. tour arranged to get 63 players and four baggage cars full of equipment from London to San Francisco. Everybody and everything negotiated the 7,000 miles successfully—except Kaufman's trunk.

When last seen, Kaufman was buying a suit.

Mass. Bans 'Moon' As Sunday Show; O'Casey Riles 'Em

Framingham, Mass., Oct. 7.

The moon may be blue elsewhere, but not in Framingham on Sunday. Thats the effect of an edict of Raymond A. Marr, investigator of Sunday entertainment for the state of Massachusetts. He refused to license to the Carousel Theatre for a performance Sunday (5) for the F. Hugh Herbert comedy, "The Moon Is Blue."

Accordingly, the show starring Donald Woods, had to close Saturday (4) after opening Tuesday (30). The 3,000-seat musical tent, which has been going along on radiant heat in competition with Boston legiters, ends a 15-week season with "Mister Roberts," which opened last night (Mon.) and closes next Sunday (12).

Row Over 'Dandy'

Toronto, Oct. 7.

As he's done many times in his native Dublin and elsewhere, Sean O'Casey is arousing the anger of devout local residents with his comic scepticism. The resentment stems from the presentation of the Irish dramatist's play, "Cock-a-Doodle Dandy," at the Toronto Playhouse. The production is trying out here prior to an off-Broadway run at the Carnegie Playhouse, N. Y.

A few patrons have been walking out of the show at most performances since it opened last week, and there was a mild disturbance in the theatre last Saturday night (4) when two patrons jumped up to protest against what they apparently regarded as anti-religious lines. The pair had previously urged the audience to leave. They were escorted out and police have since been stationed in the theatre.

Dennis Drew, an actor in the show, reported that four youths had accosted and tried to assualt him outside the theatre a few nights ago. There have also been suggestions that the O'Casey play should be banned, as objectionable to the church.

O'Casey, interviewed by telephone at his home in Torquay, Eng., by the Toronto Telegram, commented that the individuals responsible for the Saturday night disturbance had bad manners. He asserted they "had a right to oppose my views; they had a right to express themselves, but not interupt the players."

Wm. Miles Bows Out As Stockbridge Producer

Stockbridge, Mass., Oct. 7.

William Miles, who operated the Berkshire Playhouse here as a strawhat for 23 years, has ended his association with the project in order to concentrate on his producer-writer assignment with Wilding Picture Productions, New York. It's indicated that the theatre will probably continue its summer stock policy next year, although no managerial setup has been arranged.

Miles came to Stockbridge in 1928 as an actor, when the Playhouse was operated by Alexander Kirkland, and for the next several seasons worked in various capacities, including boxoffice man, stage manager, pressagent and director. He took over as producer in 1934 was one of the few strawhat operators who handled both managerial and staging assignments.

Because of his increased duties with Wilding films, Miles had only supervisory status at the Playhouse summer before last, with Eleanor D. Wilson as active producer. He was able to be present only weekends again this year, while Betty Bunce and Louis Snyder were in active charge.

Shuberts Pay Common Stock Divvy, First in Select Theatres' History

For the first time in the firm's history, the Shubert-controlled Select Theatres Corp., has paid a dividend on its common stock. The payment, made last month, totalled $120,000 at 60c per on 200,000 shares.

The bulk of the coin paid out went to members of the Shubert family, who own approximately 90% of the stock. Another $22,000 dividend was paid on 38,000 shares of preferred stock, entirely owned by the Shuberts. Select broke the dividend ice last year by paying on preferred for the first time in 23 years.

Select is also apparently continuing to polish up its annual statement and procedures in connection with its annual stockholder meeting. That's indicated by the financial audit for the year ending last June 30 and the stockholders' meeting held in New York last Monday (6).

The latest accounting includes, apparently for the first time, comparative figures with the previous fiscal year. The net income for the year climbed from $182,747 for the 1956-57 period to $222,878 for the 1957-58 session.

The payment of a dividend on the common stock is believed to have been spurred principally by a protest made last year by John Gilbert, a professional harasser at stockholder conclaves. Gilbert suggested that the board was unjust in voting to turn over 5% of the net earnings to the Sam S. Shubert Foundation without payment of dividends to holders of common stock.

Foundation

In line with that, John Shubert, who presided at the stockholders' meet, reportedly stated that he had informed the board he would not go along with making a contribution to the Foundation if they did not consider the question of a dividend payment on the common stock. Following settlement of that matter, the board voted on a $12,000 contribution to the Foundation.

It was divulged at this year's stockholder meeting that John's father, J. J. Shubert, listed as president and treasurer on the annual statement, gets an annual salary of $35,000, plus an approximate $30,000 expense account. John, who's listed only as secretary on the K.C. Starlight Promotes Wm. Symon to Gen. Mgr.

Kansas City, Oct. 7.

In an effort to stem rising deficits, the Starlight Theatre here is expanding the authority of its business manager, William M. Symon. He will now have general manager status.

The executive committee also has renewed Richard H. Berger's contract as production director at the usual salary of $20,000, plus an expense allowance of $2,500. A 10-week season, in contrast to this summer's 12-week spread, was also recommended by the committee.

The loss for the 1958 semester is estimated at $41,000 as compared to $37,000 in 1957. Tentative income figures submitted by Symon included, $583,000 from ticket sales and $41,000 from concessions and other sources for a total of $624,000, against expenses of $665,000.

Lou Lurie Buys The Biltmore, L.A.

Los Angeles, Oct. 7.

Louis R. Lurie, who operates the Curran and Geary Theatres in San Francisco, acquired title last Friday (3) to the Biltmore here. He will be partnered in the operation of the 1,636-seat legit house with Paul A. Cummins, who purchased it only last May from the Marcus Heiman estate. Also interested in the project is James A. Doolittle, managing director of the Greek Theatre here.

The new setup means that the 34-year-old Biltmore, instead of being razed by Cummins to make way for a commercial structure, will continue indefinitely as a legit house. Lurie plans to spend "a couple of hundred thousand dollars" to renovate the property, with new dressing rooms, a backstage lounge and "whatever is needed."

It's figured that under Lurie's management the Biltmore will be run in closer cooperation with his Curran and Geary in Frisco. The new setup also means that the Theatre Guild, instead of switching its local subscription setup to the Huntington Hartford Theatre, will probably continue it mostly at the Biltmore, with many of the top touring production thereby continuing to play the latter house. The road company of "Sunrise at Campobello" is already booked for early next year.

Although Lurie declines to reveal how much he's paying for the Biltmore, the price when Cummins acquired the property last May was $525,000, including $210,000 down and the balance in two years at 6% interest.

Lurie, in addition to his purchase of the Biltmore and continued operation of the Curran and Geary, Frisco, is a prolific investor in Broadway productions. He also has financial interests in the film business and other assorted ventures.

Hylton and Pelham Spat Over Ad Slides at 'Mame'

London, Oct. 7.

Jack Hylton and David Pelham are bickering over the question of whether advertising slides should be shown at the interval at the Adelphi Theatre, where Pelham has staged "Auntie Mame." Pelham maintains that such "commercials" lower the dignity of the theatre. Also that it presents a particular problem with "Auntie Mame," because a slide is used as part of the play and interval advertising could confuse audiences.

But Hylton, who holds the lease of the Adelphi, is contractually obligated to show advertsiing slides. Pelham was so incensed by Hylton's edict that he contemplated paying for a slide which would apologize to the audience. But he had another look at his contract with Hylton and, glumly, has had to admit that slides are in.

Lotsa Personal Shifts In B'way-Headed Shows; But It's Par for Course

Legit is sticking to form this season, with the new shows going through the usual flurry of pre-Broadway personnel changes.

The most recent switches involve director replacements for two New York-targeted productions. Jed Horner succeeded H. C. Potter last Saturday (4) as stager of "Patate," currently trying out in Boston, and Jerome Chodorov has taken over for Ezra Stone as director of "Make a Million," currently rehearsing in New York.

"Million," which was in Philadelphia last week, cancelled its scheduled holdover there this frame in favor of the New York rehearsals. The show's Broadway opening has also been postponed a week from Oct. 16 to Oct. 23. Regarding "Patate," it's understood Potter will retain director billing.

Besides the director changes, there have also been several important cast switches made in other productions. They include Don Ameche, who succeeded Barry Sullivan in "Goldilocks," which opens on Broadway next Saturday (11); Susan Oliver, who replaced Gigi Perreau in "Patate," and Joan Copeland, who took over for Piper Laurie in "Handful of Fire," which folded on Broadway last Saturday after five performances.

Cathleen Nesbitt withdrew last week from a featured role in "The Man in the Dog Suit," currently trying out in Washington, with Kathleen Comegys stepping in, and Peggy Wood succeeded Dorothy Gish as costar with Imogene Coca in "The Girls in 509," while the show was in rehearsal.

Shows Out of Town

Pleasure of His Company

New Haven, Oct. 1.

Frederick Brisson & Playwrights Co. production of three-act (four scenes) comedy by Samuel Taylor and Cornelia Otis Skinner. Stars Cyril Ritchard, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Charlie Ruggles, Walter Abel; features George Peppard, Dolores Hart. Staging, Ritchard; scenery and lighting, Donald Oenslager; costumes, Edith Head. At Shubert Theatre, New Haven, Oct. 1, '58; $4.80 top.

A play with high writing content, good acting, expert direction and attractive designing would seem a likely Broadway smash, but sometimes a single flaw in an important spot can seriously weaken a show. That just about sums up "Pleasure," as of its premiere.

The problem lies in the final scene, which undoes much of the favorable earlier impression. The Samuel Taylor and Conelia Otis Skinner comedy involves a contest for a young girl, the antagonists being her self-indulgent father who walked out on her years before, when he divorced her mother, and her youthful, industrious fiance. The curtain finds the paternal heel winning out over the wholesome suitor, an outcome that may be true to life but not a satisfactory finale for a sophisticated comedy.

The play starts delightfully but subsequently fails to maintain that level, and the finale tends to leave the audience frustrated. If the letdown can be remedied, "Pleasure" may provide just what playgoers order.

Cyril Ritchard clicks in the dual assignment of stager and costar, giving a glittering performance as the hedonist prodigal father. Miss Skinner, also doing double duty as author-actress, plays the wife and mother knowingly and engagingly.

Charlie Ruggles, returning to legit after decades in films, peppers the proceedings with sage sayings and a wistful manner, and Walter Abel is excellent as the girl's step-father who finds himself in the middle of various family mixups.

Dolores Hart, as the girl, impresses in her Broadway-bound stage debut. George Peppard is appropriately straightforward as the jilted ranch boy. Jerry Fujikawa is a good comedy asset as a Jap houseman.

Frederick Brisson and the Playwrights Co. have given "Pleasure" a sumptuous production sendoff. A San Francisco living room setting is in excellent taste as is the Edith Head wardrobe.

Film interest in this presentation is warranted. Bone.

Others: David Waulkner, Dennis Drew, Sidney Kay, Pat Malone, Paul Hinxman, Frank Groseclose.

Sean O'Casey's comedy, "Cock-a-Doodle-Dandy," after its tryout at a reconverted 908-seat Toronto film house, goes into the off-Broadway Carnegie Playhouse, N.Y. The local legit house, headed by Len Petersen, Glen Frankfurter and Michael Sandler, was turned over for full production to Paul Shyre, who has produced two other O'Casey plays.

"Cock-a-Doodle-Dandy" is rich in comedy lines and salty philosophy, the poetry of Irish speech and their lilting accents, as well as O'Casey's contempt for the Catholic clergy and his pixie love for a people who believe in leprechauns and kindred superstitions. The action covers a period from dawn to dusk of one day, with the author laughingly advising the Irish people to throw off their shackles of superstition and subservience to the Church.

Although O'Casey's precepts will hardly be acceptable to Catholics, the ideas and writing are ribtickling. The play should be a success in New York, but needs cutting toward the finish of the last act. The O'Casey symbolism may be confusing to most of the audience, but this fantasy of protest is established by a rooster which is the symbol of joy but throws the countryside into a panic by its laughing presence and its immunity to Irish guns.

More easily understood is the low-comedy dialog between an Irish farmer and a former sea-captain, now a landlubber-owner of a fleet of trucks. The conversations and the drinking episodes of the two are hilariously done. The serious side of the play is revealed in the watchful eye that the farmer keeps on his young second wife, the good-natured lechery of the sea-captain, the stoning of the farmer's daughter by outraged but envious villagers, and the author's barbs at ecclesiastical ignorance.

Obviously, the expatriate Irish dramatist gives the back of his hand to Irish concepts of the English and the U.S., with the biggest laugh of the performance being the priest's admonitions to the bid for freedom of the village tart, "Let her go to America." Except in the melodramatic scenes, the dialogue is light and fanciful and replete with Irish humor. What O'Casey is getting at is personal freedom and the fulfillment of pleasure and full living against the barriers of medieval superstition.

Dominating are the argumentative cronies played by Will Greer and Ian Martin, with George Ebeling as the passionate priest, Father Domineer. Also excellent are the three girls of the household, Gaby Rodgers, Anne Meara, Carroll Conroy, and there is fine acting by John Aronson as a village constable, Jack Betts as the young lover and Carlo Mazzone in the title role. McStay.

Comes a Day

Wilmington, Oct. 2.

Cheryl Crawford-Alan Pakula presentation of three-act drama by Speed Lamkin, from his own story of the same name. Stars Judith Anderson, Arthur O'Connell; features Diana van der Vlis, Brandon de Wilde, George C. Scott, Larry Hagman. Staging, Robert Mulligan; settings, Sam Leve; costumes, Noel Taylor; incidental music, David Amram. At Playhouse, Wilmington, Oct. 1, '58; $5.40 top.

C. D. Lawton ..... Brandon de Wilde
Joe Glover ..... Michael J. Pollard
Caroline Lawton ..... Diana van der Vlis
Isabel Lawton ..... Judith Anderson
Katherine Eubanks ..... Ruth Hammond
Tydings Glenn ..... George C. Scott
Charley Lawton ..... Arthur O'Connell
Jim Culpepper ..... Larry Hagman
Gordie Eubanks ..... Charles White
Lorraine Glenn ..... Eileen Ryan
Mexican ..... John Dutra

With uncanny perception, Speed Lamkin has taken a crucial chapter from the life of a respectable family (descended from wealth to middle-class) to create something intimate and shocking. "Comes A Day," a first-play based on the author's novel of the same name, is well deserving of its brilliant cast, headed by Judith Anderson.

The message of this realistic drama is powerful and provocative, and although a keen psychological grasp is obvious, the treatment is neither clinical nor clerical, but rather personal and penetrating. Furthermore, Lamkin remarkably conveys the complex idea that sympathies fall in different directions at different times, usually with the personality closest to one's own understanding.

The story setup of a father-mother-daughter-son, is familiar. The mother is a proud, practical, positive woman, embittered by circumstances, but with flashes of the beauty and vivacity of 25 years before, when she married the Harvard-educated architect with a heavy inheritance, considered the local "catch." They have two children, a beautiful, 24-year-old daughter, not yet married, and a high school sophomore son with all the contradictory insolence and super-sensitivity of a normal 16-year-old.

It is immediately apparent that the strong-willed, materialistic woman and gentle, artistic man have sown the seed of potential destruction for themselves and their offspring. The locale could be anywhere, but the author has chosen a mid-western American town. The dual setting showing living room and garden simultaneously, tells the story of past elegance, conflicting ideals and aborted dreams. The clever use of subtle symbolism, a crow, a playhouse and the elderly couple upstairs, gives extra impact to this frank scrutiny into the family's personal life and unacknowledged truths.

Miss Anderson runs the emotional gamut in bringing the mother's personality into focus. Espousing brittle martyrdom, she makes no secret of contempt for her mate, who mysteriously managed to lose all his money some years back. Her determination to recapture former prestige and affluence vicariously through her children is an all-devouring passion, her immediate goal being a "good" marriage for her daughter.

Arthur O'Connell gives a masterful performance as the husband, "that quiet little man" who nips privately on half-pints to a point of absent-minded mellowness. Actually devoted and living with the illusion that his wife at least loved him once, he is the object of pity and sympathy as his feeble attempts at being a fond husband and chummy father are rebuffed. His daughter alone seems to show him any affection, and then only in crises.

The girl, though lovely and lighthearted, tends toward being a young edition of her mother, placing money and position above heart, and ready to succumb to the metallic charms of the town's most successful young business man, rather than her natural attraction to the handsome, strapping salesman, played with wholesome animal magnetism by young Larry Hagman.

George C. Scott as the favored suitor, a 30-ish, divorced tycoon, is electrifying in his role as a saturnine, sallow, suave and unsmiling psychopath, whose tumultuous displays reveal him as a sadist and potential murderer. Perhaps the most compelling scene in "Day" is when this character shows how, as a boy, he killed the cocker spaniel puppy he loved so well when he learned it was the gift of a man who was robbing him of his mother's attention.

O'Connell's shining scene comes in his moment of greatest weakness, when he falls a sobbing heap on the floor at the wife's feet after she coldly reveals that she never had any love for him and whatever happiness they had known went with his money.

Miss Anderson reaches many peaks, but her finest also is on the minor key as she humbles herself momentarily before the husband she has despised and in anguish and sterile self-reproach cries, "Why didn't I let you build that little house?"

But, the lad who really gets under the skin, in more ways than one, is the brilliant juvenile, Brandon de Wilde, who, as the teenage son, taunts and mimics his sister, ridicules his parents, insults guests at will and brings home the embarrassing and unnerving experience of an adolescent, seeing his parents for the first time, ranting, raving, weeping, wailing and rebuking themselves and one another for mistakes too late to rectify. An ill-fated crow shares first act glory with deWilde as is the key that unleashes subsequent torrents of violence.

Character portrayals by Ruth Hammond as the wife's old friend, and Eileen Ryan as the young tycoon's Tawdry ex-wife, are particularly excellent, both joining with deWilde and Hagman to give some comedy relief to an otherwise gloomy picture.

"Comes A Day" is not for laughs. Even its humor is underlined with tragedy. It's a drama that numbs as it rips the surface and exposes the stagnation and ugliness beneath the deception. The play heralds a new and strong figure on the theatrical horizon in 30-year-old Speed Lamkin, who has dared to probe the depths of human hate, love, jealousy, greed, pride, shame, strength and weakness, and to see them through to the inevitable reckoning that comes one day to those who refuse to face life honestly. Burr.

Candide

New Hope, Pa., Sept. 29.

Lester Osterman & Hillard Elkins concert presentation of two-act musical based on Voltaire, with music by Leonard Bernstein, book by Lillian Hellman, lyrics by Richard Wilbur, John Latouche and Dorothy Parker; Concert adaptation by Mike Stewart. Overall staging, David Alexander; music direction, Samuel Krachmalnick; production design and lighting, W. Broderick Hackett and David Hale Hand. At Bucks County Playhouse, New Hope, Sept. 22, '58; $4.50 top.

Cast: Martyn Green, Robert Rounseville, Irra Petina, Mary Costa, Lee Bergere, Charles May, Jack Matthew, Claire Alexander, Jeanne Beauvais, Ralston Hill, Veronica Kusmin, Luba Tcheresky, Shirley Delp, Paul Veglia, Wayne McIntyre, Charlotte Pierson.

Staged with a narrator and in evening dress, this concert version of "Candide" is a step toward making the satire popular to the general public. Gone are lavish sets, lush costumes and a big orchestra. But Lillian Hellman's script still seems heavy-handed, so this production seems a doubtful bet for its scheduled national tour.

Martyn Green, a triple-threat man as the narrator, Pangloss the optimist and Martin the pessimist, gives the musical a Gilbert and Sullivan quality. His performance is a strong point. Mike Stewart's streamlining also helps. But Miss Hellman's ponderous script is too tough to be overcome.

Green's charming narration is done before a simple backdrop and seated chorus garbed in formal wear. The spiel takes the audience on tour with Candide, pleasantly sung by tenor Robert Rounseville and mezzo-soprano Irra Petina, both from the original cast. With

Shows on Broadway

A Touch of the Poet

Producers Theatre presentation of Robert Whitehead production of four-act drama (with two intermissions), by Eugene O'Neill; staging, Harold Clurman; decor, Ben Edwards. Stars Helen Hayes, Eric Portman, Kim Stanley, Betty Field; features Curt Conway, Art Smith, Luis Van Rooten, Farrell Pelly, John Call, Tom Clancy. At Helen Hayes Theatre, N.Y., Oct. 2, '58; $7.50 top ($11.50 opening).

Mickey Maloy ..... Tom Clancy
Jamie Creegan ..... Curt Conway
Sara Melody ..... Kim Stanley
Nora Melody ..... Helen Hayes
Cornelius Melody ..... Eric Portman
Dan Roche ..... John Call
Paddy O'Dowd ..... Art Smith
Patch Riley ..... Farrell Pelly
Mrs. Harford ..... Betty Field
Nicholas Gadsby ..... Luis Van Rooten

Even in his lesser plays, Eugene O'Neill was a giant of the drama. In "A Touch of the Poet," America's only Nobel Prize dramatist wrote a powerful and compelling play, which has been given a fine and at times transcendent performance by a stellar cast including Helen Hayes, Eric Portman, Kim Stanley and Betty Field.

Although it hardly seems mass entertainment, this posthumous drama should have enough theatrical voltage and personal glitter to score at the boxoffice on Broadway and, if a comparable cast can be recruited, should ultimately do respectable business on tour. It seems questionable material for the screen, however, not so much because of its sombre tone but because of its minimal physical movement.

As the record now stands "Poet" is the last completed full-length O'Neill play to be produced. It was intended as the fifth in an 11-play cycle under the inclusive title, "A Tale of the Possessors Self-Dispossessed," covering the fortunes of an American family from the French and Indian War period through the early 1930's.

Some of the plays were partly completed and all were outlined, but all except "Poet" were destroyed by the playwright not long before his death in 1953. The cycle, planned as O'Neill's magnum opus (no such monumental task was ever undertaken by any other modern dramatist), was to have expressed the author's deep-seated pessimism about American destiny.

"Poet" is located in a run-down village inn near Boston during a 15-hour period in the summer of 1828. It has many of the hallmarks of O'Neill's latter works, including the conflicting elements of love and hate between husband and wife and parent and child, plus the violence, boozing, pretense and cruel exposure of the author's "Long Day's Journey Into Night," "Moon for the Misbegotten" and "The Iceman Cometh."

One of the play's underlying elements is the hostility between the Irish immigrants and the Yankee natives of early 19th century New England. The principal characters are a self-centered, self-deluding, drunken Irish-born former British army officer; the simple, frowsy, endlessly loving wife he cruelly humiliates, and their proud, spirited daughter, who sees through and scorns her father and is determined to marry the Yankee scion lying ill in an upstairs room.

Like the author's probably greater "Long Day's Journey," "Strange Interlude" and "Mourning Becomes Electra," this final finished work is diffuse and repetitious. It is somewhat old-fashioned in construction and technique, and some of the writing is overblown by today's standards. But no living dramatist can match the overwhelming power, the sheer theatricalism or the stunning emotional impact of this not-quite-best O'Neill. Despite its evident faults, it is a tremendous play.

The three feminine stars emerge most impressively. Miss Hayes (appearing for the first time in the theatre named in her honor), is cast somewhat against type as the doormat spouse who seems almost to invite her husband's ridicule and abuse, who married above her peasant station and cannot forget her pre-marital "shame." Her performance is beautifully motivated, however, and the essential dignity and nobility of the character is brilliantly established.

Miss Stanley, who has been growing in stature in recent seasons with skillful portrayals in "Picnic," "Traveling Lady" and "Bus Stop," rises to new heights with a superbly developed and sustained portrayal of the daughter, particularly in an eloquent third-act scene with Miss Hayes. Miss Field makes a poignant light-comedy gem of her single quizzical scene as the slightly amused, quietly sad mother of the offstage Yankee heir.

In the long and bombastic role of the fatuous and insufferable, if basically pitiful, ex-Major, Portman undoubtedly is to a considerable extent the victim of the false, garrulous character and the overwriting. But although his playing seems convincing enough in terms of movement, his reading are at times inaudible or so rapid as to be unintelligible.

Moreover, the characterization seems hollow and essentially unfeeling. In the embarrassing incident with the lady visitor he doesn't appear drunk, as the lines specify. In the climactic big scene of the third act the impression is alcoholic self-dramatizing rather than tragic self-recognition, so the effect seems interminable and maudlin.

There are capable supporting performances by Curt Conway, Tom Clancy and Luis Van Rooten. The staging of Harold Clurman builds the performance to stirring emotional peaks, but notably in the case of Portman's overwrought final scene, occasionally seems lacking in authority. The single setting by Ben Edwards admirably suggests an early New England pub room and affords ample playing space. Hobe.

Handful of Fire

David Susskind & Playwrights Co. production of three-act drama by N. Richard Nash; staging, Robert Lewis; setting and lighting, Jo Mielziner; costumes, Lucinda Ballard. Stars Roddy McDowall, James Daly; features Kay Medford, Joan Copeland, Gene Ross, Leonardo Cimino, Louis Guss. At Martin Beck Theatre, N.Y., Oct. 1, '58; $5.75 top weeknights, $6.90 Friday and Saturday nights and opening.

Mariachis ..... Jesus de Jerez, Tomas E. Infante, Alex Hassilev
Rodolfo ..... Robert Nieves
Bullfighter ..... Neil Laurence
Tamale Vendor ..... Jorge Gonzales
Padre ..... Angel Rigau
Tourists ..... Jeanne Barr, Jake Sitters
Woman ..... Scottie MacGregor
Rodolfo's Mother ..... Thelma Pelish
Pepe ..... Roddy McDowall
Alonso ..... Leonardo Cimino
Matias ..... Louis Guss
Ruben ..... William Edmonson
Policemen ..... Irving Winter, Dario Barri
Manual ..... James Daly
Vargas ..... Gene Gross
Sylvi ..... Kay Medford
Maria ..... Joan Copeland
Carmelita ..... Myriam Acevedo
Young Man ..... Mark Rydell

Presumably playwright N. Richard Nash visited Mexico, shared the normal Yankee fascination with the country and wanted to write a play about it. Otherwise, it's difficult to figure what he could have had in mind with "Handful of Fire." Whatever it was, the result is a tortured and tortuous drama, a dubious bet for Broadway and a negligible prospect for films or stock.

Perhaps this story of seething passions and violence in a Mexican town was intended as a sort of parable about the regenerative power of love and the ultimate triumph of good over evil. Perhaps, but as a show it is tough on the characters and the audience. While the author's evident earnestness must be respected, and moments of the play may be admired, "Handful of Fire" is perplexing and stubbornly unsatisfying theatre.

The staging of Robert Lewis seems somehow limp, with occasional bursts of stridency. Roddy McDowall, with the most clearly defined and comprehensible character, gives a forthright and engaging performance as the naive but indominatable Mexican youth who stands up to the corrupt police and the local gang boss, but is overwhelmed and almost destroyed by the seeming duplicity of his sweetheart.

Joan Copeland brings considerable conviction to the ill-defined role of the independent belle who won't be possessed by the racketeer who seduced her but becomes a prostitute when the youth she loves doubts and spurns her. James Daly is limited by the unbelievable and passive aspects of the tough-talking but mild-doing gangster, but Kay Medford is at least direct in the lugubrious part of the town madam.

The usually unerring Jo Mielziner has designed a ponderous looking and difficult-to-play Mexican village setting with all-purpose units at either side and stepped street slanting toward the rear, and Lucinda Ballard has provided colorful rags for most of the natives and the inevitable finery (comparatively) for the two femme leads. Hobe.

It is the 10th annual tour of the group composed principally of CU alumni. Between 14 and 20 actors present two plays on the university and civic club circuit.

This year's offerings are "Twelfth Night" and a new translation and acting edition of "Oedipus the King," by Leo Brady.

Iowa Community Theatres Organize, Elect H.R. Orms

Des Moines, Oct. 7.

Howard R. Orms, director of the Des Moines Community Playhouse was elected president of the Iowa Community Theatre Assn. at a charter meeting here last week. Some 35 men and women representing the state's non-professional theatres attended the meeting.

Prof. Ronald C. Gee, professor in the speech and dramatic arts department at the U. of Iowa was named executive director. Also elected were Arthur McGiverin, Ottuma, first vice president; Grant Marshall, Burlington, second vice president; Mrs. Bea Gardner, Iowa City, secretary, and Wm. H. Bennett, Shenandoah, treasurer.

The association, which will have headquarters in Iowa City, has been set up as a non-profit group to encourage improvement and growth "of living theatre among non-professional theatre groups" in the state. The latest count shows 19 active "little theatres" and four partially active theatres in the state and six in the process of organizing.

Mary Martin, Traveling In Rolls Royce, No Less, Grosses $34,800 for 6

Mary Martin is traveling the concert circuit in style. She's using her own Rolls Royce for transportation.

The star, headlining the "Music With Mary Martin" presentation, launched a cross-country one-niter tour Sept. 27 in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., after breaking in the show in Alaska. The gross for the first six performances ending last Saturday (6) was $34,800.

It's understood the production can break even at a gross of around $21,000 weekly. About 84 dates have been lined up through next March 7, with a layoff during December. Appearing in the show with Miss Martin, who's in on a guarantee-against-percentage deal, are dancer Dirk Sanders, Brazilian guitarist Luiz Bonfa and a 20-piece orchestra batoned by John Lesko.

Besides the band and performers, the production also carries three electricians, a stage manager, a carpenter, a property man and Peter Foy, who handles the flying apparatus used by Miss Martin for the kiddie matinees. George Oshrin is company manager and Harry Forwood press-agent.

Besides Miss Martn's car, a bus and truck are also utilized for transportation. The presentation, using no scenery, has special lighting devised by Peter Lawrence. Miss Martin also has 17 wardrobe changes during the evening performances, which, incidentally, have been selling out. The matinees, however, haven't been going clean.

The show, routed by Columbia Artists Management, is booked by local concert operators and is scaled to an average evening high of $4. The show's sked takes in an average of five-to-six performances weekly.

Last week's $34,800 total gross for six performances included the following: two performances, the previous Saturday-Sunday (27-28), at the IBM Clubhouse, Poughkeepsie, $8,700; single, Wednesday (1), at the Stanley Theatre, Utica, $8,-400; single Thursday (2) at Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Syracuse, $7,200, and two, Saturday (4) at Kleinhans Hall, Buffalo, $10,500.

Ballet Theatre $155,165 In 20 Perfs. at Met, N.Y.

American Ballet Theatre, which ended its New York engagement at the Met Opera House last Saturday (4), averaged $7,758 per performance, of which there were 20 in all, for a total gross of $155,165. That tops the record for the 13 years the company has been managed by Lucia Chase, following end of the deal with Sol Hurok in 1946. The boxoffice was the more arresting because this autumn opened with three ballet troupes running competitively in Manhattan.

What percentage of tickets were sold via the much-publicized use of Diners Club credit cards is not revealed.

Long Day's Journey Into Night

London, Oct. 1.

New Watergate Presentations & H. M. Tennent (in association with Leigh Connell, Theodore Mann & Jose Quintero) presentation of three-act (five scenes) drama by Eugene O'Neill; staging, Jose Quintero; decor, David Hays. Stars Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies, Anthony Quayle, Alan Bates, Ian Bannen. At Globe Theatre, London, Sept. 24, '58; $2.80 top.

James Tyrone ..... Anthony Quayle
Mary Tyrone ..... Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies
James Tyrone ..... Ian Bannen
Edmund Tyrone ..... Alan Bates
Maid ..... Etain O'Dell

Eugene O'Neill's widow having given permission for the cutting of his work, "Long Day's Journey Into Night" has been trimmed by about 60 minutes for this London presentation. The massive, tortured autobiographical drama, recently seen at the Edinburgh Festival, has moved to the West End for what's announced as a limited engagement. It is a marathon evening, and one of the most powerful, absorbing and stimulating productions of the current season.

This pitiful day in the life of a family, doomed to self-destruction because of the members' searing knowledge and exposure of each other's weaknesses, grips with an uncanny fascination. Yet, oddly enough, it only occasionally touches moments of poignancy. This, perhaps, is because the symphony of insult and counter-insult, tearing down of defences, evasions, self-pity and degradation rarely lets up.

"Long Day's Journey" offers abundant opportunity for four of the five members of the cast. Two of them, Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies and Ian Bannen, particularly rise to great heights. Miss Ffrangcon-Davies is brilliant as the dope-addict wife who disintegrates to near-madness by the end of the harrowing day. Her garrulous gabblings of the past and her feeble attempts to delude herself and others that she is not a victim of drugs are built up with the utmost skill and sensitivity.

Bannen plays the elder son, the drunken, womanising loafer, and he pulls out all the stops with a remarkable display of brittle cynicism particularly in his scenes with his younger brother. Alan Bates plays the consumptive young man (representing O'Neill himself) with impressive intensity and misery.

Less happy is Anthony Quayle as the miserly, drunken actor-father whose skinflint attitude to life is, perhaps unjustly, regarded as the main reason for the woes of the family. The star is a powerful, intelligent actor of great authority, but he doesn't convince that he ever had the stature of a once-great Shakespearian actor. Etain O'Dell, as the maid, completes the cast and does a neat job with her minor opportunity.

Jose Quintero's production is smooth and has a sure touch, while David Hays' dingy, dimly-lit parlor is strikingly in key with the spirit of the play. Rich.

The Elder Statesman

London, Oct. 1.

Henry Sherek's presentation of play in three acts by T. S. Eliot. Stars Paul Rogers and Anna Massey. Staged by E. Martin Browne. Decor by Hutchinson Scott. At Cambridge Theatre, London, Sept. 25, '58; $2.80 top.

Monica Claverton Ferry ..... Anna Massey
Charles Hemington ..... Richard Gale
Lambert ..... Geoffrey Kerr
Lord Claverton ..... Paul Rogers
Federico Gomez ..... William Squire
Mrs. Piggott ..... Dorothy Turner
Mrs. Cargill ..... Eileen Peel
Michael Claverton-Ferry ..... Alec McCowan

Forsaking symbolism with this straightforward and easy-to-understand drama, T. S. Eliot's "The Elder Statesman," first staged at the Edinburgh Festival last month, is an absorbing play handsomely mounted and performed by a first-rate cast. A profitable London run is indicated. With a New York production of comparable stature, it seems likely that its eventual Broadway presentation under the joint management of Henry Sherek and Gilbert Miller should also click.

E. Martin Browne, who has had the directorial credit for a number of Eliot plays, has staged "The Elder Statesman" as a sensitive and sincere production. The romantic passages, unusual for this author, are handled with delicacy. The poetic dialog in the exchanges between Anna Massey and Richard Gale are acceptable within their context, although they constitute an unnatural mode of expression.

The central character of the drama, who bears a close physical resemblance to Britain's own Prime Minister, is an ailing statesman who ought to be able to look back on a successful and happy life. Instead, he is haunted by two spectres from his past. One was a former university pal of humble origin, who was encouraged to taste the good things in life which led to his expulsion from college and eventually to a term in jail for forgery. The other was an actress whom the statesman seduced and who later sued for breach of promise.

Although the dramatic development is honest and sincere, it is rarely moving. Not even in the final act, in which, after a powerful bust-up with his erring son, the statesman confesses his own misdeeds to his daughter and potential son-in-law. Despite the overal seriousness of the theme, the play has delightful comedy passages contributed mainly by Eileen Peel, as the jilted actress, and by Dorothy Turner, as the loquacious matron of a convalescent home.

Paul Rogers, one of Britain's best classical actors, makes the elder statesman a dignified character but, possibly due to his interpretation of the role, he is hardly a sympathetic one. It is an incisive portrayal, rather than a tender and emotional one. Anna Massey plays the daughter with gentle sincerity and Richard Gale is more than adequate as the young lawyer with whom she is in love. William Squire is thoroughly plausible as the man who returns from the past and Alec McCowen puts life and feeling into the young son seeking his last chance to make good.

The two sets designed by Hutchinson Scott are elegant and appropriate. They completely match the mood of the play. Myro.

Ich bin kein Casanova

(I'm No Casanova)

Vienna, Sept. 17.

Kammerspiele production of three-act comedy by Otto Bielen; staging, Ilo Janko; settings, Karl Reichmann; costumes, Hertha Neuffer. Stars Peter Weck; features Doris Kirchner, Elisabeth Berzabohaty, Luzi Neudecker. At Kammerspiele, Vienna, Sept. 10, '58.

Stefani ..... Doris Kirchner
Viktoria ..... Elisabeth Berzabohaty
Franziska ..... Luzi Neudecker
Jakob Neuhaus ..... Peter Weck
Erich Roedenberg ..... Peter Schratt
Wiltz ..... Erich Doerner
Mrs. Wiltz ..... Suzanne Engelhardt
Schimmerl ..... Ernst Waldbrunn
Reithofer ..... Otto Schenk
Lady in Green ..... Suzanne Cronau
Servant ..... Ludwig Netopil

Otto Bielen, best known as a television writer, has come up with a farce that's not only a local success but is a prospect for foreign adaptation and production, including the U. S. It has a basic comedy situation, with no special national angles, and it requires only a simple production.

The story involves a bank clerk who's irresistible to the ladies but too timid to do anything about it. All the femme employees in the bank are wild about him, but the chief plot situation is that the shy charmer's boss becomes engaged to his school-days sweetheart.

There are excellent performances by Ernst Waldbrunn, Otto Schenk and Luzi Neudecker, while Ilo Janko's direction doesn't miss a point and the Karl Reichmann sets and Hertha Neuffer costumes are appropriate. Maas.

Luey Crown

Paris, Oct. 2.

Elvire Popesco-Henri de Malet production (with Lumbroso spectacles) of three-act (10 scenes) drama by Jean-Pierre Aumont, based on Irwin Shaw novel; staging, Pierre Dux; scenery, Georges Wakhevitch; costumes for Mlle. Feuillere, Balmain. Stars Edwige Feuillere, Bernard Blier. At the Theatre de Paris, Paris, Sept. 25, '58; $4 top.

Bar Customer ..... Marcel Alba
Bartender ..... Guy Michel
Pianist ..... Roger Thereze
Young Girl ..... Chantal Deberg
Young Man ..... Francois Dalou
Lucy Crown ..... Edwige Feuillere
Student ..... Jean Barrez
Tony ..... Paul Guers
Anne ..... Francoise Brion
Oliver Crown ..... Bernard Blier
Sam Patterson ..... Michel Nastorg
Susan ..... Jocelyne Darche
Jeff ..... Jacques Riberolles
Tony, as boy ..... Michel Giannou

"Lucy Crown," Jean-Pierre Aumont's dramatization of Irwin Shaw's bestseller about a woman torn between the maternal instinct and the desire to be a play-girl, is the first new click of the Paris season and should repeat its success abroad.

The circumstances of this goldmine story and play property (which offers irresistible range for actresses of stature) is complicated. Hecht-Lancaster purchased the screen rights of the novel two years ago. The book presented a scenario problem, however, and now Aumont has made a smooth acting vehicle out of it by utilizing film flash-back technique. It's likely that Hecht-Lancaster will produce it in New York and London, with the film version following.

The title character of the yarn is the wife of a successful but commonplace business man, and mother of a 14-year-old son. The boy is embittered when she has an affair with his college-student tutor, but her complacent husband condones it and goes on living with her, becoming an alcoholic as she has a series of amours with young men.

After the father is killed in the war, the mother has an unexpected meeting with the son, now married and the father of a child. He is still embittered and has become a drunkard, but is reunited with the heroine as they resolve to make something of the rest of their lives.

Aumont's adaptation of the story is neatly effective, keeping the stage alive with forceful, compelling dialog. The staging of Pierre Dux provides a skillful assist. As the many-sided heroine, Edwige Feuillere gives one of her best performances to date, avoiding the obvious but projecting the character of the bored matron, the frightenedly guilty mother, the man-wise charmer of 40 and the shrewd, disillusioned woman of 50.

Bernard Blier is expressively restrained as the husband, Paul Guers is properly smouldering as the son and Jacques Riberolles is suitably callow as the tutor. The George Wakhevitch scenery is stunning and Balmain has provided Mlle. Feuillere with a chic wardrobe.

Although "Lucy Crown" is essentially a woman's play, it won't bore men. Less expertly adapted and presented, it might have been a latter-day "Madame X" tearjerker. But it holds up as first-rate contemporary theatre. Curt.

Valmouth

London, Oct. 3.

Michael Codron presentation of two-act (12 scenes) musical by Sandy Wilson, from the novel by Ronald Firbank; staging, Vida Hope; decor and costumes, Tony Walton. Stars Bertice Reading. At Lyric Opera House, Hammersmith, London, Oct. 2, '58; $1.75 top.

Mrs. Hurstpierpoint ..... Barbara Couper
Mrs. Throughfare ..... Betty Hardy
Father Colley-Mahoney ..... Robert Bernal
Capt. Thoroughfare ..... Alan Edwards
Lt. Whorwood ..... Aubrey Woods
ffines ..... John Saunders
Nit ..... Ian Burford
Fowler ..... Pat Gilbert
Sister Ecclesis ..... Marcia Ashton
Grannie Tooke ..... Doris Hare
Thetis Tooke ..... Patsy Rowlands
David Tooke ..... Peter Gilmore
Mrs. Yajnavalkya ..... Bertice Reading
Niri-Esther ..... Maxine Daniels

Lady de Panzoust ..... Fenella Fielding
Sir Victor Vatt ..... Roderick Jones
Lady Saunter ..... Celia Helda
Madam Mimosa ..... Marcia Owen
Cardinal Pirelli ..... Geoffrey Dunn
Mrs. O. Comedy ..... Sally Alsford
Dr. Dee ..... Lewis Henry

Sandy Wilson, who built a prosperous international reputation on the strength of "The Boy Friend," the 1920's musical satire now in its fifth West End year, has pushed the clock back to the Edwardian era with "Valmouth," adapted from the Ronald Firbank novel. Not with such unqualified success, however. Indeed, Wilson may consider himself fortunate if the management decides to gamble by transfer

The Maternity Bit

London, Oct. 7.

Wendy Craig, young actress featured in "George Dillon," due to open in Boston before its Broadway run, has pulled off unexpected contractual deal. Because she does not wish to be separated too long from her child Miss Craig will play for only four weeks on Broadway. Previous shortest get-out for a British actress in a Broadway run is said to be a three-months' deal by Vivien Leigh.

Eileen Herlie, Robert Stevens, Alison Leggatt and Avril Leggatt are also in the John Osborne play.

Legit Followup

Duel of Angels

(APOLLO, LONDON)

London, Sept. 30.

With Claire Bloom dropping out of "Duel of Angels" to fulfill a film commitment, the "other woman" role has been taken over by Ann Todd. The Christopher Fry adaptation of Jean Giraudoux's comedy-drama has settled down as a steady hit, and the teaming of Miss Todd with Vivien Leigh ensures that there is no nosedive in stellar value. Miss Todd gives an assured and intelligent interpretation of the pure woman sharply clashing with wantonness, as represented by Miss Leigh.

The two offer a fascinating display of theatrical fireworks, and because the two actresses are now of more equal maturity the battle of wits and personalities is given fresh zest. The play also offers a big chance for Peter Wyngarde as the man caught up between the two women, and his performance has grown in stature and authority since the first night. Rich.

Off-Broadway Reviews

Let My People Go

A. Jones & Assoc. presentation of Alex & Michel ("The Drinking Gourds"), and Sylvia Del Villard's Folk Song Troupe ("De Carahalises") in a two-part American Slave Cycle concert. Direction, script and musical scores, Michel Le Rue, Alex Foster; drummers, Osvaldo Baez, Benito Robles; guitar scores, Paul Palmieri; 2nd guitarist, Robert Hill II; pantomimers, Sylvia del Villard, Ina Newton; chant, Ella Jenkins. At Town Hall, N.Y., Sept. 28, '58; $3.45 top.

Singers: Theodora Wingate, Randolph Robinson, Christine Chapman, William Baker, Charlotte Easley, Madah Topson, Mark Cole, Willie Gowin, J. E. Cosby, Maybelle Whiting, Joan Chambers, John O. Scott, Robert Hill II, Dolores Anderson, Jean Bagley Chambers, Russell Bagley, Calvin Ervin, Herman Gladden.

Harriet Tubman was a Negro slave who escaped, could not rest while others were in bondage, and through her work helping other slaves to reach the North became known as the Chief Engineer of the Underground Railroad.

"Let My People Go" is a concertized version of Miss Tubman's brave works. In two parts, it first, through song and dance, attempts to evoke Africa, then the slave migration, Miss Tubman's escape and her first deliverance. After the intermission, by means of recitation and spirituals, the essence, rather than the factual life, of this so-called "Moses of her people" is recalled.

Unhappily, the milieu of Town Hall has worked against best presentation of this obviously deeply-felt work. If the presentation could be more intimate, so that its audience could get a feeling of subjective participation, this hybrid folk cantata might stand a better chance. It would still need, however, considerably sharper staging, and judicious trimming of the second act which has the unfortunate tendency to go on beyond its listeners.

The opening Voodoo Ritual, with the sensuousness of its drumming, ankle bells, singing and clapping provides a great deal of zest and atmosphere. There is particular pathos and tragedy in a later scene of desolation while a slave is being whipped to death.

Among the spirituals, "Somebody's Calling My Name" and "Soon We'll Be Done With the Troubles of the World" do most to vividly realize the enormous spirit that animated Harriet Tubman. Geor.

American Mime Theatre

Joy Thomson & Michael Gardner presentation of a program of mime. Features Paul Curtis, James Noble, Carolyn Coates, Kathleen Murphy, William Malley, Max de Novellis. Settings by Norman Rock, Robert Wightman; music, Tom Scott; musician, Max de Novellis. At the Orpheum Theatre, N.Y., Sept. 23, '58; $3.90 top ($4.90 opening).

Cast: Paul Curtis, James Noble, Carolyn Coates, Kathleen Murphy, William Malley, Max de Novellis.

Some 15 minutes after Paul Curtis and his mime troupe start their program of seven pantomimes at lower 2nd Ave.'s Orpheum Theatre, good humor and entertainment reign. After nearly two hours, however, the bill has lost its zest.

Like the little girl with the curl, mime must be very, very good, or else. Curtis studied in Paris with Etienne Decroux, and latter's own pupil Marcel Marceau and since his return has devoted himself to building what he now features as "America's only mime troupe." Taken in fragments, there is worth in the efforts of Curtis & Co. Theatre, however, is the sum of its parts, and though there is intermittent value, it does not add up to other than a coterie evening.

Among the plusses are a satire on the American cowboy and Indian formula, called "The Western." Curtis as the villain, James Noble, as the hero, and Carolyn Coates as variously, an Indian girl, a widow, and the outlaw's sweetheart, make fair fun out of their kidding.

"Pinball Machine" is a labored jest on the plight of the poor pinball, with Noble, William Malley, Kathleen Murphy, Miss Coates, and Max de Novellis, as bumpers, and Curtis as the ball. Curtis' use of his comic "mask," or face, is the highlight here.

"Abstraction" and "Dreams" are a cross between Dali and grand guignol. In "Dreams," for instance, Curtis takes his body apart, crushes it, kneads it into a tiny ball, and is horrified when, as he touches the repulsive result, it screams.

Curtis avers that he is attempting "to develop an entirely new concept of mime and evolve a truly American contribution to the classic art form." This has included the use of dialog periodically which seems intrusive. Maybe it's a case of least said soonest mended. It gives Miss Coates, however, and Noble, a chance to show themselves as passable actors as well as just mimes.

Elsewhere on the program the company plays charades with words and sounds suggested by the audience, and closes with "Commedia," a rather tenuous suggestion of commedia dell' arte. It's offbeat off-Broadway but Curtis' dream has not yet been made commercial. Geor.

Jackknife

Sylvan Theatre Productions presentation of a new three-act comedy by Rock Anthony. Stars William Thourlby, Dolly Jonah. Staged by Byrne Piven; setting, Carroll Cline. At Royal Playhouse, N.Y., Sept. 26, '58; $3.85 top.

Cast: Joseph Boley, Dolly Jonah, Rochelle Oliver, Glenn Cannon, William Thourlby, Marnel Sumner, Michael Russo, Charles Mayer, Martin Garner.

Rock Anthony's farce-comedy, "Jackknift," is a lively contribution to the new off-Broadway season. Anthony has considerable yet to learn about plotting a play, but little about salty dialog and potent comic situation. Fortunately for him, in this neat production at the Royal Playhouse (heretofore a jinx theatre), Dolly Jonah has been cast as the sardonic proprietress of a roadside establishment "somewhere on a highway in Pennsylvania," the play's setting. Miss Jonah is a tall, well-figured actress with a droll face that is topped by a Harpo Marx haircut, and she has a throatily rasping voice that threatens to give even the redoubtable Tallulah competition. What Miss Jonah does with Anthony's sardonics is to drop each line like a lighted firecracker, holding each one just long enough, before throwing it away, so that few of them fizzle.

The story, which it is just as well to ignore when seeing the play, concerns the mulcting of an insurance company, violation of the Mann Act, and two transparent love affairs. Since anybody can guess how it will end, Anthony has had to fall back on his flair for farce, and in this department he has served himself well.

Byrne Piven has directed straightforwardly, taking the bad with the good, making the script as tight as possible. Carroll Cline's design of a roadside stand interior makes good use of the stage's limited facilities.

Besides the extremely helpful Miss Jonah, there is a muscular performance by strapping William Thourlby as "Sailor," a truck-driver with a facility for inducing hero-worship in teenagers, a truculently nervous portrait by Glenn Cannon of a sensitive youngster trying to mature beyond subservient adulation, and a bright acting job by Rochelle Oliver, as a 17-year old who has succumbed to "Sailor," proclaims that she is about to have "Sailor Baby," and perpetually carries a huge sailor doll.

Martin Garner is in no way fazed by the task of playing a highly improbable insurance adjuster, Joseph Boley wanders in and out with a liquor bottle in a part that has no visible relation to the play, and Charles Mayer faces manfully the necessity of portraying the kind of doctor the A. M. A. would be happy to forget about.

Miss Jonah, Anthony and Piven, pretty much in that order, have given East 4th St.'s Royal Playhouse its first chance in seasons to stay alight for a while. Geor.

Evelyn Laye's Autobiog

London, Oct. 7.

Evelyn Laye, one of Britain's outstanding musical comedy actresses, has written one of the frankest autobiographies of any stage personality in "Boo To My Friends" (Hurst & Blackett; $2.13).

This 58-year-old star made her first appearance on the stage when she was 15 and she writes affectionately and nostalgically of the lush days of the 1930s when she was on top. But she writes equally revealingly of the time a few years back when she was regarded as a "has been" until "Wedding in Paris" brought her a triumphant comeback.

She also deals with equal candor about one marriage that flopped and her present one which has helped her through much professional despair. "Boo to My Friends"—the reference is to her nickname, "Boo"—is written with punch and grace and offers an excellent portrait of a beautiful, talented woman who, at all times, has been stagestruck and has given as much to the theatre as she has taken from it. Rich.

soprano Mary Costa, they sing their way through some delightful Leonard Bernstein music and mediocre lyrics from the pen of Richard Wilbur, John Latouche and Dorothy Parker.

Miss Costa, an occasional opera artist but better known for tv musical commercials, sings and acts well as Candide's lady-love, and Miss Petina, scores as her fun-loving companion. Lee Bergere is competent in four roles.

Most of the audience found the evening amusing, and business bettered capacity. Bitt.

This three-act version of "Henry V" is a masterpiece. From an actor's viewpoint the historical chronicle is a delight, with over three dozen significant speaking parts. But from the director's viewpoint, "Henry V" can be a miserable disaster, for it requires infinite attention to detail while still maintaining the basic concept that the play must show masses of men loving, dying, grieving, brooding, jesting and, above all, forever moving.

This "Henry V" is a particular triumph for director Michael Benthall. His interpretation is evident in every performance, including Laurence Harvey in the title role and Richard Wordsworth's expressively vulgar portrayal of Pistol.

Benthall has pulled together the tableaux required for the set speeches without making the tableaux seem lifeless. He has drawn big laughs from the low-comedy, has made the scenes of soldiering feel as contemporary as a GI barracks, and has paced the classic so swiftly that there is not a nodding moment.

Harvey is a fine Henry V, boyish and not so far from his ne'er-do-well escapades with Sir John Falstaff as to be beyond an occasional prank. Yet the actor also shows the young king's strong, responsible side, and his touching tenderness when he courts the French King's daughter, Katherine, a scene which could be ridicuous if played less tastefully.

Wordsworth is a marvelous baggy-pants buffoon, David Dodimead is excellent as the sinister King of France, and Peter Cellier, as the Dauphin, plays beautifully against Robert Algar, the conservative Constable of France.

Dudley Jones, as Henry's Welsh captain, breathes life into what could degenerate into a stock character, and Judi Dench is a fetching Katherine, dewy and beguiling in her ludicrous attempts to speak English during the "lesson scene." Joseph O'Conor, as the play's Chorus or narrator, is quick, lively and thoroughly understandable; Job Stewart is a loveable Nym, and Margaret Courtenay (as both Mistress Quickly and Queen Isabel of France) and James Culliford (as both Bardolph and the soldier, Bates) appear with distinction.

The settings are a triumph of mobile illusion. The stage is framed by what looks like 15th century battlements, giving the impression of depth, and at the rear hangs a backdrop on which is painted a map of England and France. Within this sphere are dropped the dozen or so necessary sets to suggest changes of locale.

The costumes are also vivid, sharply contrasting the hearty directness of the English court with the cumbersome delicacy of the French court. Both settings and costumes are the work of Audrey Cruddas. Stef.

Can-Can

Cleveland, Sept. 29.

John Kenley production of two-act musical comedy, with songs by Cole Porter, book by Abe Burrows. Stars Genevieve; features Ferdinand Hilt, Ronnie Cunningham, Sonny Sparks. John Kenley, Ohio strawhat impresario, coppered all of his bets accurately by getting Genevieve from Jack Paar's tv series to gild his touring production of "Can-Can." The French singing comedienne is the engaging powerhouse reason why the Cole Porter-Abe Burrows musical did nearly capacity biz at the Hanna here on its first full stanza road stand. With only a few replacements it's almost the same fast-paced company that supported the star in two click one-week runs this summer at Kenley's Packard Music Hall, Warren, O.

Genevieve's elfinish mannerisms, English-fracturing accent and French-fried mockery shape up brightly. Skimpy settings don't matter when she is bouncing in disarmingly frothy style as the tough Montmartre cabaret proprietress trying to keep herself and her can-can dancers out of jail. Her voice does not carry much lyricism, but has color and sufficient sexy impact to punch "I Love Paris," "C'Est Magnifique" and the theme song over beguilingly.

Ronnie Cunningham injects a pleasing amount of comic and dancing verve as the wacky Parisian sculptor's sweetheart, Sonny Sparks is laughably exaggerated opposite her, and Joseph Vispi plays the art critic in swashbuckling fashion, while Michael De Marco is a strikingly agile featured dancer in ballets staged briskly by Rudy Tronto. Anton Coppola's musical direction is crisply competent. Pullen.

Doll," was one of the biggest hits Arena has had.

John O'Shaughnessy will direct "The Front Page." The Arena has no resident director, and directors of other productions will be announced later.

The production staff will include Cay Knockey, general manager; Don Koll, public relations; Leo Gallenstein, lighting; Mesrop Kesdekian, designer and technical director; Marianna Elliott, costumes; and Warner Schreiner, boxoffice manager. New personnel this year include Robert Mareck, stage manager; Elizabeth Roberts, properties; Laurence Bahler, house manager; and Leigh Cross, sound.

The Arena's subscription plan seems headed for a new record, Koll says. Last Spring, 25% discount season tickets for all eight shows, or seven out of eight, outsold by 50% the total of the entire previous season. Now, Arena has an additional fall plan giving 15% discount.

Arena started in Washington in a 247-seat converted cinema, moving to its present larger quarters in 1956 after a year's search for more room.

The off-Broadway booking begins this week—a part in "Time of Your Life" at the Brussels World's Fair.

AGMA-Met Opera 'Until-Move' Pact

New three-year contract between the American Guild of Musical Artists and the Metropolitan Opera will be signed at the Met in N.Y. today (Wed.). It covers some 250 soloists, choral singers and dancers and will be in effect until the Met moves into its new home at the Lincoln Performing Arts Center.

Agreement provides for better working conditions, higher per diem pay on tour, new rehearsal pay schedules, sick leave, retirement and severance pay benefits, etc. Artists getting less than $500 per performance are affected. New deal brings the average for choral singers up to $5,000 per year, for soloists to $7,500 and for ballet dancers to $3,000. Hyman Faine palavered for the union.

Dance Review

Edinburgh Ballet

Zurich, Sept. 27.

Edinburgh International Ballet, new dance group with name guest terpers formed for the recent 12th Edinburgh International Festival and directed by Peggy Van Pragh, made its Swiss bow at Stattheatre here, presented by Michael Frostick in association with J. De Blieck of Amsterdam. Troupe presented four of the 12 new ballets specially commissioned for and world-preemed at the Scot fest, with choreographies by John Taras, Walter Gore, George Skibine and Bjorn Holmgren. Guest soloists included such names as Paula Hinton, Elsa Marianne von Rosen and Holmgren, both from the Stockholm Royal Ballet, Marjorie Tallchief, Skibine and Max Bozzoni from the Paris Grand Opera.

Despite the generous supply of dance names, none of the four items impressed as a contribution to modern ballet. This is due partly to lack of cohesion of the supporting dancers who, though satisfactory individually, obviously have worked together for too short a time, and partly to unconvincing or too lightweight librettos. B.o. was only so-so and reviews were mixed to thumbs-down.

Opener, an abstract study for eight dancers called "Octet," choreographed by Taras with music by David Wooldridge, was neatly executed, but lacked real calibre and originality. Gore's "The Night and Silence" to painfully out-of-place Bach music is a tour de force duo of a girl and her jealous lover who strangles her at the end. Exaggerated contortions by David Poole were richly made up for by the brilliant, elf-like performance of Miss Hinton, by far the highlight of the evening which also earned top mitting.

Third piece, Skibine's "Les Facheuses Rencontres" (Annoying Encounter), with libretto, set and costumes by Alwyne Cambie, is an amusing turn-of-the-century trio, Parisian style, featuring Miss Tallchief, Skibine and Bozzoni. Set to an adequately humorous score by Maurice Jarre, it involves an elderly baron, his would-be paramour who turns out to be a cunning jewel thief, and gentleman-burglar Arsene Lupin. After some quidpro-quos, both men are duped by the shapely gal who walks off with the loot. Plot has possibilities which are not fully taken advantage of as ballet never really comes off, except for Miss Tallchief's delightful, feline performance.

The closer, a Swedish paraphrase tagged "Midsummer's Vigil" by Holmgren, danced by the choreographer, Miss von Rosen and the ensemble, is a no-plot classic turn using Svenska folk themes including the "Swedish Rhapsody." Here, Allan Fridericia contributed some eyefilling costumes, but ballet itself is lightweight in form and execution. Troupe travels with its own orchestra, batoned by Paul Collins and Maurits Sillem.

Valmouth

ferring it for a regular West End run.

Michael Codron, who presents the show at this nabe situation, may feel it worth the risk, on the theory that Wilson's name on the marquee (with his "Boy Friend" credit suitably exploited) could sell the tickets. There is also for exploitation the fact that "Valmouth," like the previous musical, has been directed by Vida Hope. Finally, there is the name appeal of Beatrice Reading, an animated, vigorous colored singer, who puts life and enthusiasm into the production.

It may have been an ambitious idea on the author's part to transform the Fairbank novel into a musical, but it fails to come off. There are too many obscure characters, a high proportion being not adequately developed. But more serious is the fact that "Valmouth" never boasted much in the way of a plot and its strange mixture of sex and religion is unlikely material for adaptation.

To compensate somewhat for these defects, there is a handsomely mounted production with stunning costumes designed by Tony Walton. There are also a few pleasant songs which, while good enough to listen to, make no lasting impact. There are, all told, some 20 numbers, the best possibly being "Big Best Shoes," sung with great energy by Miss Reading, and "The Cathedral of Clemenza," an offbeat and almost irreverent lyric sung in a restrained way by Geoffrey Dunn.

The double-element plot involves an attractive and amorous widow making a bold approach to a reluctant shepherd, and the romance of a member of Valmouth's high society with a colored girl. Other plot threads are not clearly defined, but the stage is invariably crowded and, thanks to Miss Hope's bold staging, the action is maintained at a steady pace.

Among the cast, Fenella Fielding clearly has the best chance as the widow, and her provocative interpretation, though without subtlety, helps to sustain the interest. Others worth noting in the big cast are Aubrey Woods, as an effeminate lieutenant, and Doris Hare, Geoffrey Dunn and Marcia Ashton. Myro.

The Heart's A Wonder

London, Sept. 29.

Winifred Comstock (by arrangement with Minster Productions) presentation of three-act (22 scenes) comedy with music, adapted by Nuala and Mairin O'Farrell from J. M. Synge's "The Playboy of the Western World." Staged by Denis Carey; choreography, Josie Mack Avin and Patricia Ryan; decor, Michael MasLiammoir. Stars Una Collins, Joe Lynch. At Westminster Theatre, London, Sept. 18, '58; $2.50 top.

Margaret Flaherty ..... Una Collins
Shawn Keogh ..... Milo O'Shea
Michael James Flaherty ..... Jack Cunningham
Jimmy Farrell ..... Peter Dix
Philly Cullen ..... Dermot Kelly
Christopher Mahon ..... Joe Lynch
Widow Quin ..... Ann O'Dwyer
Susan Brady ..... Lelia Doolan
Nelly ..... Cora Carolan
Honor Blake ..... Rhona Woodcock
Sara Tansey ..... Maureen Toal
Old Mahon ..... Charlie Byrne
Neighboring Peasants ..... Robert Charles, Brenda MacGuine, Michael Lowey, Pat McGuigan

Possibly the premise was that if it could be done with G. B. Shaw, the same might be pulled off with J. M. Synge. In any case, sister-collaborators Nuala and Mairin O'Farrell have made a musical version of "The Playboy of the Western World."

Under its new title, "The Heart's a Wonder," the show has already had a profitable engagement in Dublin, where its investment was recouped within three weeks. Although the transfer to the Westminster probably involved only a modest outlay, it appears questionable whether the production will be able to sustain a worthwhile run in the new location.

Mainly mitigating against the presentation is the absence of marquee names, which is hard on the competent Irish players from the original Dublin presentation. The music, mainly based on traditional Irish airs, is pleasant enough as an adjunct to the show, but hardly strong enough to justify much plug time, either on the air or via disks, and thus stimulate audience support.

In their adaptation of the Synge play, the co-authors have not tampered greatly with the original, although they have had to cut it to make time for the songs. Although they've done a creditable job, they have not succeeded in making the musical numbers an integral part of the plot.

There's considerable charm in the story of the young boy regarded as a hero when he spreads the story that he had murdered his father, but spurned when he's proved a fake. Joe Lynch invests that role with considerable authority, shows a fine comedy sense and a highly acceptable voice.

Una Collins plays the femme lead with considerable charm and vivacity, and there is nice support from Milo O'Shea, Jack Cunningham, Ann O'Dwyer and Charlie Byrne. Denis Carey's staging is smooth and fluent, the dances have a genuine Irish quality and the decor and costumes are simple, but effective. The program contains a two page glossary of some of the words and phrases which might puzzle the average English-speaking audience. Myro.

RACE DISCRIMINATION PLAY DUE IN LONDON

London, Oct. 7.

"Hot Summer Night," a drama about racial discrimination, has begun a six-week tour before presentation in the West End by Emile Littler. One of the towns it will visit is Nottingham, scene of recent race riots.

Playwright-tv scriptor Ted Willis has authored the drama about a trade union leader who fights discrimination in a factory. He tries to prevent a strike when a colored man is made foreman, but when his daughter falls in love with a Jamaican he finds that he, too, is prejudiced.

Rouben Ter-Aratunian is designing the sets for "Redhead."

Concert Review

The American Virtuosi

New Hope, Pa., Oct. 2.

Irked by "the growing invasion of foreign virtuosi ensembles, and in answer to this invasion," 19 American ensemble players have banded together as "The American Virtuosi." This string group is headed by Michel Piastro, Gregory S. Brooks and Alfred Akon.

Maestro Piastro, founder and conductor of the Longine Symphonette, is musical director as well as playing member of the ensemble. Gregory Brooks, violinist, and organizer of the U.S. Victory Symphony, the U.N. Symphony and the Metropolitan Quartet, serves as executive director. Akon is official transcriber and member of the viola section.

The American Virtuosi made its first public appearance at the Bucks County Playhouse last June before a small gathering. After playing about half-a-dozen other out-of-town engagements, it gave a second concert in New Hope on Sunday afternoon, Sept. 28. This time all 450 seats sold out.

Program was composed principally of 18th century music. In keeping with the custom of that period, the violin and viola sections stood in a semicircle around the cellists who were seated. This arrangement seemed to add strength and sonority to their playing.

Highlight was the "Concertino for Cello" by Ariosti. Richard Kay, cellist, gave a rendition of artistic sincerity and impressive style to this beautiful work.

Concluding numbers were Arensky's "Variations on a Theme by Tschaikowsky," and "Caprice No. 24 in A Minor," by Paganini. Both works received spectacular performances and brought call for encores.

The one fault of the otherwise excellent program was that nearly every piece of music was written in a minor key, creating a more somber mood than might have been necessary. Elvira.

Shubert Fiscal Facts

Financial highlights in the 1957-58 operation of the Shubert-controlled Select Theatres Corp., and subsidiary companies, as revealed at this week's annual stockholders' meeting, included the following:

Rentals at the Barrymore Theatre, N.Y., and the Shubert Theatre, Chicago, climbed $206,000 and $159,000, respectively (the previous year's figures weren't given).

Select paid $40,000 in settlement of a suit instituted by Lillian Romberg for alleged infringement of the renewal copyright of the music to "Student Prince," written by her late husband, Sigmund Romberg.

The mortgages on the Selwyn and Harris Theatres, Chicago, were paid last July and the houses were sold for a combined $800,000, with the deal calling for $295,000 in cash and a $505,000 five-year mortgage.

The mortgages on the Belasco Theatre, N.Y., and a theatrical warehouse at Ft. Lee, N.J., were paid in full. The warehouse, which had been losing around $40,000 yearly, was sold last August for $175,000.

The Select Operating Corp. had a decrease in income of $64,000 from the previous year, while the Select Theatres Corp. had a decrease of $34,000.

Boston's Show-of-Month

Boston, Oct. 7.

Panorama Show-of-the-Month Club will have a performance of Rogers & Hammerstein's "The Flower Drum Song" at the Shubert Oct. 28. The org's next selection is "The Disenchanted," new play by Budd Schulberg and Harvey Breit, due in November at the Colonial.

The club launches its new 1958-59 season with the two attractions. "The Flower Drum Song" opens at the Shubert Oct. 27. Instead of the customary paid preview, the club is getting the following night, Tuesday (28). On "The Disenchanted," members may attend any one of the first four performances including opening night.

Show-of-the-Month Club has signed eight other shows for the season.

penses connected with the authors setting up residence in the cities where the plays are to be produced. Ten theatres outside the New York area have been selected to present the scripts.

The program, being administered by the New Dramatists, also provides for a partial subsidy to the producing theatres to assure a finished production and to provide funds for the hiring of guest professionals to augment resident companies.

The deadline on the submission of scripts for the first year is next Wednesday (15). Only authors who've written at least two full-length plays are eligible under the grant. Professionals connected with the theatre can send in playwright nominations to the Foundation.

Playwrights can send scripts directly to the New Dramatists for screening, however, and if any are considered worthy they'll be submitted in the competition, with the New Dramatists as nominator. The plays have to be full-length originals, which have never been produced professionally.

The plays selected will be announced next spring by the New Dramatists, which is also attempting to interest Broadway producers in catching the out-of-town productions. The theatres involved in the project for 1959 include for Equity operations, Actors Workshop, San Francisco; Alley Theatre, Houston; Arena Stage, Washington, and Margo Jones Theatre, Dallas. The other spots are community and university theatres.

statement, gets $10,000 yearly, plus a $100 weekly expense account.

Regarding the officer positions credited to J. J. and John on the annual statement, a post-meeting stockholders' report, issued for the first time last year, listed J. J. as president, John, as vice president and secretary, and Howard N. Milley as treasurer. Milley, who had no stock in the corporation last year, has since acquired 10 shares of common.

A total of 225,590 shares of common and preferred stock were represented in a vote re-electing J. J., John and Milley as directors of the organization. Incidentally, a situation that occurred at last year's meet was repeated at last Monday's conclave when Gilbert again blocked an attempt to get the stockholders to approve all the acts of board.

Although they have disposed of several of their New York theatres, as required under the terms of a Government consent decree, the Shuberts still operate the following 18 Broadway houses: Ambassador, Barrymore, Belasco, Booth, Broadhurst, Broadway, Cort, 54th Street (formerly Adelphi), Golden, Imperial, Longacre, Lyceum, Majestic, Music Box, Plymouth, Royale, Shubert and Winter Garden. They also have gotten rid of a number of theatres out of town, but retain some half-dozen others in various key cities.

Clinton Wilder has re-optioned Robert L. Joseph's "The Immaculate Adventure."

Sam L. Adams at 88

Samuel Hopkins Adams, now 88, has turned in his new novel, "Tenderloin" (time of the 1890s) to Random House for publication. Robert E. Griffith & Harold Prince, legit producers, have optioned it for dramatization.

Adams' last RH novel was "Canaltown" seven years ago but he has been a prolific author for the Landmark (juvenile Americana) series, also Random House, turning out over 20 of the 100-odd titles in the series. His "Pony Express" is the top seller in the Landmark group.

Eddie Davis' Posthumous Book

Gag writer-playwright Eddie Davis' "How To Be Sexcessful (A Treasure of Pleasure)" (Fell; $1.98) has just been published, several weeks after his death. It's in the same idion of al fresco humor, with accent on the s.a., divided in locales and themes like Hollywood, Wall St., Las Vegas, love, Broadway, college, service, marriage. It is illustrated by divers cartoonists, also in the Esquire-Playboy technique of line drawings.

What Happens To 'Miss America'?

Carroll Baker and her husband, Jack Garfein, have optioned "Miss America," upcoming Random House novel by Danny Stern, which treats with a beauty contest winner and what has happened to her three years after she's the No. 1 beaut of the land. Gregory Peck is interested in the project. Novel isn't due until next spring.

Random House prez Bennett Cerf's recent officiation as one of the "Miss America" judges in Atlantic City is coincidence; this book was contracted months prior thereto.

Incidentally, Cerf, who is a prolific lecturer and gets fees in the top-five category, was asked at a recent address before the American College of Physicians how he felt escorting the new Miss America and he observed, "Great; I had the realization that 18,000 people in the Civic Auditorium were watching us parade down the length of the hall and not a single person was even looking at me!"

Ryan Succeeds Benedict

Gordon G. Ryan named publication manager of Holiday magazine in the Philly sales office to succeed Wilbur D. Benedict, who retires Jan. 1. Ryan joined the mag in 1955 as advertising salesman. Prior to Holiday he was with Woman's Day.

Benedict is retiring after 34 years with Curtis Publishing. He started as advertising salesman for Country Gentleman. For many years Benedict had been advertising sales rep for the Ladies Home Journal and Saturday Evening Post.

'TV Guides' 6,500,000

TV Guide's new advertising circulation guarantee of 6,500,000, which became effective with the Oct. 4 issue, will give the publication the largest guarantee of a weekly magazine in this country and Canada. A new rate card also becomes effective with the same issue.

New guarantee represents an increase of 1,200,000 copies over the previous guarantee of 5,300,000 which began on Oct. 5, 1957. The guarantee and rate cards are the seventh since the mag was established in 1953. Its initial guarantee was 1,000,000 copies.

The one-time rate for a black-and-white page was $3,000 when the magazine made its debut. Cost for the same page under new rates is $13,000.

Max Hess' Book

Allentown (Pa.) merchant Max Hess, whose store bearing the family name has national impact, has authored "The Wonderful World of Aunt Tuddy" (with Jeremy Gury) for Random House. It is illustrated by Hillary Knight who did the drawings for Kay Thompson's "Eloise." Book's purpose is to "humanize" the department store.

Woman's Day will serialize it, starting with its Xmas issue.

Smith's Hula Encore

Advance sales on the soon-due al fresco travelog on Mexico, titled "A Pig in the Barber Shop" (Little, Brown) has the publishers assigning H. Allen Smith to get the lei of the land and do one on Hawaii. In the same manner as his sojourn below the Rio Grande for several months, Smith and his wife, Nelle, will go to Honolulu in December.

Smith's previous bestseller, "Write Me a Po_ n, Baby" will also be sequeled next spring, titled "Don't Get Personal With A Chicken."

Lou Meeker Retires

Louis F. Meeker retired Oct. 1 as book editor of the Kansas City Star, after 38 years of evaluating prose and poetry. Now 63, he will follow enthusiasms he has developed for music, photography and bird-watching, the latter two a joint hobby as most of his picture-taking is of naturalist subjects. He learned to play the piano at 50, has several compositions, although none have been published.

Meeker is succeeded by Thorpe Menn, who has been a member of the Star's staff since 1944 and a frequent contributor to the book review page.

Harold Clurman speaks out in his new book

LIES LIKE TRUTH

Theatre Reviews and Essays

A meaty, conversation-sparking collection of pieces on a multiplicity of topics connected with theatre and theatremanship . . . ranging from the problems of directing a play in a foreign language to The Method as the grammar of acting; from theatre in America to theatre abroad; from plays classic to plays controversial; from Shakespeare and Shaw to O'Neill, Osborne and Ionesco.

LIES LIKE TRUTH

opens to applause:

"Harold Clurman possesses one of the few real minds in our theatre today, a mind that sometimes flatters a play by its mere consideration of it. His book, Lies Like Truth, is extremely valuable to our theatre and our culture."
— William Inge

"Lies Like Truth is the best informal survey of the contemporary stage that one could imagine."

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

The way the press, presumably reflecting the alerted proprieties of the peasants—their readers—go into a trauma every time somebody on a quiz contests kisses and tells, you'd think they never heard of rigging except around oil wells.

Long before vicuna coats, deep freezes and rigged contests there have been people who would pay anything within reason for an inside tip from which they might benefit.

These venial corruptions are not unique any place on this earth among any groups—politicians, the professions, or tradesmen, monarchial, democratic or autocratic, under capitalism, feudalism or communism. Everybody wants a bargain; everybody wants to make a big profit. Laws to restrain this avarice means a rigged economy, for a fair profit or a just percentage must be at the expense of someone.

Did They Buy In?

This all-enveloping impeachment of all systems in all lands reminds of a crack the late Bert Leston Taylor made about 40 years ago. Animadvertising on the frailities of the human race, he remarked he felt the same way about the members of a club he belonged to. As he looked around him he wondered how the dickens the rest of them ever got in.

One time civilization tried to break up these small corruptions by classifying all interest charges as usury, and usury had already been condemned by the moral and legal codes. But today the economic practice is "no interest, no capitalism." "In fact, almost anybody in biz would rather be paid interest on almost any money than have the capital returned and no more interest. Even tips are interest charges on a debt already paid. Overtipping is not rebuked as an attempt to institute usury but gets the tipper an added word of thanks.

Few will protest an overpayment, though all will bridle if short-changed on otherwise gypped. Even the postoffice will dun you for a two-cent postage shortage but will not quibble over pocketing the same amount if you have placed an excess of postage on a letter.

Thus the whole structure is rigged to get a little more for a little less, to chisel and bribe and the more subtle the method, the greater the cause for admiration. "Cheating" has become such an innocuous term it is now extended to apply to camera angles so as not to reveal some shoddy corner of the set or an unfavorable feature of a personality. Programs announced as "spontaneous and unrehearsed" are little white lies which nobody takes seriously.

Once contestants become hep to these small fraudulent mosaics it isn't much for them to go the rest of the way, to split part of the loot with one or several who might make the going easier. A minister has even confessed he gave a losing contestant part of his take and she confirmed the understanding had been consummated.

Fred Allen's Delayed Take

Fred Allen must be laughing his head off at this turn of affairs in the successful attempt to palm off guessing and gambling as entertainment.

What is the difference really between an official party thrown by Dulles and one tossed by the gay horse-trader from the Kremlin? Are not both small bribes intended to soften those who may further influence world opinion in their favor? And what are all the junkets and cocktail parties of show biz or any other biz if not well planned schemes to get good opinion for little price? Do they work? Percentagewse they must or they would have been dscontinued long ago.

Did any critic in history resist these blandishments and flattering attacks upon his integrity? Of course, because they usually stop short of the 50-yard line. But in more prosperous days we have seen gifts pile up at the doorsteps of peddlers of Hollywood birdseed which would take a five-ton truck to cart to a storehouse. Some have even boasted and publicized these trinkets as proof of how popular they were in the eyes of stars. Some have complained at being let out of all this largesse, never realizing that it was an honor to be thus passed by.

The late Will A. Page, once a top Broadway p.a., related a story in this field. It concerned the equally late Percy Hammond and how he once resisted one of these trivial attacks on his integrity.

By no means as tough as George Jean Nathan in his notices, Hammond nevertheless inwardly resented the proffer of so much as a two-bit cigar which might be expected to slant the smoke in the direction of a production of the donor.

Hammond at the time was the legit critic of the Chicago Tribune, which otherwise had a reputation of upright, unbiased journalism on par with Pravda. The issue concerned the matter of a hat. A black velour hat. Will Page was in Chicago touring with a Dillingham show. John Barrymore was the star. Together they came out of the Hotel Sherman and, window-shopping, saw some Austrian velour hats in a window. This was at a time when Panama hats in summer and pearl gray derbies in winter were about as far as a peacock of show biz would go. These velour dicers were priced at $8. A lot of dough in those days.

Where Black Velour Hats Began

Barrymore and Page each bought one. Later they ran into Hammond who was fetched by their buys but thought the price was pure folly. Nevertheless, he tried on Page's hat. It fitted him perfectly but he upbraided them for being such chumps with money.

A few days later Morris Gest blew into town with his Russian ballet. Gest spotted Page's bonnet and got a yen for one himself. Page took Gest to the hat-trap. It looked so much better on Gest than on Page that Gest became married to the model and never quit wearing black velour hats till he died.

But Page couldn't keep his big mouth shut. He told the story of Hammond's trying on the hat and it fitted the critic perfectly. This was all Gest needed to smooth relations between a producer and the press. He ordered a dupe of Page's head-drape to be sent with his compliments to Hammond at the Trib.

Hammond, on receiving it, wore it around the office and didn't get a bad notice from anybody on the staff. Then he dispatched a check for $8 to Gest.

Gest, either shocked or trapped, regretted that his beau geste had been misinterpreted as a minor bribe, promptly wrote to the critic, returning the check and hoping that Hammond would keep the hat anyway.

He made the mistake of adding that if Hammond insisted on paying for the hat, to give the $8 to his favorite charity.

Hammond tore up the check and returned the hat to Gest.

Wars have been started on smaller issues and Gest must have been surprised to find that the net result was not a slugging of his Russian ballet for the faux pas but just as good a notice as if the hat trick had never been tried.

There is no doubt that the habitual acceptance of things of this sort have a demoralizing effect upon one's integrity and if everybody does it the gross result would alarm anyone interested in this planet's survival.

The hills of Hollywood are of granite. But they have been quaking and shaking for millions of years and are now in a state of decomposition. Frequently some of this decomposed granite gives way and houses tumble into a ravine. This is where a corruption of nature can end.

It should point a moral, and if it doesn't this country is dead, though not quite buried.

OBITUARIES

BILL E. BURTON

Bill E. Burton, 54, who entered show business as a musician and became one of the top personal managers of name bands and vocalists, died Oct. 3 in his West Hollywood home. He had been ill for six weeks, and death came as a result of a heart attack.

Instrumental in guiding Jimmy Dorsey to the top, Burton was the driving force behind the rise of Dick Haymes, Helen O'Connell, and most recently the Mary Kaye Trio. At times during his life he managed the Andrews Sisters and the Boswell Sisters. At the time of his death, he helmed careers of vocalists Helen Forrest and Ruth Olay, conductor-arranger Jerry Fielding, the Kings Four, as well as the Mary Kaye Trio.

Born in New York City, Burton wasn't out of his teens before he was playing violin with cabaret bands. He entered the management field while vaudeville flourished and toured with the acts he guided, then set his eye on top orchestras.

Known for having a biting sense of humor with an underlying tenderness and an especially vital interest in his clients, Burton took time off from his management cain Newbury. He was also considered a top mentalist with his one-man presentation, "Miracles in Mentalism" and was credited with many royal command performances.

Founder of the Wessex Magical Assn. in Bournemouth, Eng., Nixon came to Toronto three years ago. His last tv appearance in the U.S. was as a mystery guest on "What's My Line." At his death he was the world's youngest living veteran of the Boer War.

Surviving are his wife, the former Irene Lewis, stage comedienne and partner in her husband's onetime theatre operations and acts; son, daughter and a brother. His son, Geoffrey, is a magician-actor-producer whose stage name is Vic Perry.

RAYMOND R. MORGAN

Raymond R. Morgan, 63, head of the Hollywood ad agency bearing his name, died there Oct. 3 after a heart seizure at Mt. Sinai hospital. He had been under observation for a week after a previous heart attack and was making good progress until the time of his death.

One of the foremost advertising men on Coast since he launched his career in Frisco 38 years ago, Morgan won acclaim as a wizard of merchandising. He moved into radio early and among his properties were "Chandu the Magician," "Strange As It Seems," "Charlie Chan" and "Heart's Desire," which launched Ben Alexander in radio.

Other projects which he first projected and are still running are "Breakfast in Hollywood" (with Tom Breneman) and "Queen For a Day." While abroad he sold the foreign rights to "Queen" in a half dozen countries. He served in the first world war and in the last one was a dollar-a-year man for the Treasury.

Surviving are his wife, a son, Raymond Morgan, Jr., associated with him in the agency, and a brother.

EVERETT KEMP

Charles Everett Kemp, 84, the original "Uncle Ezra" of radio and veteran of chautauquas, motion pictures, radio and television, died of a heart attack Oct. 1 in Kansas City. His acting career spanned 60 years, and he was active on KCMO-TV until his death.

A native of Shelbyville, Ill., Kemp received dramatic training at McPherson (Kans.) College and in Chicago. He played the chautauqua circuits and became a star for the Redpath-Horner Company, which earned him a listing in "Who's Who." He also made some short films with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.

In 1928 Ted Malone originated the show, "Happy Hollow," with activity centered around the fictitious character, "Uncle Ezra." Kemp was originally cast in the role and played it for over 10 years. As late as a few months ago he did a an early morning disk jockey stint on KCMO.

Customs Inspectors Nude-Shy

Independents bringing in foreign films are showing increasing resentment over the U.S. Custom's practice of cutting out all nudity scenes.

Point is made that the U.S. Courts have ruled that nudity isn't obscene, and the fact is that a number of nudist pix are currently in release even in censorship states like New York.

Indies feel that Customs should be guided by the same laws that apply to the local censors. There has been talk of testing the Customs policy in the courts. However, it's a lot for an individual outfit to take on, and the indies have never been able to get together in an organization that functioned.

Authors Taxed as Business Men; Writing a 'Privilege' in N. Y. C.

Washington, Oct. 14.

The U.S. Supreme Court has refused to act on author John Steinbeck's appeal from a tax of New York City levied upon him for the "privilege of doing business" (i.e. writing) which the Authors League of America had strongly resented as an instance of the American culture piling abuse on neglect of its creative artists.

Court decided no substantial "Federal" issue had been presented by Steinbeck and in effect this dismissal validates a lower court ruling sustaining the City of New York.

(Authors League is reported disturbed lest the revenue-hungry gentry at N.Y. City Hall now sock freelance writers for business tax on the plea they make a profit. —Ed).

'I PASSED FOR WHITE' GAL LEAD ELUSIVE

Fred Wilcox is a director with a problem. Having bought the Mary Hastings book, "I Passed for White," for filming by his indie unit, he's now trying to find a girl whose looks could live up to the title. And he's having little luck in his search so far.

"I knew it was hopeless to look on the Coast, because we have very few Negro actors there," he said last week. "There are many in New York, but of course I need a girl who is colored and yet almost white. I hear of several who won't even come to me because they are actually passing for white in real life."

Wilcox, who used to be with Metro, said he planned to shoot the picture on the Coast, in black-and-white. He refuses to compromise, i.e. use a white girl for the lead. "It'd deprive the film of the kind of realism that I am looking for," he maintained. "If I can't get the right girl, I won't do it at all."

Wilcox said he had a tieup with a studio, but wouldn't identify the outfit. "I Passed for White" is a yarn about a girl who gets married, pretending she's white. She gets enmeshed in an ever-growing web of lies and finally leaves her husband to return to the place of her birth.

'Pirate' Ship Radio-Selling Danes, Swedes

Copenhagen, Oct. 14.

Borrowing an old trick of the famed American goatgland "doctor," John R. Brinkley, who once set up a broadcasting station on a ship in the Carribbean, unknown operators have been broadcasting radio commercials into Denmark nightly, six to midnight, from a ship in the Baltic Sea.

Ship uses the Panamanian flag, though Panama is reported to have protested. It beams its programs into southern Sweden as well as here, neither Scandinavian kingdom having sponsored radio.

Unconfirmed report is that the "pirate" ship paid Victor Borge 50,000 Danish crowns for a program.

'GAL-LERY' FOR DAMES AFRAID OF MASHERS

Chicago, Oct. 14.

Clark Theatre, downtown indie, has a unique pitch for pinch-shy women who are reluctant to come in solo. Filmery now offers a ladies-only mezzanine namely the "little gal-lery."

Actually, only half the mezzanine is sectioned off for distaff trade, with colorful awnings to mark the entrance. Interior decor ranges from pastel-toned chairs to white walls.

Special section is available at prevailing prices.

1958-59 SO FAR A BIG 'SO WHAT?'

By GEORGE ROSEN

The new television season is about as crazy and mixed-up a rat race as the 10-year old medium has even known. Its most notable aspect is that nothing of consequence has happened. There's not even the slightest or remotest resemblance of a new pattern; just a perpetuation of everything that's gone before.

At this point the three television networks, perhaps in trepidation of what may lie ahead (for there is so much at stake for each of them) is doing some premature "hey, look at us" shouting, with ABC pointing with pride to its Tuesday, Thursday and Friday ratings; NBC literally flipping over the fact that for the Oct. 8-12 Trendex period it was running neck-and-neck with CBS (one-tenth of a point behind) in prime nighttime and CBS boasting virtually cross-the-board supremacy.

Actually the networks, the sponsors and the advertising agencies won't get a true evaluation of "who did what to whom or where did we go wrong" until two or three weeks hence, when the initial Nielsens are in for the October period. Right now everybody's on edge—and vociferously shouting its Trendexes to conceal its fears and apprehensions.

MCA Going Into Music Publishing

Music Corp. of America, which is already in tv production, is now planning a branch-out into the music publishing business. It's understood that the agency has been canvassing Tin Pan Alley for a buy-up of an old-line firm.

MCA recently sent out feelers on the availability of Famous Music but received a nix on its opening bids. Famous is the publishing arm of Paramount Pictures. It's understood that the percentery is now eyeing Bourne Music. Firm is now being run by Bonnie Bourne who took over after the death of her husband, Saul Bourne, last year.

Agency's interest in a publishing arm is an offshoot of its tele production activities via Revue Productions. The tele division now has about 19 properties going for it and MCA is looking for a link between the tele shows and the music used on the shows. MCA, for example, has put a special stress on the themes for such teleshows as "Restless Gun," "Wagon Train" and "M Squad" hoping for a song breakthrough via disks to help promote the program.

Programming for Negroes Constitute Segregation? FCC Examiner Sez 'No'

Washington, Oct. 14.

In a three-way fight for a New York City FM station, a tentative Federal Communications Commission decision, has rejected the argument that granting it for Negro programming constitutes "segregation."

In the unique case, FCC hearing Examiner H. Gifford Irion wrote an initial decision awarding the FM outlet to New Broadcasting Co., Inc., which would aim its programs at a Negro audience.

In doing so, Irion rejected competing applications by public relations expert Herbert Muschel, who wanted to use it almost exclusively for news, and Independent Broadcasting Co., which planned programs to "promote small business."

Both Muschel and Independent argued that New Broadcasting, owned by Harry S. Novik, was proposing programming amounting to a form of segregation. They said the FCC, as part of the Federal government, must be "color blind" in its approach to programming.

According to Irion, Muschel, formerly managing editor of TV Guide, said FCC "cannot award a preference in a comparative case to a broadcast operation which is to be based on the assumption that Negroes are a unique, homogenous and separate group solely because they are Negroes."

Irion said: "If the theory of Brahm and Muschel were accepted, we should be obliged to prohibit programs for women as being a discrimination on the basis of sex."

Irion added that no constitutional provision shows that the "needs, tastes and interests of all citizens must necessarily be uniform.

Urania's Pope Pius LP

Urania Records has picked up the national distribution rights to an LP featuring Pope Pius XII who died last week. Package, titled "Hallowed Be Thy Name," was acquired from the Darick Record Co. It was prepared under the supervision of the Office of Radio & Television of the Archdiocese of Chicago by the Rev. John S. Banahan.

Album contains 11 Catholic hymns by the Centennial Choir and the Pater Noster recited by the Pope. Set, retailing at $4.98, is being shipped today (Wed.).

De-Nazification, Reich Pic Style, Of U-Boat 'Hero'

German submariners have protested against a new German film, "U-47 — Lieutenant Commander Prien," which, they say, isn't doing justice to the former U-boat commander. The trouble stems from the producer's attempt to make a war film that wouldn't glorify the Nazis.

Story is told in the German weekly, Der Spiegel. It relates that scripter Joachim Bartsch freely invented people and scenes to get around the impression that Prien was a Nazi. Yet, the facts point in the opposite direction, and the German submariners don't see the point of the distortion.

"I don't really see what they want, those unreconstructed militarists," complained producer Gero Wecker of Orca Productions. "I can't make a picture about a real Nazi hero. And that's precisely what Prien was."

Washington, Oct. 14.

Club Waldorf, with the Four Aces and the Ray Eberle orch and reportedly with 200 slot-machines, opens Friday (17) in the Charles County, Md., countryside, about 20 miles from Washington. It is owned by Bill Gerson who operates the Latin Casino in Philadelphia.

Built new from the ground up, it has a suspension roof, a 2,500 square foot dance floor, tables to accommodate 800 and parking for 3,000 cars. There is a 130-foot circular main bar. The policy will be no cover and no minimum, with the hope of drawing customers from Washington, Baltimore and Richmond. Big name bands are the management's plan.

Nary a Dull Moment in Any of 'The 9 Lives of Mike Todd,' Art Cohn's Biog

By ABEL GREEN

Whatever may be the end-result of l'affaire Debbie and Eddie and Liz there's no gainsaying the readership interest in Art Cohn's "The Nine Lives of Michael Todd" (Random House; $4.95). While the final segment—the showman's "ninth life"—brings the pinnacle of his flair for the grand manner into sharper focus, especially because of his global trailblazing to match, more or less, the titular "Around The World In 80 Days", there is more than sufficient interest in his other eight time spans.

Todd was a colorful character from his cradle days on. The Elizabeth Taylor romance and marriage merely glossed the icing on an already built-in, hectic career. Whatever made Mike Todd run, he was never dull. Book is a definitive closeup on a chameleon personality which his biographer, equally ill-fated as Todd, seldom glosses over.

Man of Many Comebacks

"The Nine Lives of Michael Todd" is an apt title indeed. He was "dead" financially, artistically, romantically many times, and he always bounced back. In the last two years he pyramided his climactic theatrical venture and his third marriage to the beauteous film star into headline proportions around the world.

He was on the road to the giant jackpot payoff of his life when his life was snuffed out in a plane crash on the morning of the Saturday night when the Friars Club in New York was to honor him as

Eisenhower or Dulles May Grace First Soviet Pact Film to Unveil

Washington, Oct. 14.

Talk is already heard that President Eisenhower or Secretary of State John Foster Dulles—or both—will attend the American premiere here of the first Russian feature-length film to play under new pact.

But plans are still nebulous awaiting the stateside return of the successful negotiators, Turner Shelton, U. S. Information Agency official, and Eric Johnston, Motion Picture Assn., of America president. Uncle Sam's reps, who autographed the agreement with Russian officials which will bring seven Soviet films here and send 10 Yank motion pictures there, are due in New York around Oct. 20.

They are stopping in Warsaw enroute to Budapest and Prague. Pair are also visiting Vienna.

The new U. S.-Russian agreement, technically in the form of a long "memorandum" and signed Thursday (9) is covered in separate news story, this issue.

The blintzes belt on New York's lower 2d Ave. is becoming a stamping ground for rehearsing thesps. The five floors of the Central Plaza, above Ratners, popular dairy restaurant, have been taken over by tv and legit for rehearsals.

Going over their lines last week were Walter Pidgeon and Laraine Day for last Sunday's (12) NBC-TV special "Swiss Family Robinson"; Christopher Plummer and Julie Harris for NBC-TV's Monday (13) showing of "Johnny Belinda"; Jeanne Carson, Rise Stevens, Margaret O'Brien, Bill Hayes and Joel Grey for tomorrow's (Thurs.) CBS-TV version of Richard Adler's "Little Women"; and Jason Robards Jr. and Rosemary Harris for Broadway legit's upcoming "Disenchanted."

Needless to say, the lunchtime-break orders are for lox-and-bagel instead of ham-and-cheese.

She designated the fund as the Lillian Barkley Scholarship. Mrs. Barkley was her educational advisor during the early days at Columbia Studios in Hollywood.

Tout 'Rockenzorf' Hotel in N.Y. As 'Bigger'n Waldorf'

It is fairly set that Prudential Life will underwrite the new Rockefeller-Zeckendorf hotel operation at 51st St. and 6th Ave. and that is will be designed, from the plans up, to be "bigger than the Waldorf." The United Nations Hotel tag is out—this is being reserved for an east side location, contiguous to the UN, which will be part office buildings and part hotel, for UN executives and personnel.

Understood that William Zeckendorf Jr., who heads the recently developing offshoot of his father's Webb & Knapp realty Co., plans approaching Claude C. Philippe, v.p. of the Waldorf, to assume charge of the new hostelry, and sit in on the basic plans since physical design for service is an essential built-in plus for proper room and banquet catering, etc. (It is said that even the Waldorf-Astoria, in light of ultramodern demands for expeditious service, stage lighting, acoustics, facilities for radio and tv camera pickups at highlight functions, etc., would have been designed differently, were it planned post-midcentury.)

Joseph P. Binns, v.p. and managing director of the Waldorf, reportedly has also been approached by young Zeckendorf as the financial administrator, in line with making the new Rockefeller Center project "bigger than the Waldorf," hence his eyeing of the two top key personalities of the Park Ave. Hilton flagship—the financial man and the banquet manager with promotional qualifications, such as Philippe has.

Col. Serge Obolensky, vicechairman of Zeckendorf Hotels, who has brought many social events to the revitalized Hotel Astor, since the ZH management took it over, is also said to favor the Philippe

Old Masters Wired for Sound

Washington, Oct. 14.

The National Gallery of Art has a new hi-fi gadget here to explain the masterpieces of such painters as Raphael, Botticelli, Rembrandt, Goya and others.

The system, developed here and the only one of its kind, is being looked over by other art galleries and will soon be duplicated in Pittsburgh's Carnegie Museum and Chicago's Art Institute. The installation in Pittsburgh is almost complete, and work is about to start in Chicago.

The system involves a tiny transistor radio-like gadget which hangs from a string around the neck and a single ear piece which looks like a hearing aid. All this, weighing about four ounces, picks up a hi-fi broadcast in the specially wired galleries which describes each painting there.

Rental is 25 cents, and in the last six months, 31,000 visitors to the gallery have used them. Frank McIntosh of Washington, developer for the McIntosch Amplifier for hi-fi addicts, worked out the system at the request of the gallery's director. The trade name is Telecron Lectours.

Gallery officials say the cost of installation and servicing would make prospects for profit slim at the 25-cent rental, but they do not have profit in mind.

Joan Crawford To Helm Series

Hollywood, Oct. 14.

Negotiations are under way for Joan Crawford to star in and hostess her own vidpix series, which would be filmed for the 1959 season.

Goodson-Todman are dickering with Miss Crawford on the series which would be a dramatic half-hour anthology. Miss Crawford would hostess the entire series and star in 20 of the 39 segments, using guestars in the other episodes. Deal being discussed calls for her to be co-producer of the series.

Miss Crawford said she wants at least 40 scripts to pick from before going into production. "I'm not going to end up with a nervous breakdown, working hard and doing lousy scripts," she remarked.

Her plan is to film the vidpix in Hollywood, but do the hostessing stint and commercials in N. Y., where she now makes her home with her husband, Al Steele.

Miss Crawford is considering bids to guest on the Perry Como and Dinah Shore shows. She said "the only way I would do them is on film, and they have offered to do them this way. Live tv is not my medium. I just stand and look at the audience and freeze."

Hostest-With-Leastest Weight (and Food) Gets The Washington Needle

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, Oct. 14.

Fame, as it must to all Washington hostesses, came to Gwen Cafritz Monday (13).

The svelte, brunette Capital party-giver got equal time, although not equal treatment to rival hostess Perle Mesta, as fall gal for the Washington tent's Saints and Sinners show, headed by Harold Robinson.

Even producer-writer Les Kramer, who has turned out 180 S & S scripts, admitted that Gwen got harsher treatment, "because it is easier to be rough with Gwen."

Biz Perks Up; 'Cat' Back in First, 'Geisha' Second, 'Defiant' 3d, 'Pacific' 4th, 'Yankees' 5th

Trade at first-runs shapes up better in numerous key cities covered by VARIETY this stanza. Upbeat apparently stems from lack of such distractions as the World Series and the fact that many keys benefited by the Columbus Day holiday. Cooler weather also started to help.

"Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G), which dipped to second a week ago, is back in No. 1 spot this week. Newcomer "Barbarian and Geisha" (20th), which hinted promise last round, is moving into second place while "Defiant Ones" (UA) pushed to third position. Latter was fourth last stanza.

"South Pacific" (20th), third a week ago, is winding up fourth. "Damn Yankees" (WB), champ last session, is capturing fifth place. "Gigi" (M-G) is taking sixth money.

"South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama), first time it has had enough dates to classify for ratings, is finishing seventh on showings in four keys. "Big Country" (UA), sixth last round, is landing in eighth spot. "Man of West" (UA), a newcomer, is finishing ninth.

"Windjammer" (NT) is copping 10th money while "White Wilderness" (BV) will be 11th. "Me and Colonel" (Col) rounds out the Top 12. Runner-up films are "Search For Paradise" (Cinerama), "Streetcar Named Desire" (20th) (reissue) and "Reluctant Debutante" (M-G) in that order.

"Time of Desire" (Janus), a newcomer, is hep in Chi, good in Boston and nice in Cleveland. "Tale of Two Cities" (Rank), fine in Toronto and okay in Frisco, looks mild in Boston and light in Providence. "Old Man and Sea" (WB) shapes fine on preem week at N. Y. Criterion. "Decks Ran Red" (M-G) looms mild to drab on three initial playdates.

"Badlanders" (M-G), nice in Chi, is rated fair in both Detroit and Omaha. "The Hunters" (UA) looms brisk in Chi. "Queen of Outer Space" (AA) is okay in Detroit.

"Dunkirk" (M-G), big in Toronto, is quiet in Philly. "Night Heaven Fell" (Kings), due at N. Y. Odeon soon, looks hotsy in Philly.

"Around World in 80 Days" (UA), first time out of VARIETY ratings in more than a year, shapes socko in Frisco and excellent in L. A.

"Matchmaker" (Par), fair in L. A., looms good in N. Y. "Raw Wind in Eden" (U) is fairish in L. A.

"Attack of Puppet People" (Par) looks fair in Frisco. "Tank Battalion" (AI) shapes nice in Buffalo.

"Harry Black and Tiger" (20th), fairish in Cincy, is light in Omaha. "The Goddess" (Col) looms slim in Minneapolis.

CONTRASTING 1958 TO '52 FOR MORAL

With 1958 coming into the homestretch, it's now a certainty that this will go down as the "year of the blockbusters."

Paul Raibourn, Paramount v.p. and top economist, noted in New York the highly unusual concentration of top money product. To cite a few, Warners' "Sayonara" will do around $9,000,000 in domestic rentals and another $5,000,000 in foreign. 20th-Fox's "Peyton Place" is figured at $7,000,000 in the domestic (United States and Canada) market.

Add to the list of blue-chip entries WB's "No Time for Sergeants," United Artists' "The Vikings" and Metro's "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof."

Columbia's "Bridge on the River Kwai" looks to go over $10,000,000 in domestic distribution gross.

UA hit the jackpot over the past year with six productions in the over-$3,000,000 category, namely "Witness for the Prosecution," "God's Little Acre," "Kings Go Forth," "Big Country," "Defiant Ones" and "Vikings." They'll all go over the $3,000,000 level in varying amounts and, observed UA president Arthur B. Krim, the roster excludes "Around the World in 80 Days." UA has several others close to the $3,000,00 mark, including "Legend of the Lost" and the Brigitte Bardot starrer, "La Parisienne."

Such an abundance of big-revenue pictures was unheard of, say, six years ago, commented Raibourn. Such films usually had come at the rate of about one per year.
